Where the Act for building a suspension-bridge directed that the notices of calls on persons who had agreed to advance money on the security of the tolls, should be signed by the clerk or clerks appointed or to be appointed, and, two clerks having been appointed, issue was taken in an action for the amount of calls, on the fact, whether the notice of the calls had been signed by both the clerks: Held, that the jury was not warranted by proof that one of the clerk had signed, in presuming that he signed for both, with the authority of his colleague.

This was an action for the recovery of four sums of 68*l.* due as instalments of a loan, which the defendant had agreed to advance to the trustees of the Clifton Suspension Bridge, on the security of the tolls.

A verdict passed for the plaintiff on certain counts, and for the defendant on others. Subsequently cross rules for correcting the proceedings were obtained, and came on for argument on the 12th of June. The result makes it unnecessary to notice any point but one. The defendant had applied for a new trial, on the ground, that one of the issues being whether the notices of the calls made by the trustees on those who had agreed to advance money to them, which had been served on the defendants, had been duly signed in compliance with the provisions of the Act by which the undertaking was regulated; the Act requiring that the notices be signed by the clerk or clerks appointed or to be appointed; proof being, that the notices had been signed by one only of the two clerks, in the name of and for both, but without the express authority of his colleague.

Butt and Unthank shewed cause.

Manning, S. contrà. Cur. adv. vult.

The judgment of the Court was now pronounced by

DENMAN, C.J.—We think the defendants entitled to a new trial on the point of the signature to the notices, and do not, therefore, touch the remainder of the matters that have been discussed. The replication to the 13th plea takes issue expressly on the fact of the signatures of both the clerks having been put to the notice, and the proof is that one has signed. The case of Miles v. Bough was relied on; but in that case there had been an express promise to pay after the notice. It seems probable that the jury understood that they might presume that the signature of one was sufficient if it purported to be for both. The rule therefore must be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Saturday, June 29.

WEBB v. AUSTIN.

Termor, on indenture with covenants, mortgaged the residue of the term, and, after condition broken, executed an under-lease of the premises, the under-lessee entering into the same covenants with those in the original lease. This demise by the mortgagor, though he had no legal estate, operates in favour of himself or his assignee against the under-lessee, or his assignee, by way of estoppel, and gives himself, or his assignee, a remedy over against the under-lessee, or his assignee, for breach, by either of the covenants. Therefore, with concurrence of the mortgagee, the mortgagor can make out a good title to convey to a purchaser the interest arising under the original lease.

TINDAL, C. J. in delivering judgment, said,—This was an action to recover a deposit paid by the plaintiff as purchaser upon a sale by auction, on the ground that the vendor had not made out a sufficient title. By the particulars of sale, the property was described as comprising "a long-established furrier's shop, dwelling-house, and various rooms over," for many years occupied by the present respectable tenant, and under a twenty-one years' lease, nine years of which would be unexpired at Lady-day 1843, at the rent, per annum, of 48*l.* the tenant paying the sewers and all other rates, and held by a lease for a term of sixty-four years, at the ground-rent, per annum, of eight guineas. It appears, by the abstract of title, that James Britton, by indenture dated the 30th Sept. 1817, demised the premises in question to William Austin, to hold from Michaelmas 1817 for eighty-nine years, wanting twenty-one days, with various covenants to be performed by Wm. Austin, his heirs and assigns; that William Austin, on the 29th of March, 1820, assigned the premises by way of mortgage for securing the sum of 487*l.* and interest to Christopher Scott and Geor Austin for all the residue of the said term of eighty-nine years, wanting twenty-one days; that by indenture of the 2nd of April, 1831, the said William Austin demised to George Gooding the premises in question for twenty-one years, wanting eight days, at the yearly rent of 48*l.* with covenants on the part of Gooding similar to those contained in the indenture of the 30th of September, 1817. As the case states the mortgagee would have been willing to execute any covenant that would be requisite for such purpose, the first, and, indeed, the only question necessary to be considered is, whether the mortgagor, with the concurrence of the mortgagee, could make a good title to the purchaser? On the part of the purchaser it was objected that William Austin, by the deed of the 2nd of April, 1831, had parted with all his legal interest in the mortgage; and that the purchaser from him would have remedy against either the lessee, or his assignee, for any breach of the covenants of the deed of 2nd of April, 1831; and in support of this position the case of Whitton v. Peacock (2 Bing. N.C. 411) was relied upon as being in point; on the other side the case of Gouldsworthy v. Knights (11 M. & W. 337) was cited, in which it appears to have been held at Nisi Prius (a ruling which afterwards, on consideration, was allowed by the Court), that where a tenant had paid rent to certain persons as his landlords, and they afterwards assigned their interest over to other persons, the assignees had a good title by estoppel against the tenant, and might distrain for the rent. That case was ultimately decided on a different point; but an opinion was expressed by the Court on that occasion not easily distinguishable from the case of Whitton v. Peacock, or the former case of Carvick v. Blagrave (1 Brod. & Bing. 531). If the doctrine laid down in Gouldsworthy v. Knights is a correct one, that the tenant in such a case is estopped from denying that the assignee has a right to distrein, the ground of this decision must be, that the tenant is not merely estopped from disputing the landlord's title, but also estopped from denying that there is a reversion which is capable of being assigned. In the case of Gouldsworthy v. Knights, the point arose on a parol lease; the present case is much stronger in favour of the title of the vendor, because here the question arises on a lease, and the mortgagees are willing to execute any covenants that may be required; and what we have to consider is, whether, upon the conveyance by the mortgagees to the mortgagor of all their interests, the mortgagor would not have a good title to convey; and on full consideration, it appears to us that he will. The doctrine on this subject, as it has been generally understood by the Profession, may be collected from Mr. Preston's Treatise on Abstracts, vol. ii. p. 210, and the authorities there cited. "The general understanding appears to me to be that an indenture of lease or a fine sui concessit, for years, will be estopped only during the term. It first operates by way of estoppel, and finally when the grantor obtains an ownership, it attaches on the seisin, and creates an interest, or produces the relation of landlord and tenant; and there is a term commencing by estoppel, but for all purposes, it becomes an estate or interest. It binds the estate of the lessor, and, therefore, continues in force against the lessor and his heirs. It also binds the assignees of the lessor and of the lessee." In support of these views, reference is made to Bacon's Abridgement, title "Leases," letter O, which article has been always considered to be a work of great authority. It is there said, that "if one makes a lease for years by indenture, of lands, wherein he hath nothing at the time of such lease made, and, after, purchases those very lands, this shall make good and unavoidable his lease, as well as if he had been in the actual possession and seisin thereof at the time of such lease made;" and in the same article, that is "Leases," letter O, it is afterwards said: "If A mortgages land to B, on condition to re-enter on payment of 10*l.* and, after, A, before the day of payment is come, being in possession, makes a lease for years, by indenture, to C, and then, after, performs the condition, this shall make the lease to C good against himself by estoppel; and it was further adjudged, that even the feoffee of A should be bound by this lease, which took its effect only at first by estoppel, because he, coming in under one who was estopped, should be himself estopped likewise, which was still a stronger case than the first; and this was adjudged in Ireland, and afterwards affirmed on a writ of error here, and seems a very reasonable judgment; for if a subsequent purchase shall make good a lease of lands by indenture, though the lessor had nothing in those lands at the time of the lease, and, therefore, his lease at first could only take effect by estoppel; much more in this case, where the lessor had a possibility of coming into the lands again, shall his performance of the condition after make the intermediate lease; and so it should seem too, if the condition were broken at the time of the lease, so as he had nothing but an equity of redemption; yet, if he should after be admitted to redeem in Chancery, this would make good the intermediate lease, which took effect at first only by estoppel;" and for this is cited the case of Omelaughland v. Hood (1 Rolls Ab. 874, 876). It may be objected, that although the lease by indenture estops the parties to it during the continuance of the lease, the effect of the estoppel continues no longer than during the lease; and this is undoubtedly true, when there has been a lease with the estoppel; but we are of opinion that this is no longer the case where the lessor afterwards assigns the land himself. In Coke Lyt. (47 b.) there is a passage in the text: "If A have nothing in the land and made a lease for years by deed indented, and, after, purchase the land, the lessor is as well concluded as the lessee, to say that the lessor had nothing in the land;" and there is a note in Lord Hale's manuscript to the same effect. We read this in the case of Iseham v. Morrice (C. P. 4 Car.). This case of Iseham v. Morrice, here referred to, is to be found in Cro. Ch. 109, and it is there laid down: "Where one makes a lease for years of land, by indenture, and hath nothing in the land, and afterwards purchaseth the land, and aliens it, although it be a good lease for years by estoppel against him and his alienee, by way of pleading, and shall bind them, yet it shall not bind the jury: but they may find the truth; and if they find the truth, the Court shall adjudge it to be a void lease." This case, however, and the above-cited case of Omelaughland v. Hood, is on the principle decided in the 4 Ch. 1st, and later in the 15 Ch. 1st, in a case in which Lord Hale and the other judges appeared to agree with the opinion expressed in the note in Coke Lyt. above cited. It appears to us, therefore, on considering these authorities, that the mortgagor and the mortgagee, by concurring together in the manner before mentioned, can make a good title to the purchaser, and consequently we direct a nonsuit to be entered.

HOLCROFT v. MANBY.

Since a rule of Court for the payment of a sum of money has now the effect of a judgment, the same will not be granted unless the Court is perfectly satisfied that the claim so sought to be enforced is free from all doubt.

Where, therefore, an attorney claimed a lien for his costs, on a sum of money awarded by an arbitrator to be paid to the client of the attorney by a third person, and a client had become bankrupt, and the official assignee had withheld his consent to the payment to the attorney, the Court refused to make an order for the payment to the attorney of the sum awarded, although such sum was less than the costs claimed, but left him to bring his action.

Semble, the Court will not summarily make an order for the payment to an attorney of the amount of lien.

The facts of the case are detailed in the judgment of the Court delivered by

TINDAL, C. J.—In this case an action had been brought by Holcroft against Manby, and a reference of the cause had been made to a barrister, to which the Institution of Civil Engineers had become parties. An award was made on the 10th of June, 1843, in the action, in favour of the defendant, and the sum of 52*l.* 10s. awarded to be paid by the Institution of Civil Engineers to the plaintiff, together with the costs of the reference and the award, amounting to the sum of 51*l* 17s. On the 27th of June, 1843, Holcroft filed a petition in the Court of Bankruptcy, and Mr. Groom was appointed the official assignee. It appears also from the affidavits, that Holcroft's attorney, Robson, claims to have had a lien on the sum awarded for his bill, amounting, as he makes it out, to 200*l.* Under these circumstances, Robson has obtained a rule, by which the Institution of Civil Engineers is called upon to shew cause why they should not pay him the sum awarded and the costs of the reference and the award, and of the application; and notice of the rule was directed to be given to Groom, the official assignee of the plaintiff. The Institution of Civil Engineers have always expressed themselves willing to pay the money on receiving a receipt or other sufficient authority from the assignees of Holcroft. Application has been made to Groom to give such an authority; but to this application he appears to have replied with studied caution, and certainly without saying any thing that can be considered as giving a direct sanction to the payment being made to Robson. No case was cited in the argument before us to shew that an attorney can enforce in this way the payment of a lien; but, independently of this consideration, it is to be borne in mind that a rule of Court has now the effect of a judgment; and before such an order could be made, the Court must be perfectly satisfied that the claim is free from all doubt. Robson is not without his remedy in this case; if the claim be well founded, and such as the law entitles him to enforce, he may bring an action in his client's name on the award, in which the decision of the Court may be subjected to revision in the regular course before a superior Court; but if the present rule should be made absolute, the judgment is final. We feel justly bound, therefore, to abstain from deciding in a summary way a question in which any little doubt is involved; for these reasons we think the present rule must be Discharged.

KAYE v. DUTTON.

Where an executed consideration is one that raises an implied promise, such consideration will not support an express promise differing from that which by law would be implied.

Semble, an executed consideration from which no promise could be implied by law, may, if moved by a previous request, support an express promise.

The declaration set out an agreement by which it was recited that a certain estate had been mortgaged by one W. deceased, and that the plaintiff had joined in a bond as a collateral security for the mortgage-money, and had afterwards been compelled to pay off a portion of it; that the defendant, who had taken on himself the management of W.'s affairs, and re-paid to the plaintiff a part of the money he had paid, had agreed to pay the residue out of the proceeds of the mortgage property when sold, and in the mean-time to appropriate the rents of the premises to the payment of such residue, as the plaintiff had a lien for the same on the said premises; and that the defendant had requested the plaintiff to release and convey his interest to one A. and L.; and that the plaintiff had done so, reserving to himself a lien on the property aforesaid. The agreement then stated that, in consideration of the plaintiff having paid the money, and having released and conveyed all his estate and interest to A. and L. reserving to himself the said lien, he, the defendant, undertook and agreed to repay the plaintiff the said residue out of the proceeds of the sale, and in the meantime to appropriate the rents in liquidation of the same. The declaration then alleged that the agreement being so made as aforesaid, the defendant, in consideration of the premises, promised the plaintiff to perform the said agreement, &c. Held, that the declaration was bad on general demurrer, because it did not appear that the plaintiff parted with any interest, and that, therefore, there was no consideration for the defendant's promise.

The defendant pleaded to the above declaration, that the plaintiff had not any interest in the hereditaments and premises at the time of his making the alleged release and conveyance.

A replication traversing this, instead of stating what interest the plaintiff had, is sufficient.

Assumpsit.—The declaration stated that, by a certain agreement made by the defendant theretofore—to wit, on, &c.—after reciting a mortgage in fee from Peter Mainwaring Whitnall in his lifetime, of certain hereditaments and premises, to Robert Rockliff and Hugh Bullin, to secure the repayment of 3,500*l.*; after also reciting that the said Rockliff and Bullin required the said Whitnall to obtain plaintiff to join him in a bond as a collateral security, to further secure the 3,500*l.* and interest; and also reciting that defendant had, since the death of said Whitnall, taken upon himself the management of the estate of the said Whitnall, and had paid to said Rockliff and Bullin 3,370*l.*; and also reciting that said Bullin and Rockliff had called upon plaintiff for payment of said mortgage, as he was surety for said Whitnall in said bond, and that plaintiff thereupon paid said Bullin and Rockliff 130*l.* on, &c.; and also reciting that defendant had repaid plaintiff 48*l.* leaving due to him 82*l.*; and that such last-mentioned amount defendant had agreed to repay to plaintiff out of the moneys which might arise from the sale of the said hereditaments and premises, when the same should be sold, and in the meantime to appropriate the rents of the said hereditaments and premises towards payment of the said sum, as the plaintiff had a lien on the said hereditaments and premises for the said 82*l.*; and also reciting that defendant had requested the plaintiff to release and convey all his estate and interest in said hereditaments and premises to Mr. Alison and Mr. Lenox, and that that he had already done (reserving to himself a lien on said property as aforesaid). It was by the said agreement witnessed, that in consideration of the plaintiff having paid to Bullin and Rockliff the said sum of 130l. in part discharge of the said mortgage, and in consideration of the plaintiff having released and conveyed all his estate and interest in the said hereditaments to Mr. Alison and Mr. Lenox, reserving to himself the said lien, and in order to secure to the plaintiff the repayment of the said 82*l.* he, the defendant, did thereby for himself undertake and agree with plaintiff, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to repay to him or them the said 82*l.* with interest thereon, out of the proceeds to arise from the sale of the said hereditaments and premises when the same should be sold, and in the meantime, and until such sale was effected, to appropriate the rents of said hereditaments and premises in liquidation of said sum so due to plaintiff as aforesaid; and said agreement being so made as aforesaid, the defendant, in consideration of the premises, afterwards, to wit, on, &c. promised plaintiff to observe and perform said agreement in all things therein contained, and on the defendant's part to be observed and performed.

Breach—The non-appropriation or payment by the defendant of the rents in liquidation of the said 82*l.*

The defendant pleaded, amongst other pleas, 3rdly, that the plaintiff had not any estate or interest whatsoever in the said hereditaments and premises, or any of them, at the time of his making the alleged release and conveyance of his said alleged estate and interest, or at any time whatsoever.

Verification.—To this plea the plaintiff replied that he (the plaintiff) had an interest in the said hereditaments and premises at the time of his making the said release and conveyance; concluding to the country. The defendant demurred to this replication, and the plaintiff demurred to the defendant's fourth and fifth pleas, as amounting to the general issue; but these pleas are here omitted, as the defendant's counsel did not attempt to support them.

Dowling, Serjt. for the defendant (in Easter Term last).—The declaration is bad for want of a good consideration for the defendant's promise. Although the plaintiff, according to Cope v. Middleton (1 Tur. & Russ. 224), would be entitled to stand in the situation of the mortgagee, yet that would only be in respect of his lien; the only interest he had in the property was a lien, and therefore to say he released all his interest therein, "reserving to himself the lien," is to say he released nothing whatsoever. [CRESSWELL, J.—Is it open to you to say, that the plaintiff had no assignable interest after your being party to an agreement in which it is recited that the plaintiff has released his interest? If it appeared in the agreement itself, that the plaintiff had no interest to assign, possibly you would not then be estopped; but does it so appear?] It is submitted it does. Next, the consideration being executed before the promise, it is only a moral one, and will not sustain a promise unless such promise is implied. (Lampleigh v. Brathwait, Hobart, 105.) The words "defendant had requested" will not necessarily enable the promise to be supported. (Docket v. Vogel, Croke, Eliz. 885; Barker v. Halifax, Croke Eliz. 741.) [CRESSWELL, J.—If the consideration is executed, you say that the promise implied must be as large as the express one; now, in Lampleigh v. Brathwait, was there an implied promise to pay?] Yes. [How much?] A fair and reasonable sum. [The promise there alleged was to pay a specific sum, viz. 100*l.*] Veitch v. Russell (3 Gale & Dav. 198); Brown v. Crump (1 Marsh, 567); Granger v. Collins (6 Mee. & W. 458); Hopkins v. Logan (5 Mee. & W. 241); Jackson v. Cobbin (8 Mee. & W. 790); Roscorla v. Thomas (3 Q. B. 234), were cited. Next, as to the replication to the defendant's third plea, it is submitted that the replication is bad for not stating what interest the plaintiff had in the property. The replication, instead of traversing the plea, should have shewn the interest of the plaintiff, and concluded with a verification.

The COURT, however, thought the replication sufficient; there being a complete negative of what was affirmed in the plea.

Channell, Serjt. contrà.—A sufficient legal consideration is alleged. The plaintiff being admitted by the agreement to have released his interest to Alison and Lenox, it is not competent for the defendant to say he had no interest. The words "reserving to himself the said lien" may either be rejected, or the meaning must be, that, only as between the plaintiff and defendant, the lien was to be considered as existing, but that, in fact, as between the plaintiff and Alison, it had been discharged. If, then, the lien was destroyed, that would be a good consideration for the promise. Osborne v. Rogers (1 Wm. Saund. 264, note 1) shews that a past consideration is good when coupled with a previous request, as here alleged. Brown v. Crump, and the other cases which have been cited on the other side, shew only that where the law has implied a limited liability, and the promise alleged is greater than what is implied, it is bad; but in those cases the law had ascertained what was the promise raised; here the law would not imply any promise. Cur. adv. vult.

The judgment of the Court was now delivered by

TINDAL, C. J. (after referring to the disposal of the defendant's fourth and fifth pleas, on the admission of Dowling, Serjt. that he could not support them).—Two objections were made to the declaration: first, that it did not shew any consideration for the promise by the defendant; secondly, that the promise was made in respect of an executed consideration, but that it is not such a promise as would have been implied by law from that consideration, and that, in point of law, an executed consideration will support no promise, although expressed, other than that which the law itself would have implied. The cases cited by the defendant, namely, Brown v. Crump, Granger v. Collins, Hopkins v. Logan, Jackson v. Cobbin, Roscorla v. Thomas, certainly support that proposition to this extent; where the consideration is one from which a promise is by law implied, there no express promise made in respect to that consideration after it had been executed, differing from that which by law would be implied, could be enforced; but those cases may have proceeded on the principle that the consideration was afterwards exhausted by the promise implied by law from the very execution; and that in consequence, every promise made afterwards must be considered nudum pactum, and there remains no consideration to support it. But the case may be different, perhaps, where there is a consideration from which no promise would be implied by law; that is, where the party suing has sustained a detriment to himself, or conferred a benefit on the defendant at his request, under circumstances that would not raise any implied promise. In such cases, it appears to have been held in some instances that an act done at the request of the parties charged is a sufficient consideration to render binding the promise afterwards made by him in respect of the acts so done. —— v. —— (Dyer, 272); Hunt v. Bate (1 Roll. Abr. 11 (Q) pl. 2, 3), and several cases mentioned in the margin of Dyer, seem to go to that extent, but it is not necessary that we should pronounce any opinion on that point, for, assuming it to be sufficiently alleged that the plaintiff had conveyed his interest at the request of the defendant, yet it does not appear that he had any interest which passed by such release and conveyance. The declaration is founded on an agreement which recites that a certain estate had been mortgaged by one Winton, deceased, and that the plaintiff had joined in a bond as a collateral security for the mortgage-money, and had afterwards been compelled to pay off a portion of it; that the defendant had taken on himself the management of Winton's affairs, and repaid to the plaintiff a part of the money he had paid, and agreed to pay the residue out of the proceeds of the mortgage property when sold, and, in the meantime, to appropriate the rents of the premises to the payment of the claim for which plaintiff had a lien on the said premises. Thus far, there is nothing to shew that the plaintiff had any other interest than this lien. The agreement then recites that the defendant had requested the plaintiff to release and convey his interest to A. and L. the purchaser, and that he had done so, reserving to himself a lien on the property as aforesaid; that is, reserving to himself the only interest he is shewn to have had. The agreement then proceeds to state that, in consideration of the plaintiff having paid the money, and having released and conveyed all his estate and interest to A. and L., reserving to himself the said lien, he, the defendant, undertook, and promised, and agreed, &c. Now the payment of the money by the plaintiff would be no consideration for the defendant's promise, and the release and conveyance was again no consideration; for it does not appear that the plaintiff parted with any thing by it. For the plaintiff it was contended that he must be taken to have parted with his lien on the property, reserving only the right to call on the defendant to pay out of the proceeds of the estate when sold, and in the meantime to appropriate the rents to the same object. But we cannot put that construction on the agreement, which expressly speaks of the lien as the same lien which the plaintiff had before. Such being, in our judgment, the effect of the agreement set out in the declaration, the case resembles that of Edwards v. Baugh (11 M. & W. 641). There the declaration alleged that certain disputes and controversies were pending between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff thereupon, in consideration that the plaintiff would promise the defendant not to sue him for the recovery of the sum in dispute, but would accept a smaller sum in full satisfaction; that the defendant did promise to pay such smaller sum, and on general demurrer the declaration was held to be bad, because it did not allege that any debt was due from the defendant to the plaintiff, or that an action had been commenced for the recovery of any sum claimed. So in the present case, as the declaration does not shew that the plaintiff had any interest in the premises, except that which he reserved; and it does not appear that his release and conveyance, although executed at the time stated, formed any legal consideration for the promise alleged to have been made to the plaintiff, our judgment must be, therefore, for the defendant.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Thursday, July 4.

Ex parte CARTER, re EVERSHED.

Costs—Assignees—Mortgagee's petition for leave to bid.

Where upon a petition by a mortgagee for leave to bid at the sale of the mortgaged property, the assignees appeared, and asked for an order to fix a reserved bidding, they were directed to bear their own costs.

This was a petition by a mortgagee for leave to bid at the sale of the property mortgaged.

Giffard, for the petitioner.

Shapter, for the assignees, consented, and also asked that a reserved bidding should be fixed, with the approbation of the Commissioner.

Giffard then applied that the assignees should pay their own costs of appearing upon the petition, as they had taken the opportunity to obtain another order. The mortgagee had never objected to the fixing a reserved bidding.

Shapter, contrà.

The Chief Judge directed that the costs of the appearance of the assignees should be paid out of the estate.

Monday, July 8.

Ex parte MAGNUS, re GUNDRY.

Advertisement—Compromise of suits.

The advertisement giving notice to the creditors, pursuant to the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 88, of a meeting to be held for the purpose of assenting to a compromise of a suit by the assignees, must state the names of the persons who are parties to the suit.

This was a petition by a creditor praying that the assignee might be restrained from compromising certain Chancery suits which had been commenced by the assignees, for the recovery of certain shares in tin and copper mines which it was contended formed part of the bankrupt's estate. The proving assignee, it appeared, was about to act upon a resolution passed by the creditors at a meeting convened for that purpose. The advertisement, however, which was inserted in the Gazette, announcing this meeting, did not state the names of the defendants in the Chancery suits, but stated that the meeting was called for the creditors "to assent to or dissent from the said assignee compromising, compounding, submitting to arbitration, or otherwise settling, on such terms and conditions as the said assignee may think proper, or as may be agreed to at the said meeting, sundry suits now pending in the High Court of Chancery, wherein the said assignee is plaintiff, and certain persons who will be named at the said meeting are defendants, for he recovery of sundry parts or shares of and in certain tin and copper mines, called or commonly known by the name or names of Wheal Vor Consolidated Mines, situate in the several parishes of Breage and Sithney, in the county of Cornwall, which belonged to the said bankrupts respectively, before and at the time they respectively became bankrupt," &c.

This advertisement, it was objected, was irregular, as it did not sufficiently describe the suits.

Bacon and Winstanley, for the petitioner.

Shapter, for the official assignee, cited Douglas v. Brown (Mont. 93); Merrick v. Morris (3 T. R. 23); and Ex parte Whitchurch (1 Atk. 91).

Goodere, for the representatives of the bankrupts, both being dead.

Swanston and Follett, for the respondents.

The Chief Judge.—The form of this advertisement is not a matter for either censure or surprise. I am of opinion that the advertisement is not sufficient, and does not give the information which the statute meant to require and has required. The advertisement did not name the debts, the suits, the parties to the suits, or the subject-matter of the suits. I have referred to some printed forms of advertisements. [His Honour then read the forms contained in Lord Henley's Bankrupt Law, Montague and Ayrton's Bankrupt Law, and Archbold's Bankruptcy, by Flather.] I am not aware of any other book containing such forms. In each of these forms that I have read the name of the defendant appears. Looking at this particular case, I am of opinion that the advertisement is insufficient.

Tuesday, July 9.

Ex parte Buckler, re John Clarke, Richard Mitchell, Joseph Phillips, and Thomas Smith.

Bank notes—Joint and separate estate—Proof.

Where a proof had been made against the joint estate of a banking firm, which had become bankrupt, in respect of promissory notes issued by the bank and signed on behalf of the firm by one of the partners, the Court, upon the petition of the creditor, allowed the proof to be withdrawn without prejudice to the tender of or proof against the separate estate of the partner who signed the notes.

The bankrupts in this case were bankers at Leicester, and the petitioner was a customer of theirs, having an account at their bank. At the time of the bankruptcy the petitioner held several promissory notes for the sums of 5*l.* and 10*l.* These notes were in the following forms:—"I promise to pay to bearer the sum of 5*l.* here or at Messrs. Williams, Deacon, Labouchere, and Co., London, value received, for John Clarke, Richard Mitchell, Joseph Phillips, and Thomas Smith.—Thomas Smith." The notes for 10*l.* were in similar terms, and signed by Richard Mitchell. The petitioner had proved an account of these notes against the joint estate of the bankrupts, and now sought to withdraw the proof and to prove for the 5*l.* notes against the separate estate of Thomas Smith, and for the 10*l.* notes against the separate estate of Richard Mitchell.

Russell and Daniell, for the petitioner, cited Hall v. Smith (1 Barn. & Cres. 407).

Swanston and Chapman, for the assignees, opposed the application, and cited Lord Galway v. Matthews (1 Campb. 403; 10 East, 264).

The Chief Judge.—You may withdraw your joint proof without prejudice to your tendering any proof against the separate estates, but I decline to give any opinion upon it. If none of the cases cited had existed at all, I should have decided according to Lord Galway v. Matthews.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Guildhall, Saturday, July 6.

(Before Sir F. Pollock, C.B. and a Special Jury.)

Acraman v. Cooper.

Scrip receipts for shares in a joint-stock company are transferable by being passed from hand to hand.

It is the practice and custom of bill-brokers in London, where both bills and collateral securities are given, to raise money not exceeding the money they had themselves advanced upon either the bills or the collateral securities.

But the existence of such a custom was unknown to the merchants.

This was an action of trover brought by Mr. Acraman, who was a merchant at Bristol, and likewise in London, to recover from the defendants, who are directors of the London Joint-Stock Bank, the value of certain scrip receipts for shares in the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, which shares came into the possession of the defendants under the following circumstances:—It appears that the plaintiff having become possessed of the shares which formed the subject-matter of this action, was desirous of raising some money, and in the year 1841 one of the partners came to town and applied to a discount house in London for an advance upon bills fortified by a deposit of these shares as a collateral security. The house first applied to declined the operation; upon which the plaintiff applied to Messrs. Colls, Thomson, and Co. who agreed to discount the bills of the firm to an extent of 20,000*l.* upon having these shares deposited with them as a collateral security for the due payment of such bills at their maturity. At this time there were two firms under which the plaintiff was trading, and the agreement was, that one firm should draw upon the other; or rather, that an individual, one Holroyd, who belonged to one firm, should draw upon the other bills to the extent of 20,000*l.* and these scrip receipts should be deposited as collateral security. Accordingly, on the 3rd of June a letter was written by Colls and Co. acknowledging that they had received such scrip receipts for that purpose, and then Acramans lodged bills to the extent agreed on, which Colls and Co. discounted for them. In July following the gentleman who managed the plaintiff's business in London, having heard that Colls and Co. were in difficulties, called upon them about these scrip receipts, and then found out that not only that house had put Acraman's bills in circulation, but they had also passed the scrip receipts in question to their bankers, the defendants, who claimed to hold them for a debt due to them from Colls and Co. The plaintiff, having paid his bills, brought this action to recover the scrip receipts from the defendants.

Mr. Pitcher, the accountant of the Steam Navigation Company, being put in the witness-box, proved how the shares came to the plaintiff; but, upon his cross-examination, admitted that any one producing a scrip receipt would be treated by the company as the legal holder of the shares it represented, and that such receipts had been sold and dealt in to a great extent in the market; in which evidence he was corroborated by Mr. Wettenhall, a stock-broker, who proved that scrip receipts similar to those in dispute were constantly sold in the market, and that the property in them passed by delivery; in fact, the purchase-money was paid with one hand, the scrip received with the other.

Mr. Gurney, of the house of Overend, Gurney, and Co., Mr. Gard, of the firm of Sanderson and Co., and Mr. Herbert, of the house of Bruce and Co. all eminent bill and money brokers, were then examined, and proved that it was the universal practice of bill-brokers in London, and they all of them considered, that where both bills and collateral security were given, they had a right, if they thought proper, to raise money not exceeding the amount they had themselves advanced upon either the bills or the collaterals: but if one was used, the other was retained in their possession; they never parted with both documents; and that they conceived themselves perfectly at liberty to part with either to the extent of their own advances.

The Chief Baron here remarked to Mr. Erle that a most serious question arose upon this evidence. Presuming the evidence of these witnesses to be good proof of the practice of bill-brokers, how was it possible for any banker or other party who was applied to for a loan of money upon a transferable security, to know whether it was a collateral or not? If he, without knowledge of the fact, advanced money upon it, how was he to know that it was not an original security? Or, if the existence of an original security was a bar to his claim upon the collateral document in his hands, how could he guard himself in the present state of the practice of money-brokers in London? It was a most serious point to be considered.

Jervis, for the defendant, after hearing the remark of his lordship, would not trouble the jury with any observations, and contented himself with proving that a bonâ fide advance had been made to the house of Colls and Co. by the defendants, who were then, and still are, creditors of that firm to the extent of some thousands of pounds.

Erle replied.

The Lord Chief Baron.—There were but two questions before them—the character of the securities lodged, and the practice of brokers with regard to collateral securities lodged in their hands. They would take into their consideration whether these scrip receipts were securities transferable by being passed from hand to hand, and whether they were framed with a view to their being so transferred by mere delivery, as in that case the bearer or possessor would appear in the character of their real owner; and then if the jury so considered them, the next question for their consideration would be whether Messrs. Acraman were aware that such was the fact. If those gentlemen knew that it was the practice and custom of bill-brokers to make use of collaterals for the purpose of raising money upon them, it was clear they must have lodged them with the bill-brokers with a full knowledge of the purposes which those parties could and might, if they thought proper, put them to, and they were the parties who should suffer for dishonest use of them. It was quite clear that bill brokers conceived they had a right to obtain advances upon collateral securities lodged in their hands, as that fact had been proved beyond dispute, by parties whose eminence and respectability were unquestionable, and whose statements were beyond doubt. If the jury believed, and were satisfied that the bill-brokers had this power; if such was their practice, and the plaintiffs were aware of it, he did not see how this action could be sustained.

The jury retired, and, after an absence of nearly an hour, returned a verdict for the defendant. After the delivery of this verdict, the foreman of the jury addressed the Court, and stated, that though his brother jurymen and himself were bound by their oaths, after the statement they had heard of the practice of bill-brokers, to find a verdict for the defendants; yet that they were, until that moment, ignorant that such was the practice; nor did they believe that merchants were generally aware of it; they considered it an extremely dangerous practice, and until that day had never entertained an idea that parties had the right to make use of collateral securities so long as the original ones were running and available.

The Lord Chief Baron.—Pray let me ask you, as you have made this statement, whether you say that this scrip is a transferable security?

The Foreman.—Yes, we do, my Lord.

The Lord Chief Baron.—I understand you to say that you find that the bill-brokers possess the right to use collateral securities lodged with them.

The Foreman.—We do, my lord; but it is a practice which we were not aware of, and which we consider to be a very dangerous one. The merchants certainly never entertained a suspicion that it ever existed.

The Lord Chief Baron.—But do you say that this scrip was a transferable, and not a negotiable one?

A Juror.—Yes, my Lord.

The Lord Chief Baron.—And that with regard to the practice of bill-brokers making use of collateral securities, that the mercantile world were ignorant that such was the practice?

The Foreman.—Certainly. None of us have ever heard or knew of its existence before this day.

The Lord Chief Baron.—I am much obliged to you, gentlemen, for having called the attention of the Court and the public to so important a point, as the expression of your opinion may be very useful in any future steps which may arise hereafter.

Verdict for the defendant.

ADMINISTRATION OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE IN MIDDLESEX.

Draft of a Bill for the better Administration of Criminal Justice in Middlesex.

Whereas it is desirable for the better administration of criminal justice in the county of Middlesex, that sessions of the peace for the trial of felonies and misdemeanors committed within the said county should be holden more frequently, and that an assistant judge of competent legal knowledge should be appointed to preside at such sessions; be it enacted, by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that after the passing of this Act there shall be holden, in and for the county of Middlesex, two sessions or adjourned sessions of the peace, at least, in every calendar month; and the first sessions holden in the months of January, April, July, and October, respectively, shall be the general quarter sessions of the said county (a).

And be it enacted, that the second sessions, or the adjourned sessions, holden in the months of February, May, August, and November, respectively, and such other sessions as the justices for the county, in the first sessions holden in December assembled, shall from time to time appoint, shall be general sessions of the peace; and such general sessions shall have power to try and determine all appeals, and all other powers which now or shall hereafter belong to the general quarter sessions (b).

And be it enacted, that all orders heretofore made, and all things heretofore done, at any general session of the peace for the county of Middlesex, shall be as good in law as if made and done at the general quarter sessions of the peace for the said county (b).

And be it enacted, that the second sessions holden in the months of January, April, July, and October, shall be adjournments of the general quarter sessions (c).

And be it enacted, that after the passing of this Act it shall be lawful to begin (d) and continue, or to continue when begun, any session of the peace for the said county, so to holden as aforesaid, until the business thereof shall be ended, notwithstanding that her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench may sit at Westminster or elsewhere, in the said county, before or at the beginning or during the continuance of any such session.

And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for her Majesty, her heirs and successors, by sign manual, to appoint a person, being a serjeant or barrister-at-law of not less than ten years' standing, and in the commission of the peace for the said county, and qualified by law to act as a justice of the peace, to be the assistant judge of the said court of the sessions of the peace, which said assistant judge shall preside at the hearing of all appeals, and at the trial of all felonies and misdemeanors in the said court, and all matters connected therewith, and shall hold his office during good behaviour; and in case of sickness or unavoidable absence, and on such other occasions as shall be allowed by one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, such assistant judge shall be empowered from time to time to appoint a deputy qualified to be appointed assistant judge, who shall have power to act for him for such time as shall be in each case allowed by the Secretary of State, not being in any case later than the end of the business at the session of the peace then next but one following: provided always, that nothing in this Act contained shall interfere with the appointment of the chairman of the said court, for all purposes except the trials of appeals and of felonies and misdemeanors, and other matters connected therewith, but such appointments shall remain in the said justices as before the passing of this Act: Provided also, that the said assistant judge, as long as he shall hold the said office, shall not be eligible to sit in Parliament.

And be it enacted, that the presence of another justice of the peace shall not be essential to the formation of the Court in those cases in which it is directed by this Act that the assistant judge or his deputy for the time being shall preside; but nothing in this Act contained shall lessen the jurisdiction of the justices at the said sessions.

And be it enacted, that from and after the appointment of such assistant judge as aforesaid, there shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the sum of   pounds to such assistant judge for a yearly salary, to be paid from time to time quarterly, free and clear from all taxes and deductions whatsoever (except the income-tax), on the 5th day of January, the 5th day of April, the 5th day of July, and the 10th day of October, by equal portions, the first payment to be made on the first of such days as shall occur after the appointment of the said assistant judge; and that if any person appointed to such office shall die or resign the same, the executors or administrators of such person so dying, or the person resigning, shall be entitled to receive such portion of the salary aforesaid as shall have accrued during the time that such person shall have executed such office since the last payment, and that the successor of any such person so dying or resigning shall be entitled to receive such portion of the salary as shall accrue from the day of such death, resignation, or dismissal.

And whereas by an Act passed in the ninth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, intituled, "An Act to enable the justices of the peace for Westminster to hold their sessions of the peace during term, and the sitting of the Court of King's Bench," the sessions of the peace for the said city and liberty are limited to the weeks preceding the holding of each of the quarter or general sessions of the peace for the said county of Middlesex: and whereas by ancient usage, and of right, the justices of the peace for Middlesex have constantly holden and may hold their sessions of the peace for the said county within the said city and liberty, and the holding of sessions for the city and liberty has become unnecessary; be it enacted, that from and after the passing of this Act, sessions of the peace in and for the said city and liberty shall cease to be holden, and the sessions to be holden in and for the said county of Middlesex shall have full jurisdiction over all things cognizable by the sessions for the said city and liberty.

And whereas it is just that the officers of the court of sessions for the said city and liberty should be compensated. And whereas eight sessions have been usually holden in every year in and for the said city and liberty, be it enacted, that the clerk of the peace, deputy clerk of the peace, crier, and all other officers of the court of the sessions of the peace for the said county for the time being, shall, out of the fees and dues, to be by them respectively received in virtue of their said offices, at the four general sessions to be annually holden by virtue of this Act, and at the four sessions next following the same, retain and pay over, within ten days next after such sessions respectively, to the persons now holding the offices of clerk of the peace, deputy clerk of the peace, crier, or other officer belonging to the said court, for the term of their lives, three-fourths of the sums by the aforesaid officers respectively of right received in the last eight sessions of the peace for the said city and liberty for fees and dues payable to them in virtue of their respective offices for anything arising out of the holding of the said eight sessions, and which fees and dues shall cease to be payable hereafter by reason of the discontinuance of the said sessions, or, instead thereof in any year, it shall be lawful for any officer of the court of sessions of the peace for the said county to pay over as aforesaid the whole of the fees and dues received by him at the four general sessions of the said county, and the four sessions next following the same.

And whereas, by an Act passed in the twelfth year of the reign of King George the Second, intituled "An Act for the more easy assessing, levying, and collecting County Rates," it was enacted, that there should be but one rate made and assessed by the justices of the peace of the said county of Middlesex, and the said city and liberties of Westminster, for the several purposes enumerated in that Act: And whereas by an Act passed in the seventh year of the reign of King George the Fourth, intituled, "An Act for building a new Bridewell or House of Correction for the said City and Liberty of Westminster," a house of correction, commonly called the New Bridewell, was built out of moneys charged and assessed upon the county rates, which said bridewell is much larger than is needed by the said city and liberty; but the house of correction for the county of Middlesex is so small that the prisoners therein cannot be properly classified: And whereas, inconveniences arise from the present management of the county rate being vested partly in the justices for the said county, and partly in the justices for the said city and liberty, and it would be of public advantage if the management of the county rate were solely in the justices of the said county, and if the said New Bridewell were made a house of correction for the whole county, and placed under the control and management of the justices of the said county; be it enacted, that after the passing of this Act, the justices for the said city and liberty shall cease to exercise any control over the county rate, and the justices of the said county shall have the sole control and management thereof; and all orders for the payment of any sums of money out of the county rate, in respect of any expenditure within the said city and liberty, shall be made by the justices for the said county upon the county treasurer in like manner as all other orders are made by them upon him; and the said treasurer shall obey the same, and shall from time to time include the same in his accounts, and the same shall be subject to all the statutes and provisions for the regulation of the rate for the said county, and shall form part of the general expenditure for the said county.

And be it enacted, that so much of an Act passed in the forty-seventh year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled, "An Act to amend three Acts of the eighteenth, thirty-ninth, and forty-fourth years of his present Majesty, for erecting a court-house for the holding of Sessions of the Peace in the City of Westminster," as enacts, that the court-house for the said city of Westminster shall be under the sole direction and management of the justices of the peace for the time being of the city and liberty of Westminster, shall be repealed; and that after the passing of this Act, the control and management of the said court-house, and all the powers and provisions respecting the same in the said Acts vested in the justices for the said city and liberty shall be vested in the justices for the said county of Middlesex, as fully as if they had been named in the said Acts.

And be it enacted, that after the passing of this Act, all the powers and property in respect of the said New Bridewell by the before-mentioned Act of the seventh year of the reign of King George IV. vested in the justices for the said city and liberty of Westminster, and all the furniture, goods, and chattels, belonging to the said New Bridewell, shall be transferred to and vested in the justices for the said county.

And be it enacted, that so much of the said Act of the seventh year of the reign of King George IV. as enacts that no person or persons, other than and beside the justices of the peace for the said city and liberty of Westminster, and also the commissioners for executing an Act passed in the twenty-third year of the reign of his Majesty King George II. intituled "An Act for the more easy and speedy Recovery of Small Debts within the city and liberty of Westminster, and that part of the duchy of Lancaster which adjoins thereto," shall have power or authority to commit any person or persons to the said New Bridewell or house of correction, or to the custody of the keeper thereof, shall be repealed; and that after the passing of this Act the said New Bridewell shall become and be a house of correction for the county of Middlesex, under the management and control of the justices of the said county; and the justices of the said county, the magistrates of the police courts, and judges of the Central Criminal Court, and all persons having by law the right to commit any offender or offenders to the house of correction in Cold Bathfields, shall have the like power of committal to the said New Bridewell which they have of committing to the said house of correction: provided always, that nothing in this Act contained shall take away the right of the justices for the city and liberty of West-

(a) At present there are twenty sessions annually, twelve for Middlesex, and eight for the city of Westminster.

(b) By a recent decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, the general sessions have been held to have no jurisdiction in appeals. These clauses are to give such jurisdiction. It had been customary to try appeals at the general sessions for upwards of 150 years.

(c) These are made adjournments of the quarter sessions, because the county accounts cannot be well made up at any earlier period. The county days of the quarter sessions will therefore be in the third weeks of the months of January, April, July, and October. The other county days as the sessions may determine.

(d) A session cannot, by the ancient laws, be commenced in Middlesex during term. This provision is to prevent them from clashing with the sittings of the Central Criminal Court.

minster and the said commissioners to commit offenders to the said New Bridewell.

And be it enacted, that this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS.

Abstract of a Bill introduced into the House of Lords, intituled "An Act for the due Administration of Charitable Trusts in England and Wales."

The preamble recites, that it is expedient to provide for the security of property subject to charitable trusts in England and Wales, and for the superintendence and control of the administration of such trusts; and enacts that one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State shall, from time to time, appoint two fit persons, one of whom shall be a barrister of 12 years standing at the least, to be commissioners for the purposes of this Act, who shall be styled "The Commissioners of Charities," and shall hold their offices during good behaviour; and such commissioners shall have the superintendence and control of charitable trusts under this Act.

Sec. 2 enacts, that one of the principal Secretaries of State may, during any vacancy in the office of commissioner, or during the absence or illness of any commissioner, authorize one commissioner to act alone during such vacancy, or absence, or illness, of the other commissioner.

3. Enacts, that the commissioners shall have their office in London or Westminster, and shall have a common seal; and all orders and regulations stamped therewith shall be received as evidence, without any further proof.

4. Enacts, that it shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State to appoint two fit persons to be inspectors of charities for England and Wales, for the purpose of this Act, and from time to time to remove such inspectors.

5. Prescribes the form of oath to be taken by any commissioner and inspector respectively; and enacts that every such appointment shall be published in the London Gazette.

6. Empowers the commissioners to appoint a secretary, &c. and, subject to the approbation of the Lords of the Treasury, or any three of them, so many clerks, officers, &c. as they may deem necessary; and to remove such secretary, solicitor, clerks, messengers, and officers, and to appoint others in their place.

7. Directs that the salaries to be paid to the commissioners, inspectors, and other officers, shall be fixed by the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury.

8. Empowers the commissioners to make regulations concerning the form and manner of the accounts to be kept and rendered, and the returns to be made by persons intrusted with the receipt or application of the revenues of any charitable trust, and for all other purposes under this Act.

9. Prescribes the ordinary duties of the inspectors of charities, namely, to make inspections and examinations in such districts as may be assigned to them; to make reports in writing of their respective proceedings to the commissioners, and special reports when necessary.

10. Defines the ordinary powers of the inspectors.

11. Empowers the commissioners to institute a special inquiry into the administration of any charitable trust, either before themselves, or one of the inspectors authorized for that purpose, either at the office of the commissioners, or in any other place convenient for the purposes of such inquiry; and further empowers the commissioners or inspectors to summon persons and to send for papers. Provided always, that no person shall be obliged to travel in obedience to such precept more than ten miles from his or her place of abode.

12. Directs that the examinations and papers at any special inquiry shall be transmitted to the office of the commissioners, with a report thereon of the commissioner or inspector before whom such inquiry shall have been held.

13. Commissioners only to have jurisdiction in cases of breach of trust, where the property does not exceed ——l. a year, or —— hundred pounds in money.

14. Empowers the commissioners to examine persons upon oath or affirmation, and delegates a similar power to every inspector authorized by an order under the seal of the commissioner.

15. Prescribes the penalties of perjury for false swearing before the commissioners, or any inspector authorized to make a special inquiry.

16. Empowers trustees, with the approbation of the commissioners, to transfer stock into the name of the Accountant-general of the Court of Chancery.

17. Authorizes trustees and other persons having money in their hands belonging to any charity, to pay the same into the Bank, in the name of the Accountant-general, in the matter of the charity.

18. Provides that in all cases, within the summary jurisdiction of the commissioners, where the charity funds are insecure, the commissioners may order transfer or payment of such funds to the account of the Accountant-general.

19. With consent of trustees, or under special circumstances, the Court of Chancery may direct charity funds to be transferred to the Accountant-general.

20. Commissioners empowered to make orders as to the payment of the dividends on Bank annuities and stock standing in the name of the Accountant-general under any order of the commissioners, and as to the payment of other moneys paid in under such order.

21. Payment of dividends only to be made upon an order signed by both commissioners, and sealed with their seal.

22. Directs that stock transferred to the Accountant-general, under any order of the commissioners, may be sold under an order signed by both commissioners.

23. Provides that, from and after the death, resignation or removal of the Accountant-general, all stocks, annuities, and other transferable securities shall vest in his successor.

24. Provides that the Accountant-general shall not interfere with charity moneys, but only to keep the account at the Bank; and the governor and company shall be liable for all moneys received by them.

25. Empowers the commissioners within their summary jurisdiction, as aforesaid, to order sale, mortgage, or lease of land, rent-charges, &c. upon application from the trustees of any charity.

26. Commissioners empowered to remove trustees within their jurisdiction, upon proof of any breach of trust or neglect of duty, and to substitute or appoint any new trustee or trustees.

27. Persons refusing to appear, or be examined before the commissioners or inspectors, when duly summoned, liable to be fined by the Court of Queen's Bench or Exchequer.

28. Officers of charities who obstruct inspectors or commissioners subject to removal.

29. Trustees disobeying this Act shall be subject to removal, on application to the Court of Chancery, in a summary way.

30. Commissioners' order for payment of money may be enforced by the Court of Chancery.

31. Commissioners empowered to settle scheme, where fund cannot be applied as directed by the donor.

32. Legal estate of hereditaments now vested in municipal corporations on charitable trusts, to be vested in the commissioners, from and after the day of 1844; but so, nevertheless, as not to deprive the trustees appointed under the Municipal Corporations Act of their powers of management or administration.

33. Commissioners empowered, upon application by not less than ten inhabitant householders, to add to existing number of municipal charity trustees where necessary to secure the fair administration of the funds. Trustees removed by the Court of Chancery may be supplied under the authority of the said court.

34. Commissioners empowered under certain circumstances to compromise claims on behalf of charities, provided always that a report of all compromises made or authorized by the commissioners shall be annually laid before Parliament.

35. Empowering the commissioners to call in moneys subject to any charitable trust out on defective securities, and to be reinvested in such manner as the commissioners shall direct.

36. Commissioners empowered to rehear any petition or report within two calendar months after first hearing.

37. Commissioners may report their opinion to the Attorney-General in any case of a charity in which they think it is proper that proceedings should be instituted, and in every such case it shall be lawful for the commissioners to become and be relators.

38. Commissioners to report to the Crown annually.

39. Enacts that the trustees of every charity within the summary jurisdiction of the commissioners (except such as shall be specially exempted), shall pay, on or before the 29th of September in every year, into the Bank of England, to an account entitled "The Charity Administration Fund," a sum not exceeding threepence in the pound on the net annual revenue of such charity; and the said "Charity Administration Fund" shall be applicable to the payment of all salaries and expenses as the commissioners shall authorize to be paid thereout.

40. All costs and expenses ordered to be paid to the commissioners or their solicitor to be paid into "The Charity Administration Fund."

41. Power to her Majesty's Treasury to advance first expenses of commissioners or any deficit, the same to be reimbursed from "Charity Administration Fund."

42. Trustees of charity property to appoint a clerk for the purpose of all returns by this Act directed to be made to the commissioners, and of all communications with the board; every such clerk to communicate his name and address to the board.

43. Trustees to keep accounts of charity receipts and expenditure, to be audited annually in such manner as the commissioners shall by general order or regulation direct. Statements of debts, receipts, and expenditure to be transmitted annually to the commissioners.

44. Deeds affecting charity property shall be registered in the office of the commissioners; and all deeds and conveyances deposited there to be open to inspection of any person interested, on the payment of one shilling.

45. Deeds relating to charities to be kept in safe custody.

46. Trustees indemnified for acts done under direction of the commissioners.

47. Act not to extend to either of the universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or London, nor to the colleges of Westminster, Eton, or Winchester, nor to the Charter-house, nor to the schools of Harrow or Rugby, nor to the Trinity-house of Deptford Strond, nor to any cathedral or collegiate church within England or Wales, nor to any funds applicable to the benefit of Roman Catholics, Quakers, or Jews, and which shall be under the superintendence of and control of persons of such persuasions respectively.

48. That nothing in the said Act shall affect any suits or proceedings now actually pending.

49. Act not to extend to Scotland or Ireland.

50. Act may be altered this session.

THE NEW CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS.

We were put in possession yesterday of the new ministerial Bill to amend the law for the trial of controverted elections of members to serve in Parliament. It is prepared and brought into the Lower House of Parliament by Lord Granville G. H. Somerset (the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster) and the Prime Minister, by whom the existing law, passed in 1839, was originally introduced to the notice of the Legislature. It contains 101 clauses. The following are the principal provisions that appear to be proposed:—The Act 9 Geo. 4, c. 22, and a certain portion of the 42 Geo. 3, requiring parties interested in an election petition to exchange lists of voters objected to, and to give in written statements, &c. are repealed. Recognizances to be entered into by petitioners to the amount of 1,000*l.* with four sureties of 250*l.* each, making altogether 2,000*l.* for the payment of any costs and expenses which the committee may think fit to award. An examin of recognizances to be appointed by Mr. Speaker. An option is allowed of paying the money into the Bank of England, instead of finding securities. Every petition, to be received, must be indorsed by the examiner of recognizances, who is empowered to entertain and to decide upon objections to such recognizances, &c. Petitions may be withdrawn on notice to the Speaker and the sitting member; but in such case the petitioners will be liable to the payment of all expenses incurred up to that period by the opposite party—a fact which we pray the Radicals and the Reform Club to bear in mind at the next general election. Members having given notice of their intention not to defend their seats will be restrained from appearing as parties against the petition, and from sitting or voting in the House whilst the case is pending. This is the rule at present. The most important feature in the Bill, however, is the reduction of the select committee from seven to three members, who are to be selected, as now, by the General Committee of Elections appointed by Mr. Speaker at the commencement of every session. Of these three members, one of course will be selected from the Chairman's panel; and a provision is made, that the chairman, if the numbers on a division are equal, shall have a second or casting vote, but this contingency is not very likely to occur, seeing that the committee is to consist of an odd number of members, all of whom are strictly required to attend. If the Bill is passed into a law this session, we shall see whether a trinitarian tribunal will prove more impartial in its decisions than one composed of eleven or seven members. As before, the vote of the chairman will, no doubt, carry the day in nine cases out of ten.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

LIBEL LAW AMENDMENT.

MONDAY, July 8.—Lord CAMPBELL, in a speech pointing out the present state of the law on the subject, and the necessity for improvement, moved the third reading of his Law of Libel Bill.—The LORD CHANCELLOR opposed it, contending that it would lead to great inconvenience, without any countervailing advantage.—Lord BROUGHAM gave his support to the Bill, which, however, was opposed by Lord DENMAN, who thought that the subject had not received that due and sufficient consideration which would warrant them in legislating. Public opinion had effected a great change in the practice as relating to prosecutions for alleged libels on a Government. Attorney-Generals, judges, and juries, would shrink from prosecuting or convicting defendants for comments on public men or public acts, which, half a century ago, would have insured punishment. As to private libels, the Bill afforded to defendants, under the guise of proving the truth, a license which might be abused to an alarming extent, in the propagation of slanderous accusations, under which innocent men might be subjected to a torture greater than any verdict could deliver them from.—Lord CAMPBELL replied; and the Bill was rejected, on a division, by 22 to 3.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

RAILWAYS' REGULATION BILL.

THURSDAY, July 11.—Mr. BRIGHT spoke ably and eloquently against the Bill, and was supported by Mr. BERNAL, Mr. COLQUHOUN, Mr. GISBORNE, and Mr. C. BULLER, all of whom argued against the Bill, particularly the latter, who ridiculed the idea of making the Government the controller of speculations dependent for their vitality on individual enterprise, and urged that, at least, delay was due to those who had embarked their capital in speculations so materially promotive of the public welfare.—A number of members took part in support of the Bill, amongst whom were Lord SEYMOUR and Mr. WALLACE.—Sir ROBERT PEEL defended the Bill, and admitted that the greatest credit was due to those whose capital and enterprise had developed our admirable railway system. The time, however, had arrived, when it was requisite that our legislation should be based on specific principles; and the public interest required that a conclusion should be adopted in favour of the Bill, which gave to Parliament a right of interference under specific circumstances.—Mr. WARD regarded the Bill as the first step in establishing a gigantic system of Government monopoly.—Mr. GLADSTONE disclaimed all wish, on the part of the Government, to dogmatise.—Mr. HAWES attacked the conduct of the supporters of the Railway Bill, which he considered subservient to the interests of monopoly.—Mr. MUNTZ was fearful that the Bill would operate unfavourably against existing railway speculations.—Mr. SHARMAN CRAWFORD expressed his approbation of the Bill, and thanked the Government for bringing it in.—On a division, the second reading was carried by 186 to 98—majority 88.—Some further discussion ensued, during which Mr. GLADSTONE disclaimed all wish, on the part of the Government, of going beyond the recommendations of the third report of the committee on railways. The Bill was then read a second time.—The other orders were afterwards disposed of.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE only interesting topic of the week relating to the administration of the law is the argument on the Writ of Error in the Irish State Prosecutions. The judgment is not yet given, waiting the opinions of the Judges, who are upon circuit, but our next will probably contain it. The report of the argument, &c. is reserved for careful working up and condensation. The present impression is, that the judgment of the Queen's Bench will be confirmed.

POOR LAW PRACTICE.

CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION 17 OF 5 & 6 VICT. C. 109. (PARISH CONSTABLES' ACT.)

The following is a case submitted by the Poor Law Commissioners to the Solicitor-General and Mr. Tomlinson, as to what fees are properly payable to parish constables out of poor's-rate, under the 17th section of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, together with the opinion of those gentlemen thereon:—

"The Act 5 & 6 Vict., c. 109, contains the following provision for the payment of parish constables appointed in pursuance of that statute:—

"Section 17. That the justices of the county in general or quarter sessions assembled, shall from time to time, subject to the approval of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, settle tables of fees and allowances to the clerks to the justices for the performance of their duties under this Act, and to the constables for the service of summonses and execution of warrants, and for the performance of such other occasional duties which may be required of the said constables, for which the said justices shall think that fees ought to be allowed, and whenever any duty for which any such fee or allowance shall have been settled, and for which the payment is not by law charged upon the county rates, shall have been performed by any clerk, or by any constable appointed under this Act, the amount of the fee or allowance shall be paid by the overseers of the parish in respect of which such fee has become payable out of any monies in their hands collected for the relief of the poor, upon the order of justices in petty sessions assembled for the division, and under such regulations as shall be made from time to time by the justices in general or quarter session assembled, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State."

"Upon this section a question arises, whether the fees payable to the constables under the above provisions are, when not chargeable on the county rates, to be paid out of the poor-rate in all cases; or whether they are to be so paid in those cases in which the constables' services have been required in a matter of parochial concern.

"In favour of the latter view, it is to be observed, that the section provides for the payment of the fee by the overseers of the parish in respect of which 'such fee has become payable.' It is, perhaps, difficult to conceive on what ground the fee can become payable 'in respect of the parish,' except as being due on account of services required and rendered specifically on behalf of the parish. Suppose A assaults B in the parish of C, B complains to a magistrate, who issues his warrant for the apprehension of A. A is taken by the constable of C before two magistrates, who convict him in a penalty of 20s., which is paid by A; the magistrates at the same time make an order on the overseers of C professedly under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, for the payment from the poor-rates of the constables' fee for the apprehension of A. Can the constables' fee in such a case be said to be payable 'in respect of the parish?' And how can any distinction be drawn on this point between the constables' fee and the costs of the magistrates' clerk?

"If this construction of the phrase in question be correct, it seems to follow, that the constables' fees are payable from the poor-rates, only when the constables' services have been required in parochial matters, and it may be presumed, that in other cases the fees will be payable by the particular parties at whose instance the constables may have been employed.

"Upon this point, the case of Rex v. Bird, 2 B. & A. 522, and Rex v. Seville, 5 B. & A. 180, which arose upon the 18 Geo. 3, c. 19, s. 4 (passed expressly for the better indemnification of constables, the charges incurred by them in doing the business of the parish or township), may be referred to as a judicial interpretation of what is to be considered the matter or business of the parish. In the former case, the costs incurred in prosecuting an assault committed on the constable in the execution of his office, were held not to be sums expended on account of the parish.

"In favour of the view, that the constables' fees when not chargeable upon the county, are payable from the poor-rates in all cases, it is contended, that parish constables were originally unremunerated officers; but one of the objects of the 5 & 6 Vict., c. 109, was, as expressed in its title and preamble, to make provision for their remuneration, and that the 17th section, in making such provision, refers in specific terms to the poor-rate alone, save in so far as it creates an exception with regard to the county rate. It is therefore inferred, that the intention of the legislature was to cast upon the poor-rate (with the exception above mentioned), the charge of the constables' compensation, and that the expression 'the parish in respect of which such fee has become payable,' must be read as equivalent to the words, 'the parish for which the constable is appointed.' It is moreover maintained, that the 18th, 19th, and 20th sections of the Act, which provide for the appointment of parish constables with salaries, and for the payment of such salaries out of the poor-rates, are confirmatory of the foregoing view. It is thought, that as the salaried constables will be paid for the whole of their duties out of the poor-rates, the same fund was probably intended to be charged in the case of constables remunerated by fees.

"It may, however, be argued on the other hand, that as no mention of the poor-rates, or indeed of any source of payment whatever, is made in the title or preamble, the intention of the legislature as to the fund or party to be charged can be gathered only from the body of the statute, and that although the poor-rate alone is expressly charged in the 17th section, the extent of the charge thus cast upon it is nevertheless limited by the phrase 'in respect of the parish,' and that such limitation cannot be legitimately held to include matters which are not of parochial concern. It may, moreover, be remarked, that the argument deduced from the analogy of provisions in sections 18, 20, being merely an argument from analogy, is of course by no means conclusive; that different intentions may be readily conceived as existing, in regard to the two modes of payment, and that the adoption of the system of remuneration by fees may have been designed as a means of fixing the charge on the parties actually concerned in each individual case. It may be added, that this system is prescribed by the Act as the one for general adoption, while the payment by salary is admissible only under certain conditions. Again, supposing that the fees demandable by the constable according to the table are payable, out of the poor-rates, how, or upon what principle, is the liability of a particular parish to pay such fees to be ascertained? Is it the parish for which the constable is appointed, the parish in which the offence is committed, or the parish in which the offender is apprehended? By the 15th section of 5 & 6 Vict., c. 109, a constable may act not only in any part of the county in which the parish for which he is appointed is situated, but also in every county adjoining thereto. Suppose the constable of A is called upon to act in the parish of B, which he does, and ultimately apprehends the offender in C. In such case, which of the parishes, A, B, or C, is to be considered the parish 'in respect of which the fee has become payable?'

"You are requested to advise,

"First. Whether, under the 17th section of the above cited Act, the fees payable to parish constables are, when not chargeable on the county rates, to be paid out of the poor-rates in all cases, or in those cases only in which the constables' services are rendered in matters of parochial concern.

"Secondly.—Assuming that the poor-rates are liable in all cases, how is that liability to be determined as between different parishes concerned?

"OPINION.

"We are of opinion that all the fees which are payable to parish constables under the 17th section of the above cited Act, are, when not chargeable on the county rates, to be paid out of the poor rates. The only exception which runs through the section is of the duties for which the payment is by law chargeable upon the county rate. Subject to this exception, the constables are to be paid for the service of summons and execution of warrants without reference to the subject matter to which they apply, and for the performance of such other occasional duties required of them as the justices shall think ought to be compensated by fees. The only limitation here is the discretion of the justices. The reference to the parishes who are to pay does not appear to have been intended to qualify the preceding enactment with respect to the subject-matter for which fees were to be paid to constables by parishes, but only to point out the particular parish upon which the liability is to be fixed. No power is given to settle a scale of fees as between constables and individuals setting them in motion, and the preamble shows that the intention was by rewarding constables to increase the security of persons and property generally. This object would be defeated if the payment to constables were limited to parochial concerns.

"Secondly.—The general intention of the Legislature, as indicated by the preamble and other sections of the Act, appears to have been to tax the parochial funds of each parish for the security of persons and property within such parish; but it is impossible to lay down any rule of construction of universal application for determining the liability as between different parishes concerned. Reference must be had in each particular case as it arises to the table of fees and allowances, and the duties for the performance of which they may be allowed, as applicable to the services performed, and the peculiar circumstances under which they may have been performed.

"Temple, 1st December, 1843."

G. Bellairs, esq. of Leicester, has had the Stockerton estate, in the county, bequeathed to him by the will of Messrs. W. and N. C. Stevenson, of Stamford. The value of the real and personal estate of the deceased gentlemen is supposed to be 230,000*l.* of which 96,000*l.* is left in numerous legacies, and the residue to the Rev. P. Wilson, rector of Newmarket; Rev. H. Bellairs, rector of Bedworth; and James, George, and William Bellairs, esqrs. sons of Mr. A. W. Bellairs, formerly a banker of Leicester.—Leicester Mercury.

TURNPIKE ACTS.—A bill just introduced by the Government continues all existing turnpike acts about to expire on the 1st of August, 1844, to the 1st of August, 1845, and to the end of the then session of Parliament. Certain acts, named in the 6th and 7th Victoria, cap. 69, are exempted from the provisions of the bill.

At the Essex Quarter Sessions, on Tuesday, John Jolliffe Tufnell, jun. esq. of Waltham House, eldest son of John Jolliffe Tufnell, esq. of Langleys, qualified as a magistrate for that county.

This Gazette contains notices that the following places have been duly registered for the solemnization of marriages therein:—Bethesda Chapel, Kingston-upon-Hull; Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, Nantwich; Wesleyan Chapel, Grosvenor-place, Walworth.

Mr. John David Chambers, of the Chancery bar, has been appointed Recorder of Salisbury.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE many important judgments delivered previously to the Long Vacation, by way of bringing up the arrears of business at the close of the legal year, continue to occupy a large portion of our columns, to the exclusion of a multitude of matters of less pressing interest which are in type. Many correspondents are thus unavoidably deferred, with Carey's and Taylor's Lectures, notices of new publications, &c. For the same reason the leading articles are curtailed.

THE PROPERTY LAWYER.

I.—Voluntary Trust of a Debt.—Incomplete Gift.

The case of M'Fadden v. Jenkyns (1 Ph. 153), is interesting, as shewing what slight evidence of a trust the Court will receive, and under what circumstances a trust, though voluntary, will bind an estate. The judgment of the Lord Chancellor (Lyndhurst) recites the facts of the case, therefore it will be unnecessary to repeat them.

The Lord Chancellor.—This was an appeal from a judgment of Vice-Chancellor Wigram, upon a motion for an injunction to stay proceedings at law. The facts stated in support of the motion were shortly these. The testator Thomas Warry had lent a sum of 500*l*. to the defendant Jenkyns, to be returned within a short period. Some time afterwards Warry sent a verbal direction to Jenkyns to hold the 500*l*. in trust for Mrs. M'Fadden. This he assented to, and, upon her application, paid her a small sum, 10*l*., in respect of this trust. The main question was, whether, assuming the facts to be as stated, this transaction was binding upon the estate of Thomas Warry. The executor had brought an action to recover the 500*l*. so lent to Jenkyns. It is obvious that the rights of the parties could not, with reference to this claim, be finally settled in a court of law; and, if the trust were completed and binding, an injunction ought to be granted. Some points were disposed of by the Vice-Chancellor in this case, which are indeed free from doubt, and appear not to have been contested in this Court, viz. that a declaration by parol is sufficient to create a trust of personal property; and that if the testator Thomas Warry had, in his lifetime, declared himself a trustee of the debt for the plaintiff, that, in equity, would perfect the gift to the plaintiff as against Thomas Warry and his estate. The distinctions upon this subject are undoubtedly refined, but it does not appear to me that there is any substantial difference between such a case and the present. The testator, in directing Jenkyns to hold the money in trust for the plaintiff, which was assented to and acted upon by Jenkyns, impressed, I think, a trust upon the money which was complete and irrevocable. It was equivalent to a declaration by the testator that the debt was a trust for the plaintiff. The transaction bears no resemblance to an undertaking or agreement to assign. It was in terms a trust, and the aid of the Court was not necessary to complete it. Such being the strong inclination of my opinion, and corresponding, as it appears to do, with that of the learned judge in the court below, and with the decision of the Master of the Rolls in the case to which he refers, I cannot do otherwise upon this motion, and in this stage of the cause, than refuse the application. I must not, however, be understood as pronouncing any conclusive opinion upon the facts of the case. The witness Bartholomew, a professional gentleman, I believe, swears distinctly and in a positive terms as to the direction given by the testator; but there are some improbabilities in the case, and it is difficult to say, as the Vice-Chancellor justly observes, what may be the result at the hearing of the cause. As the appeal appears to have been encouraged, if not suggested by the Vice-Chancellor, the motion must be refused without costs.

II.—Foreign Charity.

In the case of Mitford v. Reynolds (1 Phil. 185) an important question was raised. The testator, Robert Mitford, had bequeathed property to the Government of Bengal, and this was held to be a valid charitable bequest. But the elaborate judgment of the Lord Chancellor (Lyndhurst) upon the point will instructive. We omit the other questions mooted in the case as of little moment.

The Lord-Chancellor.—This is a question arising out of the will of Robert Mitford. The testator, after providing for the payment of his debts and legacies, proceeds as follows:—"Ninthly, I will, devise, give, and bequeath the remainder of my property to the government of Bengal, for the express purpose of that government applying the amount to charitable, beneficial, and public works at and in the city of Dacca in Bengal, the intent of such bequest and donation being that the amount shall be applied exclusively to the benefit of the native inhabitants in the manner they and the government may regard to be most conducive to that end." The first and main question is, whether this is a valid charitable bequest. The money is to be applied to charitable, beneficial, and public works at and in the city of Dacca, in Bengal. If these words, as it is contended upon the authority of Williams v. Kershaw (5 L. J. N. S. 84; and see 1 Keen, 232, n.), are to be taken distributively and not conjunctively, and any one of the purposes or of the alternatives would not constitute a valid charitable bequest, the whole disposition will, of course, fail. Upon that point no doubt can be entertained. But this is not the whole of the bequest, because the testator goes on to say that it is his intent that the money shall be applied exclusively to the benefit of the native inhabitants of Dacca. Taking, therefore, the whole together, the meaning, as I understand it, is this, that the money shall be applied to works—by which I understand something to be constructed or established—for the benefit of the native inhabitants of Dacca—not for any particular class of the native inhabitants, but for all the native inhabitants in general, both rich and poor; and I think within all the authorities, this constitutes a valid charitable bequest. In the case of Jones v. Williams (Amb. 651), which was before Lord Camden, there was a bequest of 1,000*l*. to supply water to the town of Chepstow for the use of the inhabitants. That was considered a charitable bequest within the statute of Elizabeth; and Lord Camden, upon that occasion, stated that a gift for general or public use, for the poor as well as the rich, had always been considered, within the statute of Elizabeth, as a good charitable bequest. Again, in a case which was cited at the bar, of Howse v. Chapman (4 Ves. 542), Lord Loughborough decided that a gift for the improvement of the city of Bath was, from its general nature, a good charitable bequest. And in another case which was also referred to, the case of the Botanical Garden at Stockwell, Townley v. Bedwell (6 Ves. 194), Lord Eldon thought that the testator's having added in his will, that he considered it would be a public benefit, gave to the bequest the character of charity, and consequently that the gift was void under the Statute of Mortmain. So, also, in the case of the Attorney-General v. Heelis (2 S. & S. 67), which was a gift of funds for the improvement of the town of Bolton, that also, from its general nature, was considered as a valid charitable bequest, and the Vice-Chancellor, Sir John Leach upon that occasion stated that he had always considered the rule to be that any lawful bequest for a general or public purpose was a good charitable bequest within the statute of Elizabeth, and he instanced the case of money given for the purpose of building a sessions-house for the county, and other similar cases which had been considered from their general nature as good charitable bequests. Now, in this case, according to the construction which I put upon the words of this bequest taken altogether, it is a bequest of money to be applied in the construction or establishment of some works for the general benefit of the native inhabitants of Dacca, for the poor as well as for the rich, and I think that comes within the principle of the cases I have stated, and constitutes, under the statute of Elizabeth, a good charitable bequest. It is unnecessary for me to advert to the question as to the Statute of Mortmain, because I agree in what was stated in the case of The Mayor of Lyons v. The East India Company (1 Moore's P. C. Cas. 175), that the Statute of Mortmain does not apply to India. And this brings me, therefore, to the consideration of several other objections which have been made to this bequest. One is, that it is difficult to ascertain, and uncertain, what the testator meant by the term "native inhabitants of Dacca." Now, I apprehend that any person who has been in the habit of communicating with the East Indies would have no difficulty upon that subject. If there were any real difficulty, it might be removed by a reference for the purpose of inquiring as to the meaning of this term. But I apprehend that in the mouth of a person who has been in the habit of residing in the East Indies the term "native inhabitants of Dacca" is used in contradistinction to the European inhabitants, or the descendants of European inhabitants; and that, I conceive, was the sense in which the term was used by the testator in this instance. Again, it is said, how can any works be exclusively for the use of the native inhabitants? And the instance was given, I think by Mr. Wakefield, of a monument which all persons would see, and all persons would enjoy as far as it was capable of being enjoyed. But many instances might be put of works that might be applied exclusively to the benefit of the native inhabitants—hospitals for the benefit of the native inhabitants only—baths for the benefit of the native inhabitants only—gardens, and various other establishments might be suggested which would satisfy the words "for the exclusive benefit of the native inhabitants." Another objection which was made was this, that this fund might be applied to idolatrous purposes, to the building of a temple for the worshipping of idols, and other objectionable purposes. The answer to this, I think, is obvious. The gift is "for the benefit of the native inhabitants." This Court would not consider such an application of the funds as being for the benefit of the native inhabitants, nor would any other Court, administered upon the principles of this Court, consider that an application of the fund for the purpose of encouraging idolatry could be for the benefit of the native inhabitants of Dacca; and I understand from the Acts of Parliament (13 Geo. 3, c. 63; 21 Geo. 3, c. 70), by which the Supreme Court of Calcutta was founded, and from the proceedings in the case of the Mayor of Lyons v. The East India Company, that the Supreme Court of Calcutta exercises an equitable jurisdiction, similar to and corresponding with the equitable jurisdiction of this Court, including the jurisdiction exercised by this Court in matters of charity. Any application, therefore, of the funds for idolatrous purposes would not be considered by that Court as a proper application within the meaning of the testator, and would be controlled, regulated, and restrained. It appears to me, therefore, that the money in this case being, by the will of the testator, directed to be given for this purpose to the government of Bengal, which government of Bengal is found by the report of the Master to be the Governor-General of India, the money ought to be paid over to the Governor-General of India, as in the case of foreign charities, for the purpose of being applied to the purposes mentioned in the will. But then, it is said, this Court will not part with the fund, because it may lead to abuse; that the Governor-General may misapply this fund; may not discharge this trust in a manner of which this Court might approve; and that he is amenable to no tribunal, and subject to no control. This also, I apprehend, is incorrect. When you come to look at the statute, by which that court is founded and regulated, it appears that the Governor-General is subject to the jurisdiction and control of the Supreme Court of Calcutta, except when he is acting entirely in his public capacity as Governor-General in Council. Now, in this case, he in receiving the funds of a private individual, to be applied according to the will of that individual. He does not receive them for the purpose of discharging any duty or any trust which is cast upon him by the public; he is not responsible to the government, or to her Majesty, or to the East India Company, for the manner in which he discharges this trust; he is not acting as Governor-General in Council; and, therefore, I apprehend, he is amenable to the tribunal of the Superior Court of Calcutta, precisely in the same way as if he was acting in any ordinary case as an individual. Another difficulty, however, was suggested, which was of this nature. This charity is to be administered for the benefit of the native inhabitants of Dacca, according to the opinion of the Governor-General and the native inhabitants, of what shall be for their benefit: and it is said, What are you to do if they differ as to the mode of distribution and application? In that case I think the answer is obvious. You could not apply the fund to any charitable object until they agreed, or until the Court, if the Court thought itself justified in doing so, should interfere for that purpose. But the same difficulty would exist in a great variety of cases. If property is given for a charitable object to A and B, to be applied to such charitable institutions in this metropolis as they shall agree upon, they may differ; but such a bequest was never considered on that account as not constituting a valid bequest. It appears to me, therefore, that these objections are objections that do not weigh in this case, and ought not to govern the decision of the Court."

THE WRITS OF ERROR.

An impression having gone abroad that the case of Gray, which came on upon a writ of error, in the House of Lords, is that of one of the defendants in the recent trials in Dublin, wherein Mr. O'Connell was a party, it may be well to place the case of the present individual before our readers, when it will be found, that even though he was not one of the defendants in that trial, yet that his case is one of much singularity, and that the result of the proceedings upon his writ of error is looked to with the greatest interest, inasmuch as the point in dispute involves the right of a prisoner, upon a charge of having shot at another with an intent to do him some grievous bodily harm, to challenge the jury.

GRAY v. THE QUEEN.

Case on behalf of Samuel Gray, the plaintiff in error, from a judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland.

In this case Samuel Gray was indicted in the year 1842, at the Lent assizes in and for the county of Monaghan, for having committed a felony. The charge was founded and the indictment framed upon the statute of 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 3, and the said Samuel Gray having pleaded thereto the plea of not guilty, the trial thereof at the said assizes proceeded, till, in consequence of the illness of one of the jurors impannelled and sworn upon the said trial, the jurors were discharged without giving a verdict. At the Summer assizes in the same year, the trial was again brought on, when the jurors did not agree in a verdict, and were again discharged. At the Lent assizes of 1843, the said plaintiff was again put upon his trial, and again the jurors disagreed, and were discharged without finding a verdict; and thereupon the proceedings were removed to the Court of Queen's Bench by the Crown in Easter Term 1843. The said Samuel Gray was required to plead to the said indictment in the Court of Queen's Bench; and thereupon the said Samuel Gray did plead thereto, to the effect, that the said offence with which he was charged was committed by the same person who feloniously shot one Owen Murphy; that it was committed at the same time, and formed part of the same transaction and entire offence, and that he had been tried for the murder of Owen Murphy, and had been acquitted. To this plea the Attorney-General demurred, and the said Samuel Gray joined in demurrer, and thereupon, after argument and consideration, judgment was pronounced, that the said demurrer should be allowed, and that the said Samuel Gray should answer over to the felony in the said indictment charged, and thereupon the said Samuel Gray pleaded thereto a plea of not guilty thereof. And afterwards, at the Summer assizes of the county of Monaghan, the said record came down for trial, and after twelve jurors were impannelled, the said Samuel Gray challenged peremptorily some of the said jurors, as they were called to the book, but before they began to take the oath upon the said trial; but the said peremptory challenge was disallowed, on the ground that it had been the practice in Ireland not to allow a peremptory challenge in any case of felony not punishable with death; and the jurors so challenged were thereupon sworn to try and did try the said issue against the will and protest of the said Samuel Gray. And the said challenge having been demurred to by the counsel for the Crown, and the demurrer having been allowed, and the said challenge overruled, the trial proceeded, and a verdict was found against the said Samuel Gray, and the postea was returned in Michaelmas Term last to the said Court of Queen's Bench with the said verdict entered thereon, and judgment against the said Samuel Gray was by the said Court given upon the said verdict, and the said Samuel Gray sentenced by the said Court, that he be transported for the term of his natural life. Mr. Justice Perrin declared his opinion, and gave his judgment that the challenge should have been allowed, and that the judgment on the said verdict should be arrested, and a venire de novo awarded; but the Lord Chief Justice, Mr Justice Burton, and Mr. Justice Crampton gave judgment against the said Samuel Gray. Under these circumstances, the said Samuel Gray has sued out a writ of error for the purpose of bringing the said judgment of the said Court under the consideration of their lordships' House, and of having the same reversed by error in law. The said Samuel Gray therefore humbly submitted that the judgment of the said Court of Queen's Bench should be reversed for the following, amongst other reasons:—"Because the incidents of the defence and trial of all felonies are the same, and the right of peremptory challenge appertains to the trial of felony as a specific class of crime, and has been, therefore, uniformly allowed in England on the trial of felonies not punishable by death, as well as of capital felonies."

To this case of the plaintiff in error, the defendant in error, the Queen joins "that there is no error in the record and proceedings aforesaid, or in the giving of the judgment aforesaid."

PROCTORS AND NOTARIES.

ARTICLING AND ADMISSION OF PROCTORS.

The following return has just been made to Parliament.—

There are no bye-laws, regulations, or resolutions made by proctors of the Arches or Prerogative Courts of Canterbury, relating to the articling of clerks to proctors, or to the admission of proctors.

The articling of clerks and admission of proctors are regulated by a statute of the Archbishop of Canterbury, bearing date the 30th of June, 1696, a copy of which is hereto annexed.

By this statute, the number of proctors having then increased to forty, it was, among other things, ordered that there should be thirty-four proctors exercent in the Arches Court, each of whom should have power and privilege to take clerks apprentices, and that the remaining proctors should be esteemed and called supernumeraries, who should not have power to take such clerks until they should have succeeded into the number of the thirty-four; and that no proctor should take any clerk apprentice until he should have continued exercent in the Arches Court five years; that the term of service of a clerk should be seven years, and that no proctor having one such clerk should be capable of taking another at the same time, until the first should have served five years.

It is, in practice, required that a proctor shall have been five years on the list of the thirty-four seniors before being allowed to take an articled clerk.

There are two rules observed with respect to the qualification of articled clerks which are not contained in the annexed statute; one, by which the age of the clerk is required to be fourteen, and not above eighteen years; and the other, that such clerk should not have been a stipendiary writing clerk.

The above rule with respect to age has, under peculiar circumstances, been occasionally dispensed with by the judge.

Endeavour has been made, without success, to ascertain the date of, and authority for, these two rules.

Reference has been had to the muniment books of the Prerogative Court for the ordinances and decrees of Sir Richard Raines, Judge of the Prerogative Court, mentioned in the annexed statute, as made in 1686, but they do not appear to have been registered. It is conceived that they must have been rules and regulations to be observed in the conduct of suits, and not to the articling of clerks on admission of proctors, which acts are done only before the official principal of the Arches Court, or his surrogate, and are registered in the Arches Court.

A copy of the order of the honourable House of Commons relating to the articling and admission of notaries has been placed in the hands of the deputy-registrar of the faculties, for the point of making the return thereto.

(Signed) WILLIAM TOWNSEND, Registrar.

ARTICLING AND ADMISSION OF NOTARIES.

The articling and admission of notaries in England is now regulated by the Acts of Parliament passed in the forty-first year of Geo. 3, c. 79, in the third and fourth years of Wm. 4, c. 70, and in the sixth and seventh years of Vict. c. 90; and in pursuance of, and in accordance with the provisions of those statutes, different documents are required or used, varying according to the circumstances of the case of each applicant for admission.

The paper annexed, marked (A), contains the form of certificate required from two notaries, that the applicant is qualified, as therein stated, previous to his admission as a notary.

Under the Act 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 70, the Master of the Faculties is authorized to admit attorneys, solicitors, or proctors, general notaries to practise in places and districts where it is made to appear to him that there is not a sufficient number of notaries admitted, or to be admitted for the due convenience and accommodation of the district; and the Masters of the Faculties have made certain rules and regulations respecting such admissions, which are contained in the paper hereto annexed, marked (B).

No service is required previous to the admission of notaries to practise out of England (viz. in any of her Majesty's foreign territories, colonies, or dominions), or as registrar or proctor of any ecclesiastical court, or for any limited purpose; but in all cases a certificate as to the applicant's qualifications, according to the form of the paper annexed, marked (A), is required.

(Signed) L. C. MOORE, } Deputy
J. SHARPE, } Registrars.

(A)

To the Right Worshipful Sir John Dodson, Knight, Doctor of Laws, Commissary or Master of the Faculties, or his Surrogate.

We, whose names are hereunder written, do make known and certify unto you, A B, a literate person, now residing at , aged twenty-one years and upwards, to us well known, was and is a person of sober life and conversation, conformable to the doctrine and discipline of the Church of England as by law established,(a) and well affected to her Majesty Queen Victoria and the present constitution, both in church and state. And we do further certify, that the said A B is a person of known probity, and well skilled in affairs of notarial concern: Wherefore we do conceive him to be a person fully qualified to be created a notary public. In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands this day of in the year of our Lord 1844.

District Notary Act, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 70.

Persons applying to be made notaries under the provisions of the above Act must present a memorial to the Master of the Faculties, signed by the magistrates, bankers, merchants, and principal inhabitants of the place and district for which the application is made, shewing that there is not a sufficient number of notaries public admitted, or to be admitted, for the due convenience and accommodation of such district, the expediency of appointing one or more notaries therein, and recommending the person applying as a fit and proper person to be so appointed. This memorial must be left at the Faculty Office, together with the usual certificate of two notaries, the admission in one of the courts at Westminster, or as a proctor in an ecclesiastical court, and the last annual certificate.—September 1833.

Whereas caveats have been entered on behalf of notaries resident in several towns of England, against the admission of any person to practise in such towns under the provisions of the above Act: And whereas, without such caveats, the applications of any attorney, or solicitor, must necessarily have been decided on an ex parte representation, that there is not a sufficient number of notaries public for the due convenience and accommodation of the place for which the application is made:

It is Ordered—That in all cases where caveats are now entered, or shall hereafter be entered, the persons entering such caveats shall, when any such application is made for a faculty, have notice thereof in writing, and the papers relating to the application shall be detained for the period of one week from the date of such notice, in order that the person entering such caveat may send in such statement as he, or the person or persons on whose behalf it is entered, shall think fit. Provided nevertheless, that if such statement is not delivered into the office within the time before mentioned, the application for the faculty shall proceed as if no such caveat had been entered.

FURTHER REDUCTION OF CHANCERY FEES.

Friday, June 21, 1844.

The Right Honourable John Singleton, Lord Lyndhurst, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and consent of the Right Honourable Henry, Lord Langdale, Master of the Rolls, the Right Honourable Sir Lancelot Shadwell, Vice-Chancellor of England, the Right Honourable the Vice-Chancellor, Sir James Lewis Knight Bruce, and the Right Honourable the Vice-Chancellor, Sir James Wigram, doth hereby, in pursuance of an Act of Parliament passed in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for abolishing certain Offices of the High Court of Chancery in England," and in pursuance and execution of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, order and direct in manner following; that is to say,—

1. That for all office copies bespoke after the twenty-second day of June instant, the clerks of records and writs and their clerks shall, in lieu and instead of eightpence per folio, receivable by them under the order of Court, dated the twenty-second day of March last, receive and take the fee of sixpence per folio, and no more.

2. That for all office copies bespoke after the twenty-second day of June instant, the examiners of the High Court of Chancery and their clerks shall, in lieu of the fee of eightpence per folio, receivable by them under the order of Court dated the fifteenth day of April last, receive and take the fee of sixpence per folio, and no more.

OPERATION OF THE INSOLVENCY LAWS.

The feeling in the City upon the subject of the operation of the insolvency laws is becoming daily stronger. It is considered by the mass of creditors that if the quantity of experimental legislation relative to debtor and creditor be a means of obtaining protection, that desirable point could soon be arrived at, as three Bills are now in Parliament, and it has been the pet subject of benevolent and unemployed law lords for many years past, the humanity being particularly cheap, as the cost comes out of the pockets of the unprotected public. The mercantile classes say that great satisfaction has been given by the parliamentary proceedings to the debtor, to whom almost complete relief is granted against the claims of the creditor, the Legislature having, in their desire to shield unfortunate insolvents, given impunity to all but just those they profess to serve—the really unfortunate and honest. The opinion of the above-mentioned classes is, that the chances of the rogue are greater than those of the man of integrity. The honest man surrenders at once all he has; the rogue takes especial care to spend all, or to hide all, before he asks the Insolvent Debtors' Court or the Bankrupt Court to whitewash him, or to give him a vesting order, by which his person is for ever protected against his creditors. Both alike easily get their discharge, with this difference, that the honest man pays for his discharge the 100*l*. 200*l*. or 300*l*. that are left, the wreck of his estate; the rogue contrives to eat all, spend all, or hide all first. The honest man fares the worse by the wealth he surrenders, which he is not, in fact, obliged to surrender, there being no practical machinery by which his affairs are or can be inquired into. Lord Brougham's Act provides no funds by which official assignees are to be paid for the labour of examination. Some gentlemen have, from a sense of duty, made inquiry at their own expense; others pass the accounts as a matter of course; and further, when the miserable wreck is safely lodged in court, there it remains, for the Act has no provision for its distribution among the creditors. As evidence of the truth of these remarks, the men of business in the City say 100 cases of insolvents' petitions have been adjudicated by one commissioner; the amount of debts was 100,000*l*. the amount of assets 390*l*. of which sum 190*l*. was furnished by one individual; he probably was the honest one, and he might as well have done as the others did—spent all, or hidden all, and left in court, as they did, just two pounds. Of thirty other cases (not selected) the amount of debts was 30,000*l*. and the assets 90*l*. or something about one halfpenny in the pound. A short time since, an unfortunate insolvent, who had a pension of 250*l*. and usually earned 130*l*. in a year in addition, and had been living at the rate of 1,000*l*. until he had incurred debts to the amount of 8,000*l*. besought relief under the late Act, which was granted on condition that he should pay into court 130*l*. a year as long as his income was 380*l*. or a proportionate sum if it should be less. He will have small motive to earn anything wherewith to pay his creditors, and in point of fact he will not pay one farthing, but he will retire to a distance, where no one will find it worth while to follow him, live in idleness, and enjoy his pension of 250*l*. a year. In fact, those sums ordered to be paid into court, by the Court, are in general but nominal; a first or second instalment is paid, and then the matter drops. It would be highly instructive, in such a case as the above, and in many similar cases, to hunt out the condition of the creditors, and to learn if some who had ministered to the luxuries of this extravagant man were not now reduced to absolute want, while he enjoys untouched his whole income of 250*l*. per annum. A present distinguished Commissioner of Bankruptcy, in the west of England, might well say he heard much of the unfortunate debtor and his family, but little of the unfortunate creditor and his family.

All the trading community, with the exception of a few leviathan establishments, whose rapacity and oppression render them most disastrous nuisances, complain bitterly of the present state of things. They declare that they are living in a state of outlawry, and as was said by one witness before the late commission, "If his debtors, amounting to many hundreds, were one and all to offer him 2s. 6d. in the pound on their debts, he had no help but to take it, and do the same himself." And he might have added, "Go into the union house, or banish himself to the colonies, one among the many hundred victims of the diseased and misplaced humanity of law makers, who, incurring no risk themselves in their experimental recreation, confiscate the property of industrious and frugal capitalists to the amount of many millions a year." Laws pinching enough, say the citizens, have been applied to remedy the evils of pauperism, but the cost of paupers—the ignorant, and oppressed, and neglected of the community—is nothing, compared with the drain on the national energies caused by insolvents, the idle, the extravagant, the gambling, the dishonest of the educated and well-cared for of the middle classes.

THE IRISH STATE TRIALS.

It was generally expected that judgment would have been given yesterday, in the House of Lords, in the writ of error case of Reg. v. O'Connell and Others. It appears, however, that the replies of the judges to the eleven "queries" have not yet been received. Chief Justice Tindal remained in town on Thursday, not to pronounce the judgment of his brethren and himself (as was erroneously stated by some of our contemporaries), but to prepare draft answers to the queries, to be forwarded to the other judges on circuit, who attended the argument in the Lords. As some days must elapse before the replies of the judges, expressing either their acquiescence in or their dissent from the draft answers, can be received, the judgment is of course deferred.

QUESTIONS OF LAW PROPOUNDED TO THE LEARNED JUDGES.

"The attention of my Lords the Queen's Judges is requested to the record and proceedings hereto subjoined, with reference to the following questions:

"1. Are all, or any, and if any, which of the counts in the indictment bad in law, so that, if such count or counts stood alone in the indictment, no judgment against the defendants could properly be entered upon them?

"2. Is there any, and if any, what defect in the findings of the jury upon the trial of the said indictment, or in the entering of such findings?

"3. Is there any sufficient ground for reversing the judgment by reason of any defect in the indictment, or of the findings, or entering of the findings of the jury upon the said indictment?

"4. Is there any sufficient ground to reverse the judgment by reason of the matters stated in the pleas in abatement, or any of them, or in the judgments upon such pleas?

"5. Is there any sufficient ground for reversing the judgment on account of the continuing the trial in the vacation, or of the order of the Court for that purpose?

"6. Is there any sufficient ground for reversing the judgment on account of the judgments of the Court overruling and disallowing the challenges to the array, or any or either of them; or of the matters stated in such challenges?

"7. Is there sufficient ground to reverse the judgment by reason of any defect in the entry of continuances from the said trial to the said 15th day of April, regard being also had to the appearance of the defendants on the said last-mentioned day?

"8. Is there any sufficient ground to reverse or vary the judgment on account of the sentences, or any, or either of them, passed on the respective defendants, regard being had particularly to the recognizances required, and to the period of imprisonment dependent upon the entering into such recognizances?

"9. Is there any sufficient ground to reverse the judgment on account of the judgments on the assignments of error coram nobis, or any or either of them, or of the matters stated in such assignments of error, or any or either of them?

"10. Is there any sufficient ground for reversing the judgment by reason of its not containing any entry as to the verdicts of acquittal?

"11. In an indictment consisting of counts A, B, C, where the verdict is guilty of all generally, and the counts A and B are good, and the count C is bad, the judgment being, that the defendant, for the offences aforesaid, be fined and imprisoned, which judgment would be sufficient in point of law, if confined expressly to counts A and B—can such judgment be reversed on a writ of error? Will it make any difference whether the punishment be discretionary, as above suggested, or a punishment fixed by law?"

COURT OF EXCHEQUER,

Guildhall, Friday, July 12.

(Before Sir F. POLLOCK, Chief Baron, and a Special Jury.)

The CHIEF BARON intimated to the Bar, at the opening of the court, that, in consequence of the arrears of cases ready for hearing, he had it in view, after circuit, to hear any cases that were more particularly pressing, in the course of the vacation.

His lordship also took occasion to observe, that he had, both when at the bar and since called to the bench, occasion to notice how very severely the common jurors were inconvenienced by the present arrangement of postponing their cases until after those of the special juries. To remedy this, he had determined that, for the future, the common jury cases should be disposed of previous to the special jury lists being entered upon.

NOTICE.

Common Pleas Chambers, July, 1844.

The following regulations for transacting the business of these chambers will be strictly observed till further notice:—

Acknowledgments of deeds by married ladies will not be taken till the other business is disposed of.

Original summonses only to be placed on the file.

Summonses adjourned by the judge heard at ten o'clock.

Summonses of the day called at five minutes past ten, numbered, and heard by the judge in their regular order.

One summons only to be attended in the judge's room at the same time, whether attended by counsel or otherwise.

Counsel at two o'clock. The name of the cause to be put on the counsel-file, and counsel in one cause only admitted at the same time.

Affidavits upon ex parte applications for the judge's order (except orders to hold to bail) to be left the day before the orders are applied for, except under special circumstances.

The affidavit to be properly indorsed with the names of the parties and the nature of the application.

At the Court at Buckingham Palace, the 10th day of July, 1844, present the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, in Council, her Majesty in Council was this day pleased to declare the Right Hon. William Lord Heytesbury, Lieutenant-General and General Governor of that part of the United Kingdom called Ireland.

DOWNING-STREET, JULY 1.—The Queen has been pleased to nominate and appoint Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir Henry Hardinge, Knight Commander of the Most Hon. Military Order of the Bath, to be a Knight Grand Cross of the said Most Hon. Order.

DOWNING-STREET, JULY 9.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Major James Agnew to be Colonial Secretary and Registrar for the Island of Dominica.

The Queen has also been pleased to appoint George Heylizer Aertsen Porter, esq. to be Colonial Secretary and Registrar for the Virgin Islands.

WHITEHALL, July 3.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed H. C. Margetts, of March, in the county of Cambridge, gent., to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

WHITEHALL, July 8.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed T. J. Maltby, of Cheshunt, in the county of Hertford, gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

PIRATED WORKS.—It was formerly the practice, previously to the passing of the new Copyright Act, for the Customs authorities to permit passengers arriving from the Continent and America to bring in their baggage one copy of each pirated edition of English works, for their private use, on certain conditions, viz. that their names were written on the fly-leaf of each book, and that such works were not new; but had evidently been in use for a considerable period, but since the passing of that Act, prohibiting the importation of such pirated editions for any purpose, or under any circumstances, the officers have been instructed to detain all such books found in the baggage and effects of passengers, and to burn or otherwise effectually destroy them. In several instances during the winter, noblemen and gentlemen arriving from the Continent, in whose baggage pirated works were found, and which had been in their possession for several years, applied to the Lords of the Treasury for their release, and were, in every instance, informed, that it was impossible to comply with their request, as such books had, by the regulations, been immediately destroyed. The commissioners of customs have recently issued an order, directing, with reference to the detention of books, under the 24th section of the Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47, relating to copyrights, that all works which may in future be seized under the law above referred to, be retained at the several stations at which they may have been seized; that the whole of the works so retained be included in one seizure-note, to be prepared quarterly at each station, and forwarded to the Queen's warehouse-keeper, for the purpose of obtaining the Board's order for prosecution; and that the books be destroyed at the respective stations at the expiration of a month from the date of such order, unless notice of claim be given, in conformity with the provisions of the 76th section of the Act 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 53. The meaning or extent of this right of claim is not generally understood by the public, or by persons whose books are detained, and which they may be desirous of keeping in their possession. The intention of the Copyright Act has been decided by the law officers of the Crown, to be for the protection of the proprietors of the copyrights, and that therefore, as the law stands, they, and they only, are entitled to claim all piracies of their works. Therefore, such persons as may be anxious to retain pirated editions should make interest with the proprietor of the copyright, who may claim them, to do so, and obtain them for them. This recent order, extending the time to three months previously to their being destroyed, will give the owners of these works time and opportunity of prosecuting the claim for their release, which previously did not exist.

SWEARING IN OF QUEEN'S COUNSEL AND SERJEANTS-AT-LAW.—At a quarter before ten o'clock on Wednesday morning the following members of the Bar were sworn in as Queen's Counsel before the Lord Chancellor, in his lordship's private room in the House of Lords; namely, John Henry Hodson, esq. of the Oxford circuit; Charles H. Whitehurst, esq. of the Midland circuit; John William Alexander, esq. of the Oxford circuit; Robert Charles Hildyard, esq. Northern circuit, and who is also Queen's Counsel for the Duchy of Lancaster; J. Parker, esq.; and the following gentlemen were also sworn in before the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas as Serjeants-at-Law:—Edward Balfour, esq.; John Alexander Kinslake, esq. of the Western circuit, and Charles Chadwick Jones, esq. of the Home circuit. In consequence of the swearing-in taking place out of term, the newly-made Serjeants were not invested with the coif, as is the case when the promotion takes place in term. After the usual introductions of the learned Serjeants by the Lord Chancellor to their learned brothers, the Judges of the Common Pleas, the rings were presented by the newly-made Serjeants to the Judges of the Common Pleas, also to the Lord Chancellor, and through the noble and learned lord to her Majesty; the latter were of a very massive description, of pure gold, with a blue enamelled ground, on which, according to ancient custom, is inscribed the motto "Paribus Legibus;" the rings to the Serjeants and the counsel, with whom the newly-made members of the coif used to be engaged, are plain gold rings, bearing, however, the same motto.

THE PROPERTY TAX.—NEW PROVISIONS.—The Government Bill to continue compositions for assessed taxes, and to amend certain laws relating to duties under the management of the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes, has been printed. It contains three provisions in regard to the property-tax, which are embraced in the general title of the measure. By the third section it appears that there are existing difficulties respecting the collection of assessed taxes, and the duties under the Property-Tax Act, in divers privileged and other places, by reason of doubts as to whether such places are extra-parochial or included in any place for which separate assessments for duties have been usually made, and it is proposed that the Commissioners of Stamps should be empowered to direct within what districts and parishes privileged and other places shall be rated to the assessed and property-tax. Under the next section, any omission in previous assessments in privileged places may be supplied. And, in the two following, any thing omitted by the commissioners, or that may be hereafter omitted, may be ordered and shall be as binding as if made at the time when it should have been made; and, further, that any person selected by the commissioners to be an assessor—such refusals having greatly impeded the execution of the act—shall be liable to be fined 10*l*., which fine is to be recovered and applied in the same way as any other fine under the said Acts.

ACTIONS FOR GAMING DISCONTINUANCE BILL.—A Bill further to stay proceedings in certain actions under the provisions of several statutes for the prevention of excessive gaming, and to prevent any similar proceedings being taken under those statutes during such further limited time, has been prepared and brought in by Viscount Palmerston and Mr. Tuffnell, M.P. By the first clause, qui tam actions for the recovery of gaming penalties are further suspended until the end of the next session of Parliament—that is, we presume, until about the month of August 1845. The second clause enacts, that in any case where actions are prosecuted contrary to the provisions of this Act, a verdict is to be found for the defendants. The Bill is, we believe, awaiting a second reading on the table of the House of which Lord Palmerston is so distinguished a member.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT ABOLISHED IN NEW SOUTH WALES.—The Legislative Assembly of New South Wales [composed of 36 members, of whom 24 are elected as representatives by the people, and the remainder nominated by the Crown, according to the Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 76, passed 30th July, 1842] met, in pursuance of a proclamation, for the first time, on August 1, 1843. After the necessary preliminaries of swearing in the members, the session was formally opened by the Governor for the despatch of business and the welfare of the colony. The first tangible measure which they passed had reference to the prevention of the waste and destruction under process of law, power of sale, or other remedy, of the property of solvent debtors, who might be placed in temporary difficulty. The main provision of the Bill enabled a debtor, with the consent of three-fourths in value of his creditors, on adequate proof of solvency, to procure letters of license, which should have the effect of staying all executions; another provision took cognizance of any fraud or frauds which the debtor should perpetrate by oath on his creditors; and the 26th clause declares that imprisonment for debt shall be abolished from and after the 31st of March, 1844.—Sydney paper.

JOINT-STOCK BANKS.—The Government have followed up their line of policy with respect to public companies, &c. by bringing in a Bill "to regulate joint-stock banks in England," which contains forty-five clauses. It enacts, amongst other provisions, the following:—Joint-stock banks hereafter established must conform to this Act, and no more than six persons will be allowed to carry on the trade of bankers in England, under any agreement or covenant of co-partnership entered into after the 6th of May last passed, unless by virtue of letters patent, to be granted by her Majesty. The proposed company must petition for a charter, to be granted on the favourable report of the Board of Trade. A deed of settlement, containing provisions for certain special purposes, must be prepared. No company to commence business until the deed is executed, and at least one-half of the shares paid up. Incorporation is not to limit the shareholders' liability. All bills of exchange and promissory notes made, accepted, or endorsed, on behalf of a company, must be signed by two directors. The 43rd clause enacts that existing companies may be brought under the operation—that is, "take the benefit" of this Act.

STIPENDIARY JUDGES OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.—Mr. Wallace has recently obtained a return, shewing the number of stipendiary judges in England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland, and the cost of such judicial establishments to the country annually. We have made a summary of the details given by the document in question, from which it appears that the gross total number of judges in the United Kingdom (both superior and inferior) amounts to 363, and the salaries received by them to the annual sum of 402,032*l*. England employs 22 judges of superior, and 123 of inferior courts, paying to the former 123,577*l*. and to the latter 85,399*l*. Scotland employs 13 judges of superior, and 81 of inferior courts, paying to the former 42,500*l*. and to the latter 34,470*l*. Ireland employs 16 superior, and 108 inferior judges, paying to the former 63,000*l*. and to the latter 53,082*l*. Thus England pays altogether an annual sum of 208,976*l*. for 145 judges; Ireland, 116,086*l*. for 124 judges; and Scotland, 76,970*l*. for 94 judges. If we strike an average, it will be found that each superior judge receives a salary, in England, of 5,617*l*.; in Scotland, one of 3,269*l*.; and in Ireland, one of 3,937*l*.; whilst the average salary of each inferior judge is, in England, about 698*l*.; in Scotland, 425*l*.; and in Ireland, about 491*l*. Of the sum of 208,976*l*. expended on judges by England, the Court of Chancery receives 33,000*l*.; the Court of Queen's Bench, 28,000*l*.; the Court of Common Pleas, 28,000*l*.; the Court of Exchequer, 27,000*l*.; the Judge of the Admiralty Court, 4,000*l*.; and the Judge of the Prerogative Court, 3,577*l*. Of the inferior courts, the Court of Bankruptcy receives 33,600*l*.; the Insolvent Debtors' Court, 6,500*l*.; the stipendiary magistrates of the 13 metropolitan police courts, 23,200*l*.; and the revising barristers, 14,700*l*. (70 at 210*l*. each), &c.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

THE LAW AMENDMENT SOCIETY.

The annual general meeting of this society was held on the 19th ult. at the rooms of the society in Regent-street, at which the first report of the council was read, as follows:—

REPORT.

In presenting their first report, the council consider it will not be expected that they should on the present occasion enter into an elaborate view of the state and progress of the society. It may be sufficient to mention that the society was declared to be formed on the 2nd of March last, and that it can only be considered to have been in operation since the 18th of May, when its present office was taken. Under these circumstances the council consider that it has received all the support that might have been reasonably expected.

Its ordinary members already exceed one hundred, among whom are to be found many persons of great eminence in all branches of the law, and also many distinguished persons not connected with the legal profession.

The council have great pleasure in stating, that from that profession the society has met with far greater encouragement than was ever anticipated; and they feel confident that as the institution becomes known, it will be joined by a sufficient number of persons not in the profession.

The council have the satisfaction of acquainting the society, that for the present year the receipts from subscriptions already exceed the estimated necessary expenditure.

Short as has been the period of the existence of this society, the council are able to state that many important subjects have been referred for their consideration, and they have every reason to be satisfied with the mode in which they have already been treated by several of the committees into which the society has been formed, from whose proceedings they expect the most practical and satisfactory results.

The council have only further to state, that they believe that the foundation has been laid of a great and useful society, fully capable of attaining the important objects which were contemplated on its formation. They are sanguine that a vast store of information on all subjects connected with the amendment of the law, may be brought together; that these subjects may be usefully discussed, and sound opinions upon them formed and diffused.

But they beg leave to enforce on all members of this society the necessity for individual exertion in furtherance of its objects.

DENBIGHSHIRE AND FLINTSHIRE LAW ASSOCIATION.

At a general committee meeting of this society, held at Ruthin, on Tuesday, the 2nd inst. it was resolved to petition Parliament against the clause in the Poor Law Bill now before the House of Commons, by which it is proposed to authorize clerks of unions, whether attorneys or not, to act as such before magistrates; and also against the clauses in the County Courts Bill to prevent attorneys acting as advocates in those courts as matter of right, and fixing the amount of costs at the sums there mentioned. And it was further resolved, that the secretary should communicate with the secretary of the Manchester Association, for the purpose of co-operation in carrying on opposition to the above clauses of the said Bills. J. LEWIS, Hon. Secretary.

CORRESPONDENCE.

POWER OF QUARTER SESSIONS TO QUASH AN INDICTMENT.

Case of Reg. v. Wilson and Others.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Your leading article in your last number on this subject being materially inaccurate, and the case one of general importance in the two questions of law which it raises, I take leave to put you right as to the facts on which these questions arise, as stated in the indictment, now removed by certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench.

And first, that Court has gone one step further than you state, for it has seen the order (or rather judgment) of Quarter Sessions quashing this indictment, and in Easter Term granted a rule nisi requiring the justices of Gloucestershire and the defendants to shew cause why that judgment should not be set aside as void in law, for excess of jurisdiction; and that rule stands enlarged for argument to Michaelmas Term next.

But, for the indictment itself, you are in error as to its form; the first and third counts (of which with the second it consists) are framed against Wilson and ten others, the same and not "different" defendants, indicted by the same names and additions, &c.

The second count is against two only of the same eleven defendants charged in the other counts.

The first count, on which the objection of duplicity was raised by Mr. Greaves at the Quarter Sessions, charges all the defendants with forcible entry into the prosecutor's dwelling-house, situate to wit at Cheltenham, in the county of Gloucester, and with an assault upon him and his children, and with imprisoning him to wit at Gloucester, in said county, being one continuing transaction.

In point of law, therefore, there is no pretence for saying that this indictment is bad on either of the grounds mentioned, and the case cited in your article, Reg. v. Kingston and Others (and relied upon by Mr. Greaves at the Sessions), is an authority exactly in support of this view of the matter. If the indictment were really bad in law, no good could arise from pursuing it; but I felt that the refusal to hear me in support of the indictment in answer to Mr. Greaves, and the quashing of it by the Court wherein the defendants appeared on their recognizances to take their trial, was an insult to the Crown, and to the humble individual then prosecuting for the Crown, and not more consonant with law or public justice than with that common sense which is the foundation of all true law.

The questions thus raised for the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench are these, viz.:—

1st. Has the Court of Quarter Sessions power to quash a good indictment found at a preceding court, and upon which the defendants were bound over to appear and PLEAD and take their trial more than twenty days before the court in question (see the statute on this subject, which lays down the law distinctly, viz. 60 Geo 3, and 1 Geo. 4, c. 4, s. 3)?

2nd. Has the Court of Quarter Sessions power to come to such a judgment, summarily crushing a public prosecution for riot upon the motion of the defendant's counsel, hearing him alone in argument, and refusing to hear the prosecutor at all in answer?

If this power should be confirmed to the Court of Magistrates, it will make them FINAL judges of the law, without argument, arising upon every record before them, thus cheating the Crown of its writ of error, and the Court of Queen's Bench of its ancient appellate jurisdiction in all such cases. The innovation, therefore, comes from Mr Greaves and Mr. Serjeant Ludlow (for whose errors, even, I entertain a sincere respect), and not from, Mr. Editor,

Your obedient Servant,

AUG. NEWTON.

STAMP-DUTIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Portsea, June 29, 1844.

SIR,—Your subscribers, I am sure, will be obliged by an explanatory comment on the case, Brown v. Pegg, reported in your last week's number. The Court observed that a deed-stamp, "at least," became necessary. Surely there can be no room for contending that the whole ad valorem duty was payable as on an original mortgage, in spite of the 3 Geo. 4, passed, it would appear, expressly to give relief in cases of the kind? And as to the deed stamp being necessary, the holding of this goes to render incorrect what has lately been almost the universal practice of the Profession, authorized, as I believe they conceived, principally by one of the very cases cited in Brown v. Pegg, to shew such practice to be erroneous. By Doe dem. Bartley v. Grey, the paying on transfers of mortgages with a farther sum, advanced only the ad valorem duty on the further sum, with the 1*l.* progressive. There does not seem any unusual point in Brown v. Pegg to call for the deed-stamp but the conveyance of the fee: probably, however, it was on this point the Court held the document to require the deed-stamp at least, but it has been held that the conveyance of the fee would not render requisite stamp-duty as on a fresh mortgage.

Yours truly,

A. CHAMBERLAIN.

P.S.—Since writing the above I have seen Mr. Austin's letter. He also feels surprised at the decision on various grounds. Certainly it seems doubtful if the 3 Geo. 4 imposes a progressive duty; but in Doe dem. Bartley v. Grey "progressive" was held to be payable.

NEW POOR LAW BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I inclose you an extract of a letter written by me to the Member of Parliament for this borough, whose agent I am. I would suggest that other solicitors who are agents should write to their members in a similar manner. This, I think, would have as much effect as a petition. Yours, &c.

Christchurch. JAMES DRUITT.

"I wish to call your attention to the Poor Law Amendment Act now before the House. The 60th section provides that officers of Poor Law Unions may to a certain extent act as attorneys. This, it appears to me, would be a great injustice to attorneys and solicitors, who, before they can commence practice, have to pay about 150*l.* to Government as stamp duty, and who still pay a heavy annual tax as a certificate duty, and submit to many regulations from which other classes of professional men are exempt. And it would be inexpedient as regards the public, since it would allow persons to act as attorneys who have given no security to the public for their respectability and knowledge of the law, and would be exempt from the surveillance, to which attorneys are at all times subject, of the courts of law whose officers they are.

"The 34th section also removes the duty of fixing the amount due to attorneys for business done for any parish from parties who must be, to persons who may not be, competent to decide on the proper sums to be allowed, and must, therefore, fail of giving satisfaction either to the attorney or his employer.

"The law relating to attorneys was, as was understood, finally settled in the last session of Parliament, and, leaving any question of justice, it must be inexpedient to disturb the principle of that law for a saving admitted on all hands to be very small."

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Allow me to call your attention to an error in your observations respecting the Central Criminal Court, which appeared in the LAW TIMES of Saturday last, copied from some of the morning papers. In the first place, a meeting of the Bar of that court has not taken place, as stated; and, in the second, the subject for deliberation was a practice more mischievous, if possible, than that of fraudulent attorneys, namely, the practice of the turnkeys and other officers of the gaol of Newgate, of sometimes recommending attorneys to the prisoners and their friends, and, at other times, counsel, without the intervention of attorneys, whose functions they actually usurp, by offering to provide prisoners with brief and counsel for 1*l.* 3s. 6d.!! inclusive! The meeting was called by myself, with the concurrence of several other counsel, and was intended to be held on the last day of the June Sessions; but on the unavoidable absence of several whose presence was very desirable, it was postponed till this day, when a similar cause has again prevented it. I trust, however, that it will not be much longer delayed.

I will here add, that several cases in proof were submitted to the Lord Mayor, as chief commissioner of the court, a day or two after the commencement of the last Sessions, but I have not heard of any steps to stop an evil which, if continued, as you will readily perceive, will have a more pernicious effect than if former abuses had been allowed to continue.

I shall be happy to furnish you any other information should you require it.

I remain, Sir,

Yours, very obediently,

Temple Chambers, S. C. HORRY.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

A LANCASHIRE ATTORNEY has transmitted to us the following remarks on the subject of Law Associations:—

I have for many years been of opinion that the "Incorporated Law Society," notwithstanding that many country practitioners are members of its body, pursues a course which, if not directly opposed, is at all events injurious to the interests of the country attorneys. The society holds itself up to Parliament, the judges, and the law officers of the Crown, as the representative of the Profession of the kingdom at large, and gains credence for this character; the result of which is, that in all law reforms and alterations the "Incorporated Law Society" is consulted, and, if its approbation is obtained, the Legislature, the judges, and the public at large are led to suppose the reform or alteration proposed is practical, beneficial, and satisfactory.

I remember when the "Incorporated Law Society" was first established; I remember the promises it held out of giving a new status to the Profession of an Attorney—of purging its practice from blemishes—of suppressing dishonourable dealing—of watching over its interests with parental and fostering care: in short, of restoring to its former high standard a Profession calumniated, despised, and trodden upon, because a few dishonourable, pettifogging practitioners, whose misdeeds were continually held up to the public as specimens of the dealing of the whole body, had defiled its fair fame. At this time I was but a young articled clerk, but I well remember, in the fervour of my zeal for my Profession, with what delight I hailed the institution—with what pleasure I contemplated the time when I should be permitted to enrol myself among its members—when I might be permitted to add my humble exertions and contributions towards the support of so noble and worthy a plan of regeneration. I remember, also, being surprised, perhaps a little piqued, at the sound sense and practical experience of my master, whose age and insight into the dealings of the world had taken away somewhat of the freshness and confidence which youth regards them, and had taught him to look deeper than the mere surface. Notwithstanding that he, an honourable and respected member of his Profession, was frequently solicited by one of the leading men in the formation of the society to become a member, he firmly refused to join it. "Depend upon it," said he, "the scheme will answer well for the London, but will be destruction to the country attorneys. They (the country attorneys) may join the society, but all its movements will be directed by London attorneys; and, rely upon it, they will take care of themselves, even to the injury of the country practitioners." How truly prophetic was his view! Before I was eligible to become a member I had seen enough to discover the soundness of the opinion of my good old master; and subsequent experience has convinced me, by palpable proof, that "self" forms a most important ingredient in all the operations of the "Incorporated Law Society," and, consequently, I refused repeated solicitations from high quarters to become a member. I cordially join in the regret of the Yorkshire Law Society (which appears in their Resolutions advertised in your columns of the 4th inst.) "to observe the Profession in London continually endeavouring to turn all reforms of the law to their own immediate advantage, in a manner most unjust to the public resident in the provinces."

"When self the wavering balance shakes,
It's rarely right adjusted."

But what are the country attorneys to do to counteract this influence, so unfairly exercised? For a reply to this question I have great pleasure in referring to the advertising columns of your excellent journal. The Yorkshire Law Society has propounded a scheme which will, if properly carried out, present an admirable antidote to the baneful influence I have alluded to.

It seems to me that the plan there suggested will result in restoring that proper representative of the interests of the country attorneys of which they have been, since the establishment of the Incorporated Law Society, deprived. I trust I am not too sanguine in thinking that the machinery is for the most part ready, and only needs putting in motion to carry the project into full operation. In almost all the principal towns of the kingdom local law societies exist. I would suggest that all these, within each county (without at all interfering with their local establishments) unite in one general county association, which should hold its general meetings twice a year in the assize-town of the county during the assizes. This plan would insure a regular attendance of a great number of its members from all parts of the county, who would necessarily be attendant on the assizes. The county associations would easily combine themselves into one grand national law association; the head-quarters of which should be either at Birmingham (as being near the centre of the kingdom), Manchester, or Liverpool, with all of which places the communication by railway presents ready access from all parts of the kingdom; and with which association the county and town associations might be in constant communication. The details of this plan would be easily arranged; and I feel confident that it would work well for the interests of the country attorneys; it would establish a means at present wanting, and which the Incorporated Law Society has never attempted to supply, of mutual communication, co-operation, and support among the country practitioners throughout the kingdom. I trust this letter may attract the attention, and be worthy the consideration of some of your correspondents more able than I am to frame and organize such a plan, and will not be unworthy of your powerful and generous advocacy.

Thus far my remarks have been confined to the interests of the Profession, but I am also persuaded that such an association would be pregnant with consequences beneficial to the public at large. I believe there is not one class of the community of this kingdom, "from the king upon his throne to the captive in the dungeon," who has not occasion, at some period of his life, to confide the management or arrangement of his dearest interests to some member of my Profession; we have affairs of mighty importance committed to our management and care, the issue of which depends altogether upon our honour, integrity, and skill; the arrangement of family matters of the greatest delicacy. We have conflicting interests to reconcile, invasion of the rights of property to repel; to protect the poor and weak against the rich and powerful; to wrest the wrongfully acquired possession from the grasp of the oppressor; in all these, and in numberless other instances, we have to receive and maintain the most unbounded confidence of our clients. The experience of every professional man, and of every client, will testify that we are the depositaries of secrets, the revelation of which, while it would be of the utmost importance and value to some, would be destruction to those who have intrusted them to our keeping. Consider the number of all grades in our Profession, and let me ask, with pardonable exultation and pride, when is this confidence abused? when are these secrets betrayed? I speak not in disparagement of the Bar when I say that the responsibility and the confidence we are called upon to sustain are tenfold greater than any which is imposed upon them; let it not be forgotten that it is through us that the client's case is made known to the members of the Bar.

Are not then the public, the community at large, greatly interested in maintaining a tide of high moral and professional integrity—in supporting and exalting, rather than degrading and depressing, a body of men on whom, and upon whose characters, they are so much dependent, and who are more calumniated and maligned (with less reason) than any other profession I am aware of? There cannot be a doubt in the mind of any considerate or thinking man upon the subject. A greater misfortune, I may say a greater curse, cannot befall any country than the reduction of those who practise the profession of an attorney to a state of degradation and decay.

I entertain no doubt that the association I have suggested would have a most beneficial tendency upon the character and practice of the Profession at large, and as such I think the public are as much interested in its formation and success as the Profession themselves.

We have received the following useful information from an experienced correspondent, who vouches for the fact. We publish the communication for the purpose of keeping the attention of the Law Societies fixed upon the subject, and to aid them in their researches.

It appears that the system of sending letters by non-professionals, requiring payment of debts, and threatening proceedings in case of default, is becoming very general throughout the country, and, inclosed herewith, I send you one that has been used and was brought to me a few days since by the poor man to whom it is addressed, residing in this neighbourhood.

I find that many sheriffs' officers, petty-constables, and certain officious Caleb Quotems in this county, and also in Suffolk, are the parties who generally hunt after this description of business, holding out to creditors the certain prospect of being able to collect debts for them, professing to undertake it upon the principle of "No cure no pay," and charging 2s. 6d. in the pound only upon the amount received.

There are some, however, of the first-named class, who are more wily than others, and whom I have known to obtain from the unsuspecting tradesman, what have been called "instructions," to which the latter has subscribed his name, but which have afterwards turned out to be an authority or retainer to take legal proceedings; this has been subsequently addressed and handed over to some not very scrupulous attorney, to whom the said sheriff's officer acts as jackal, and the consequence has been, that the unfortunate creditor, at a subsequent period, learns to his dismay, that proceedings which he never contemplated taking have been going on against a debtor that he would not have expended one shilling about; that such debtor is sent to gaol, which is a necessary part of the proceeding, that the officer may have his share; and by way of a finish, the creditor is presented with a bill of costs from the "respectable" attorney, whom he had never seen, for those proceedings, and an intimation is also generally given that payment must be prompt. Inquiry is then made, and it is found that the "instructions" turn out to be "an authority to take all necessary legal proceedings," and the creditor has no other means of getting out of the difficulty than by paying.

I have known many cases of this description, and will communicate with you further on this subject at another time, and I trust the publicity you are weekly giving it in your columns will serve as a caution to tradesmen to employ none but respectable professional men, until other means are found to put a stop to so disreputable and dishonest a mode of proceeding.

Suggestions are always acceptable. The following, from a valued correspondent, will be probably adopted, should occasion call for it.

We are greatly indebted to you for your watchfulness over our interests, so flagrantly assailed by the clause in the Poor-Law Amendment Bill, permitting clerks to boards of guardians to practise as attorneys at Petty and Special Sessions. Feeling the injustice of such an attack on a body of men who are taxed so heavily for the privileges allowed them, whose profits are yearly diminishing by being distributed among a greater number of competitors, and who have to struggle on for years before they attain any thing like a permanent standing, while during this probationary period the payment of their annual certificate-duty is a heavy pressure on numbers whose only fortune is their education, I would gladly respond to your call to every member of the profession to bestir himself, with a view to procuring the expunging of the obnoxious clause. But, in a district where no Law Society has been established, an individual's voice is powerless, and his complaint, after being, perhaps, poured into the ear of a brother of the profession, dies away in utter hopelessness. Now, is there no remedy for such a state of things? Law Societies cannot flourish, I think, except in the large towns. But cannot the LAW TIMES supply the want? In the present case, suppose that a form of a petition to Parliament were prepared by you and inserted in your columns, with a request that as many of your readers as acquiesced in its prayer would send you an authority to subscribe their names. I have no doubt that such a respectable array of signatures might in this way be obtained, as would command attention and find ready support in both the Houses. The expense might be defrayed by each person sending a penny postage stamp in his letter of authority.

We readily give insertion to the following letter. Its inquiries are within the legitimate purpose of the LAW TIMES. The subject is the "Recovery of Small Tenements."

Notwithstanding you have wisely declined answering legal questions, yet your readers, I think, have been permitted to draw the attention of those learned in the law, to the construction to be put upon recent statutes and rules of court, and acting on that impression, I have made bold to draw attention to the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, which is intituled "An Act to facilitate the recovery of Possession of Tenements, after due determination of the Tenancy." And, if any of your learned contributors would make this statute the subject of a few practical notes or observations, the Profession generally, and the magistrates in particular, will, I feel confident, consider themselves much indebted to you.

I have been induced to address you on this subject for the cogent reason, that the magistrates in different counties have taken different views of this statute; one class contending that they have jurisdiction in every case where the rent is under 20*l.* while another class conceive that they have no jurisdiction where the title to the premises becomes a matter in dispute. On perusing the statute alluded to, the words "landlord and tenant" are to be found in almost every clause, while the words in the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, are totally different; so that if it had been intended that the magistrates should have jurisdiction in every case where an action of ejectment was maintainable, the words in both statutes would, it is presumed, have been the same. Let me, however, take the following case, and ask, whether it comes within the jurisdiction of the magistrates:—

A, the landlord of a house worth less than 20*l.* a year, dies, having executed a will, the validity of which is disputed, and the tenant has had his tenancy determined by notice from the heir and the devisee. The objections being, 1st. That the testator was imbecile when the will was executed; 2nd, That if capable to make a will, the words used by the testator were not sufficient to pass the premises to the devisee.

Independent of these two questions, others arise, viz. there is an outstanding term, and the claimant has thought proper to join the widow in the notice, conceiving that she was a proper party from being entitled to dower.

The questions to which I should like to draw the attention of your legal contributors, are,

1st. Have the magistrates jurisdiction where the title is in dispute?

2nd. If so, ought they to require the claimant to adduce the same evidence as he would be required to give in an action of ejectment?

3rd. Must the claimant have the legal estate?

4th. Can he recover where there is an outstanding term?

5th. Does the joinder of the widow (who, it is conceived, can have no interest before assignment of dower), invalidate the joint claim made pursuant to the Act?

6th. Where the claimant is only one of three tenants in common, would a claim for the entire premises be invalid?

7th. Must the person against whom the summons is issued open the case, and shew "reasonable cause why possession should not be given" (sec. 1), or who ought to open the case?

A subscriber of age and experience in the Profession has transmitted to us the following commentary upon the recent decision relating to stamps on transfers of mortgages:—

The surprise and alarm expressed by your correspondent, Mr. Austin, at the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, in the case of Brown v. Pegg, as reported in your paper of the 22nd ult. must be felt, I conceive, very generally by the Profession. For my own part, I thought there was no question more clearly settled than that the transfer of a mortgage, with an additional advance of money to the mortgagor, bearing the ad valorem stamp on the additional advance only, without the deed-stamp of 35s. was valid in law; and that, notwithstanding the deed should contain a new covenant for payment of the gross mortgage sum, and notwithstanding a further estate in the same land should be granted to the transferee. I have acted on this principle for years past, and had felt justified in so doing; and that, not only on the general and reasonable ground of construction to be put on the Stamp Act of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, modified as it was by the Act of 3 Geo. 4, c. 117, as set forth in your correspondent's letter, but furthermore for the following amongst other reasons:—1st, Because Mr. Coventry, in his Treatise on the Stamp Laws, pp. 129 to 135, and 469, after discussing the question at large, was decidedly of that opinion; and, 2ndly, Because I find the following decisions directly in point; the first is by the King's Bench, in 1835, in the case of Doe dem. Bartley v. Gray, as reported in 4 Neville & Manning, 719, the marginal note whereof is as follows:—"The transfer duty on mortgages is imposed only where no further sum is advanced. Where an additional sum is advanced, it is sufficient to pay the ad valorem duty on the sum advanced. So, where the original mortgage was for a term, and the second deed is a mortgage in fee, and the term is assigned to secure the mortgage-money;" and the second is in the Common Pleas, in 1838, in Doe dem. Barnes v. Rowe (4 Bing. N. C. 737), and the note is as follows:—"Upon a transfer of a mortgage upon payment of the sum originally advanced, and a further sum by way of further charge, an ad valorem stamp upon the further sum is sufficient, without any deed-stamp." Now, it appears to me that the late decision in Brown v. Pegg by the Court of Queen's Bench is completely in the teeth of their own decision in Doe dem. Bartley v. Gray, for the important incident in each case was exactly alike, viz. that the original mortgage was for a term, and the second deed was a mortgage in fee, and the term assigned to attend the inheritance; for, as to the argument of Mr. Peacock in Brown v. Pegg, that the deed required a 35s. stamp in respect of the new covenant, I should think that could have no weight, because it is to be presumed that every deed of transfer, where a further sum is advanced, and the mortgagor, consequently, is a party, must have a new covenant for payment directly from him to the transferee; for no new mortgagee would be content with the covenant in the original deed, imperfect as it would be with regard to the amount of debt, and, furthermore, requiring a cumbrous power of attorney from the original mortgagee to the transferee to enable him to act upon it at all. What is to be done with the hundreds of deeds which are invalidated by the new decision? Must they all be restamped on payment of the deed duty and the penalty; and, if so, who are to be the sufferers? I am aware of the decision in Lant v. Pease (3 N. & P. 329), and I should be glad to know how either that, or the case of Brown v. Pegg is reconcilable with the case of Doe dem. Bartley v. Gray, or whether the last-named case must be considered as overruled. In short, I should like to know distinctly what constitutes a new security on which the additional duty of 35s. is chargeable, and what does not.

PRIVILEGE OF COUNSEL.

An incident in the famous, or rather infamous, Running Rein case, has raised a newspaper discussion upon the limits of the license of speech permitted to counsel. As an event in the legal history of the time, we may not pass it without comment.

The facts appear to be as follows.

Mr. Cockburn, doubtless acting upon the instructions in his brief, had, in his opening speech, brought many very serious charges against Lord George Bentinck, plainly accusing him of acts which, if established, would have entirely ruined his character. No attempt was made to prove any one of these assertions, nor was an opportunity given to the accused to clear himself.

Hereupon the noble lord addressed the following letter to the learned counsel:—

"Harcourt House, July 1, 1844,
"Monday Night.

"Sir,—I am too fully cognizant of your duty as well as privilege as a counsel, and much too highly appreciate the value and usefulness of such a privilege, for a moment to question the propriety of the remarks which you felt it right, I doubt not, in obedience to your instructions, to pass upon my conduct this morning.

"I am quite aware that an honest counsel is professionally bound to assume as true all that is stated in his brief, and would betray his trust if he were to spare the feelings of any one against whose integrity and uprightness he either had, or might be misled by his instructions to believe he had, any facts, proofs, or evidence to adduce.

"Conceiving the latter to be your position this morning, I admired the manliness and honesty with which you made your attack, though I myself was the victim of it, perfectly content on my own account patiently to abide my time, when I confidently anticipated you would put me into the witness-box, and thereby at once prove your words to be true, or convince yourself and all the world besides, that grave charges were never made with less foundation against mortal man, than those you hurled at me.

"As in duty bound, I was in court under your client's subpœna, and had brought with me all the documents in my power to bring, in faithful and honest obedience to the wide scope of your duce tecum subpœna: bound by my oath, I should have had no choice but to answer freely every question you had thought proper to put to me; but more than that, I pledge you my word as a man of honour and as a gentleman, that if you had put me in the witness-box, or will still do so, where your instructions or your own acuteness had fallen, or may fall, short in directing your examination, I would have freely and frankly supplied, and will still as freely and frankly supply, the want, and will fully disclose every act of mine connected with this transaction.

"Having said thus much, I appeal to you, not in the way of threat (for I have none to make, and have none in thought or reservation), but I as a suppliant, appeal to you as a man of honour, honesty, and truth, to afford me that redress to which I have pointed, without which your opening speech cannot be justified. I appeal to you either to make good your charges, or in open court as publicly and as loudly as they were made, to acknowledge and to proclaim that they have no foundation save in your false instructions.

"Lastly, I appeal to you, for the sake of the English Bar, which scarcely prides itself more for its unrivalled ability and talent, than for its exalted sense of honour and integrity, not in your person, who ought to be one of its brightest ornaments, to dim its lustre by degrading it into the base instrument of the wanton, wilful, wicked, and revengeful calumnies of detected and defeated fraud.

"I have the honour to be, Sir,
"Your obedient humble servant,
"G. Bentinck.

"To A. E. Cockburn, esq. Queen's Counsel."

The tone and manner of this epistle are unexceptionable, and the case having been abruptly concluded, the amende was thus made and was thus received:—

"Mr. Cockburn.—And now, my lord, perhaps I may be allowed to allude to another circumstance. It may be in your lordship's recollection, that in my address to the jury, I had occasion to allude to Lord George Bentinck, and to speak of his connection with this case in very strong terms. My lord, I last night received a communication from his lordship, couched, I must say, in the most courteous terms, and by no means complaining of any improper exercise of my professional privileges yesterday, but of my having abstained from putting him into the box, after I had perused my instructions, and spoken of his conduct as I did, so that he had been deprived of the opportunity of refuting the charges I had brought against him, while I had abstained from attempting to prove them. My lord, I do not blame his lordship for this course, but I may perhaps be allowed to say, that my instructions on the subject were of the fullest, amplest, and most precise character. I was instructed that Lord George Bentinck had interfered and unduly exerted himself in getting up this case; that he had taken some of the witnesses to his own residence, Harcourt-house, where he had tampered with them. I was instructed that in one case he had expressly given money to a witness, and in another that he had offered indirectly pecuniary assistance to another. All this, I was instructed, would be borne out by evidence; but though Lord George Bentinck does not know it, it is well known both to your lordship and to the learned counsel for the defence, that I could not arrive at proof of these facts if they were truly stated to me by putting his lordship into the box, or by asking any questions of my own witnesses relative to his supposed interference, as he was not a party to the cause. I fully expected to be able to do so, as I stated, on the cross-examination of those persons to whom I alluded; and I thought it my duty towards my learned friends and to his lordship openly and boldly to give expression to my instructions in my opening speech, so that it should not be said that I had waited for my reply, when no answer could be given, to make an attack upon that nobleman's character. That was my reason for the course I then pursued, and I trust that I shall receive credit for having confined myself strictly to the discharge of my professional duty. I have thought it right to enter into this explanation, in order that, as the case has abruptly terminated, his lordship may take such a course as he may be advised to set himself right, either by denying the truth of the charges, or explaining them in any other way, by himself or by his friends.

"Mr. Baron Alderson.—I am sure that no one can say that you were not justified in making observations upon the conduct of Lord George Bentinck in this matter, supposing, of course, that you spoke from your instructions, which I take for granted. It has been from time immemorial the privilege of the British Bar, and God grant that it may continue to be so for ever, boldly and fearlessly to speak out according to their instructions, and to attack the conduct of any one, however high in rank or station the persons may be upon whom they had to make these observations. This had been the practice and privilege of the bar from time immemorial, and God forbid that it should be otherwise now.

"Mr. Cockburn said that it was only due to his lordship to say, that he did not complain, but, on the contrary, expressed his high sense of the value of the privileges of the English Bar.

"Baron Alderson.—I am quite sure nothing has been said by you that could give ground for a charge of impropriety in the conduct of your case.

"Mr. Wortley (second counsel for Colonel Peel, the Solicitor-General having left the Court).—There is no complaint of the kind made by us, my lord.

"Baron Alderson.—Oh, no, no ground for it. Lord George Bentinck was most anxious to work out the truth. Nothing more can be said.

"Mr. Wortley.—No person feels more than Lord George Bentinck the value of the liberty of the English Bar. I may add, however, that the fullest refutation would have been given to the instructions of my learned friend Mr. Cockburn, and to every insinuation that has gone forth to the prejudice of my noble friend, but for the abrupt termination of this trial. But for this circumstance, every charge, or supposed charge even, against Lord George Bentinck would have been fully and clearly contradicted."

The satisfaction expressed by the learned judge has not been shared by the public, who question the righteousness of a privilege which permits an innocent person to be grievously slandered, without so much as the consolation of contradicting the accusation as publicly as it was made. And certainly reason and good feeling revolt against the practice.

With great respect and deference, we venture to dissent from the view taken of this affair by the learned Baron, as well as by the counsel on both sides. The question at issue is, whether, and to what extent, counsel is justified in acting upon the instructions of his brief, in preferring accusations against other persons; and not merely against those who are parties to the record, but against any whom it may please the attorney or the client to charge with having an interest in the suit.

We admit to the fullest extent the necessity of maintaining the privilege of freedom of speech to an Advocate; it is essential to the liberty of the subject; it is, and has ever proved, the strongest barrier against oppressors, however powerful; and it would be a sad day for England that should witness the abolition or even the restriction of this privilege.

But that it may be preserved inviolate, secure in the judgment of good men, and supported by public opinion, it should be exercised with extreme caution. We cannot think that it is the duty of Counsel to say any thing that is set down in his brief; more especially when his instructions charge individuals with specific offences—when he is directed to say any thing which, but for his privilege, he could not say without rendering himself liable to the law of slander—is the utmost care demanded of him to see that he does not make himself the medium for assailing, under the shelter of his privilege, those whom his client dares not openly to attack. In such case it is the bounden duty of Counsel to consider every circumstance connected with the case, to assure himself that those instructions are boná fide. It is not enough that he finds them in his brief; he should look to the evidence by which they are sought to be proved, to the character of the witnesses, to the nature of the case, to the repute of his client. If any one of these particulars induces him to doubt the strict truth of the accusations he is told to prefer, he should abstain in his address from making them altogether, or he should state them as doubtful circumstances for the consideration of the jury.

Applying this rule to the incident above recorded, we cannot avoid the conclusion that Lord George Bentinck was unfairly treated, and that the admitted privilege of the Bar was not properly exercised. Mr. Cockburn knew, or ought to have known, the character of his case, and of his client, and to have abstained from making such accusations upon such authority. And when, having made them, he found himself unable to prove them, he should not have permitted the case to close without giving to the noble lord, whom he had so seriously assailed in that cause, an opportunity of going into the witness-box, and purging himself from charges which, if unproved, were unanswered, and may, therefore, prejudice minds not accustomed to distinguish between assertion and proof.

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

It was with extreme disgust that we read in the Essex Herald of the 9th instant the two reports following, relating, we presume, to the same personage.

During the brief period of our labours we have exposed to reprobation many unprofessional and discreditable practices, but never one so bad as that of which Mr. Thompson appears to have been guilty, namely, drawing the briefs and instructing counsel on both sides, and attempting to evade the responsibility by the pitiful contrivance of putting his agent's name (Wrentmore) to one of the briefs.

The second case is something more than unprofessional. Every reader's conscience will instantly tell him what.

"ESSEX QUARTER SESSION,

"Held at Chelmsford on Wednesday, the 20th ult.

"Eliza Sexton, 19, single woman, was convicted of stealing three penny pieces and two halfpennies, the property of George Fall Betts, at Great Oakley.—Mr. Marsh was counsel for the prosecution and Mr. Gray for the defence.—Three months hard labour.

"At the conclusion of the case, the noble and learned chairman inquired of the counsel of whom they received their instructions. Mr. Marsh replied that Mr. Thompson had instructed him. Mr. Gray made a similar reply, adding that the name of Wrentmore was on the brief.

"The CHAIRMAN said it then appeared that Mr. Thompson had instructed counsel on both sides. He (Lord R.) had consulted his colleague, Mr. Leake, on the subject, who concurred with him that a very irregular course had been pursued, and the Court felt bound not to allow the expenses of the brief in the case. The noble chairman then intimated that should a similar practice again come under the notice of the Court, they should think it right to send up the name of the party to another authority."

"ESSEX INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.

"Saturday, July 6.

"On Saturday last, a Court for the relief of Insolvent Debtors in Essex, was held at the Shire-Hall, Chelmsford, before Mr. Commissioner Reynolds. The number of insolvents for hearing was greater than on any former occasion, there being twenty names upon the list.

"Samuel Thorn, of Witham, saddler, had received notice of opposition, but no parties now appeared for that purpose.

"In examination by the Court, the insolvent said his son was a master saddler and harness-maker; he owed him 100*l*. which he (insolvent) had borrowed of him; his son received it with his wife; he owed 65*l*. of that money now; his son sued him for the other, and sold off his property at Witham; he pressed him very hard for the money before that; his son employed Mr. Thompson (his present attorney) to sue him for the debt: the sheriff sold the things to his son, and they were now in the same house his family lived in.

"Elkanah Thorn.—'I advanced the 100*l*. to my father in two sums, one, I think, of 50*l*. and he gave me a written security afterwards—that security is at home. I have received 33*l*. back from the sheriff, the value of the stock and goods, for which my father gave me judgment; I knew if I did not take them others would, and I should lose my money.' In answer to the Commissioner, witness declared on his most solemn oath, that he advanced the money to his father, and said he let the property he took from the sheriff remain in the house, because he did not like to turn his mother out.

"The Commissioner strongly commented on the circumstance of Mr. Thompson being the solicitor for the son in seizing the father's property, and now appearing as attorney for the father. There was not a single line all through the schedule from which the Court or the creditors could have an inkling of this affair, or know that the property was taken by the son. All through this was concealed, carefully and cautiously concealed; and then this son, who was put forward to protect the property, was at last foisted upon the Court as one of the bail for the father. He directed that the whole circumstances of this matter should be entered in the schedule, and then said he had great difficulty in this case—the son appeared to speak truth, but the circumstances gave rise to suspicion, and he always distrusted these cases. After commenting upon the circumstances, he ordered the insolvent to be discharged."

We hope that the "other authority," whose interference was so properly threatened by the Chairman, will be duly informed of these affairs by the Essex Law Society. It is the bounden duty of the Profession not to permit two such cases as these to pass unpunished. There is no pretence for leniency; for they are malpractices so manifest, that no man could plead ignorance—and if done with knowledge of the wrong, no punishment could be too severe.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The proposal submitted last week for the publication by the Society of a work which shall comprise all the information relating to the practice of the Law required in the usual business of an attorney's office, has received very general approval; and the more the scheme is considered, the more useful does it appear. In the hope that, once put into practicable shape, it will find the support necessary for its successful accomplishment, a formal prospectus of the design is being matured, and estimates of the cost are being made, with as near an approach to accuracy as such a calculation may permit, so that the members may have some notion of the price before they subscribe for it, and that, on the other hand, it may be ascertained how many subscribers will be necessary to justify the undertaking.

As there is wisdom in a multitude of counsellors, and it is desirable that such a work should be as complete as ingenuity and industry can make it, we request from every quarter the suggestions of practitioners as to the information it should contain. They who have learned by experience the sort of book, and the manner of arranging it, most needed in practice, will serve the Society by transmitting their suggestions, which will be duly considered, and cannot but help the perfecting of the plan.

But as it is an undertaking that will need the appliance of many heads and hands in the execution, and much thought in the planning, it will not be hastily entered upon. We propose that they who feel an interest in it, and have any thing to suggest for it, should communicate their views at once. As soon as the Prospectus is matured it shall be published here, and thrown open to the consideration and criticism of the Profession. Experienced men will be invited to propose additions or alterations. When these have been duly weighed, the plan finally adopted, and a sufficient number of subscribers enrolled to insure repayment of the cost, the work will be commenced, and completed as rapidly as is consistent with the care and research it will demand from the learned persons to whom its various departments will be intrusted.

Owing to a mistake, the particulars of which it is unnecessary to explain, the Third Part of the Practical Reports was wrongly announced for publication on Wednesday last. We are unable to name the precise day of its appearance for it depends on the supply of material but we hope it will be in the course of the coming week. The Real Property Cases being the most forward, it will probably consist of the first Part of that novel, and, we hope, useful series of Reports.

The following new members have been added to the Society since our last publication:—

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

THE following scale of charges, reduced more than one-third, has been adopted for Advertisements of Estates for Sale, &c., exceeding 10 lines in length:

For the first 70 words . . . . . 5s.
For every succeeding 30 words . 1s.

THE MONEY MARKET.

In the English market the transactions to-day have been to a fair extent, and at full rates. The Government broker has purchased again, but took Consols this morning, the amount being 20,000*l*. at 99⅛. The general quotations have been 99 to 99⅛. Exchequer Bills have been steady at the premiums of 76s. to 78s. and India Bonds at 94s. to 96s. Bank Stock has been firm at 199 to 192½. The Reduced Three-and-a-Half per Cents. are 102⅝ to ⅞, and the Three per Cents. 99⅞ to 100.

Spanish Bonds are flat again, the Five per Cents. being 22½ to ¾, and the Three per Cents. 32¾ to 33. Portuguese Converted Stock is worth 45½ to 45⅞, being rather better, though with very little doing. Mexican are steady at 35⅞ to 36 for the Five per Cents. and at 15⅞ for the Deferred. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents. are worth 61⅜ to 61½, and the Five per Cents. 100⅞ to 101⅛.

The Railway Shares are quiet again, and prices exhibit some want of buoyancy.

We are informed that the Duke of Sutherland has bought the beautiful property of Glenarback, which lies upon the north bank of the Clyde, immediately opposite his son-in-law's (Lord Blantyre) splendid mansion, at the cost of 14,000*l*.

Public Sales.

By Messrs. SHUTTLEWORTH and SONS, at the Mart.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

COURT OF THE VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND.

Thursday, July 4.

DOWDING v. CRUMP.

Plaintiff entering an appearance for defendant.

Practice under the 8th order, Aug. 26, 1841. This order directs, that "if the defendant, being duly served with a subpœna to appear to and answer the bill, shall refuse or neglect to appear thereto, the plaintiff shall, after the expiration of eight days from such service, be at liberty to apply to the Court for leave to enter an appearance for the defendant; and the Court being satisfied that the subpœna has been duly served, and that no appearance has been entered by the defendant, may give such leave accordingly; and that thereupon the plaintiff may cause an appearance to be entered for the defendant, and thereupon such further proceedings may be had in the cause, as if the defendant had actually appeared."

The mere circumstance of the plaintiff delaying to apply under the eighth general order for leave to enter an appearance for defendant, is not a sufficient reason for the Court to refuse the application.

In this case, one of the defendants had been served with the subpœna to appear and answer so far back as the 14th Nov. 1843. The question, therefore, was, whether the Court would allow the appearance to be entered ex parte, or whether it would not impose upon the plaintiff the onus of showing in what manner the delay was occasioned, and that it could be reasonably accounted for.

Piggott, in moving for the above order to enter an appearance for several defendants, directed the attention of the Court to the case of Bedford v. Roberts (2 Hare, 96). (a)

His Honour the VICE-CHANCELLOR thought that there was no reason for imposing any such obligations upon the plaintiff as were then suggested. That the eighth order required compliance with two conditions only to entitle a plaintiff to obtain an order for entering an appearance for the defendant, viz. service of the subpœna, and proof that no appearance had been entered in consequence of the subpœna; and that the mere circumstance of the delay on the plaintiff's part did not create such a suspicion in his mind as to induce him to impose upon the plaintiff any other condition than what the order itself would warrant.

Motion granted.

Saturday, July 6.

JAMES v. SMITH.

Bill of revivor.

Will, construction of.

Whether "nephews and nieces" included grand nephews and grand nieces, also great grand nephews and great grand nieces.

The testatrix, by her will, gave 30l. to her niece, M. M., daughter of her nephew, T. M. Then, in a subsequent part of the will, she gave to A. L. and M. L. the son and daughter of her late niece, M. L. deceased, 30l. each. Then, in a subsequent part of the will, she gave to her said niece M. M. a pair of silver saltcellars and two silver table-spoons, and to her said niece, M. L., one pair of silver saltcellars and two silver table-spoons. Held, that under the term nephew and niece were intended by the testatrix to comprehend both grand nephew and grand niece.

Mary Kranar having, by her last will and testament, bearing date the 22nd day of March, 1788, directed that all the interest which she might have at the time of her decease in the 3 per Cent. Reduced Bank Annuities, or other public stocks, funds, Government or other securities, might be converted into money, and be disposed of as afterwards in her will declared, bequeathed as follows:—"I give and bequeath 30l. to my niece, Mary Malltus, spinster (daughter of my nephew, Thomas Malltus); 30l. to Anthony Lock and Mary Lock (son and daughter of my late niece, Mary Lock, deceased)." In another part of the will the testatrix gave the residue in the following words:—"Unto and to be equally divided between and amongst all and every my nephew and nieces respectively, their respective executors and administrators. I give my god-daughter, Mary James, the youngest daughter of my nephew, John James, my gold watch; I give to the eldest daughter of my nephew, Hunter Todd, my silver pint mug; I give to the eldest daughter of my nephew, Francis Todd, my silver coffee-pot; I give to my said niece, Mary Malltus, one pair of silver saltcellars, and two silver table-spoons; and to my said niece, Mary Lock, one pair of silver saltcellars and two silver table-spoons."

The testatrix appointed the late defendant, Robert Smith, and Ann Laggatt, widow, joint executor and executrix of her will. The testatrix died on the 19th Oct. 1791, and her will was proved by the above-named executor and executrix in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury.

The bill was filed in 1791 by some of the testatrix's nephews in the first degree, against her executors, and some of her nephews and neices in the first, second, and third degrees; and the decree made in the same year directed the Master to inquire what nephews and neices of the testatrix, or their descendants, were living at the time of making her will and at the time of her decease.

The cause now came on for further directions; and the points to be considered were, whether Mrs. White, who was a niece of the testatrix, and was living at the date of her will, but died prior to the testatrix, and what classes of nephews and neices of the testatrix were entitled to participate in her residuary personal estate, she having bequeathed such residue equally between her nephews and neices, and having given specific and pecuniary legacies to her grand neices Mary Malltus and Mary Lock, whom she called by the general term of neices in her will.

Owing to the number of persons embraced in the above inquiry by the Master, and the difficulties of proving their relationship to the testatrix, and many of them being in indigent circumstances, very little was done under the decree until the revival of the suit in 1839, by the present parties, who, after considerable delay and expense, obtained the Master's general report, by which he finds that at the testatrix's death she had living seven nephews and neices in the first degree, thirty-three in the second degree, and four in the third degree.

Bethel and De Gex, for the plaintiff, Wm. James, who was a defendant in the original suit as nephew in the third degree, but plaintiff in the revived suit, as administrator of his grandfather, Wm. James, who was a nephew in the first degree; also administrator of his father and nephew in the second degree, and personal representative of his sister, an original defendant.

Freeling, for defendants in the same interest.

Roe and Shadwell, for nephews and nieces in the second degree.

Lowndes and Mylne, for those in the third degree.

Cases cited: Bagley v. Mollard (1 R. & M. 580); Falkner v. Butler (Ambl. 503); Shelley v. Bryer (1 Jac. 209).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The testatrix has in three instances called certain persons by the description of nephew and nieces; and it appears by the will itself that they are grand nieces. That makes the case different from those which have been cited. I think, therefore, that the words "nephews and nieces in the first and second degree" were intended, but I see no reason for extending the construction beyond that, namely, the third degree. Declare that the children living at the testatrix's death of the nephews and nieces are entitled, together with her nephews and nieces also living at her death, to the benefit of the residuary bequest in equal shares as tenants in common. Tax and pay costs of all parties, as between solicitor and client. Refer it to the Master, to inquire as to nephews and nieces, and the children of nephews, and nieces, and to advertise. Dismiss the bill only as against persons in the third degree.

(a) In this case, to which reference was made, the ex parte application was made on the 17th November, the subpœna having been served on the 18th June previously. His Honour V. C. Wigram stated, that the object of the order was to prevent delay in the prosecution of the cause; but that if the plaintiff allows a long time to elapse between the service of the subpœna and his application under the order, intermediate circumstances may have made the order improper, and he must give notice of the motion, or explain the delay;—that he had found the same practice adopted at the Rolls.

It will be seen by comparing these two cases, that the practice under the new orders is still unsettled; and that the same circumstances will produce a different decision in practice, according to that branch of the Court in which the application is made. This want of uniformity in construing the recent orders must prove a serious impediment in the way of the suitor. The general rule for interpreting these orders, which his Honour the Vice-Chancellor of England has adopted for his own guidance, will be found in the case of Garcias v. Ricardo, at p. 83 of the present volume.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Saturday, July 13.

STEEL v. PARSONS.

Practice—Husband and wife—23rd and 24th Orders of August, 1841.

The service of a copy of the bill upon a husband and wife may be effected by service upon the husband alone, but the affidavit should state that the deponent served the husband and wife by serving the husband.

A husband and wife were parties to this suit, which did not relate to the separate estate of the wife. On a motion for an order, under the 24th order of Aug. 1841, it appeared from the affidavit simply that the husband had been served.

Bilton, for the motion, submitted that this was sufficient, and that the practice was similar to that in cases of the service of a subpœna. He cited Kent v. Jacobs (5 Bea. 48).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I am informed by the registrar that the practice is to prove the service by stating that the party served the husband and wife by serving the husband. Your affidavit is not therefore sufficient.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

PARTRIDGE v. THE GOVERNOR AND COMPANY OF THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

Custom—Evidence—Consideration.

A dividend warrant for the payment of dividends upon Three-and-a-Half per Cent. Stocks is not a negotiable instrument assignable by mere delivery.

This case was argued in Hilary Term last. The pleadings, facts, and arguments are fully stated in the judgment, which was now delivered by

DENMAN, C. J.—This was an action on the case by the plaintiff, who was the holder of a considerable sum in the Three-and-a-Half per Cents. against the defendants, for a breach of duty in not paying him certain dividends on that stock which fell due on the 5th of April, 1841. The declaration contained two counts—one on the case, and the other in trover. The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff had given to one Wakefield a power of attorney by warrant to receive these dividends; that by the custom of London for the last sixty years these dividend warrants were transferred from hand to hand without indorsement; and that the bonâ fide holder of such warrants was entitled to receive payment under them of the dividends due to the persons who had granted the same; that Wakefield had transferred these warrants to Ladbroke and Company for a valuable consideration; that Ladbroke demanded payment of the dividends under these warrants, and requested the defendants to hold the money so payable to them (Messrs. Ladbroke) for their use and benefit. To the count in trover, the defendants pleaded, not possessed. It appeared by the evidence, that the dividends became due on the 5th of April; that the defendants had previously received the money from the Exchequer for the payment of these dividends; that, on the 6th, Wakefield received the power of attorney, and on the same day he delivered it to Messrs. Ladbroke; that, on the 7th, Ladbrokes, who had a banking account with the defendants, delivered to them these warrants, to receive the same on their behalf, and that the credit for the sum thus to be paid them was entered in the defendants' books on that day, though the custom was not to make the actual payment of the money till the 8th of April. Wakefield absconded on the evening of the 6th, and that circumstance was known on the 7th, but it was not known to Ladbrokes that there was any claim of the plaintiff existing as to the money due upon these dividend warrants, when the defendants had carried that sum of money to Ladbrokes' credit. There was evidence that the dividend warrants were taken as cash, and that in March 1841, Ladbrokes had discounted for Wakefield a promissory note for 2,000*l*. Had this note been duly paid, there would have been a balance of more than 200*l*. in favour of Wakefield, but when that note was dishonoured, the balance against him exceeded the sum of 1,700*l*. The verdict was given for the plaintiff, with liberty for the defendants to enter it for them, if the Court should be of opinion that they were entitled to the verdict on the special pleas. A motion was accordingly made in last Michaelmas Term that the verdict might be so entered, or that a new trial should be granted. Two questions now arose. The first was, whether a dividend warrant was a negotiable instrument assignable by mere delivery; and the second was, whether there was evidence to support the statement of a valuable consideration set forth in the plea. On the first question the argument for the plaintiff rested entirely on the form of the warrant. The dividend warrant contained an express order for the payment of the sum mentioned in it, and at the foot was a declaration in the following form:—"I do hereby acknowledge to have received the above-mentioned sum;" and this was signed by Wakefield, who was the holder of the plaintiff's power of attorney. In this instrument there were no terms which made it negotiable; there was nothing in it to be paid to bearer, to order, or to assigns. There was, however, this acknowledgment of the attorney at the foot of it, that he had received the sum mentioned in it in full payment. This acknowledgment was required by the Bank to be made before the payment would be made. After that acknowledgment had been signed, the Bank would have paid the money to any one who produced the instrument with such acknowledgment on it, the fact of the acknowledgment being on it making it payable. If Ladbrokes had applied for and actually received the money, and the warrant had been given up, no action could have been maintained against the Bank. But in this case the money had not been paid, and credit was only given on account, and the defendants said that they held the money for the use and on the behalf of Ladbrokes, and not of Wakefield; and the question therefore was, whether Ladbrokes had a right to hold the warrant, and the defendants to defend themselves under it, the amount being still unpaid. That depended entirely on the custom set forth in the plea, and the question was, whether that custom created such a complete right to the money by the mere transfer of the warrant as would enable the cashier safely to pay its amount to any one who presented it. The Court thought that there was sufficient evidence of the custom, as stated in the plea, to warrant the verdict being entered for the defendants, so far as the custom was concerned. The only remaining question, therefore, was, whether there was sufficient consideration, as stated on the plea. Wakefield was stated to have transferred the warrant, for valuable consideration, then moving. But the evidence shewed that the consideration for the transfer was the discount for the promissory note, which had taken place some time before. The Court thought that the evidence did support the plea, and shewed that there was a transfer for a valuable consideration, so that the verdict ought to be entered for the defendants on the special pleas; as a consequence of this, the Court thought that, on the plea of not possessed to the Court in trover, the verdict must likewise be entered for the defendants.

Judgment for the defendants.

FAWCETT v. FEARNE and ANOTHER, Assignees, &c.

(Argued May 25.)

The words "at the time he becomes bankrupt," in the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 72, which enacts, "That if any bankrupt, at the time he becomes bankrupt, shall, by the consent and permission of the true owner thereof, have in his possession, order, or disposition, any goods or chattels, whereof he was the reputed owner, &c. the commissioners shall have power to sell and dispose of the same for the benefit of the creditors under the commission," have reference to the act of bankruptcy, and not to the time of the fiat, and, therefore, the goods which are in the bankrupt's order or disposition, with such consent, at the date of the act of bankruptcy, vest in his assignees.

Knowles, Addison, and Pashley shewed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit, or to reduce the damages.

This was an action brought by the purchaser under a bill of sale from the sheriff of Yorkshire, against the assignees of a bankrupt, to recover disposition of certain articles which had been seized and sold by the defendants as goods in the order and possession of the bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy. It appeared that the act of bankruptcy was committed on the 15th August, 1842; that on the same day, but before the act of bankruptcy, the sheriff had seized a part of the goods in question, under an execution issued against the bankrupt by the Low Moor Company, in a hostile action. On the 17th August, the sheriff assigned to them, and they, on the 15th September, 1842, assigned to the plaintiff. On the 23rd August, 1842, the sheriff had also made another seizure under three different executions, issued by other parties, also in hostile actions. These goods were also assigned to the plaintiff on the 15th of September, 1842. On the 25th January, 1843, a fiat issued against the bankrupt, under which the defendants were appointed assignees. The jury found that the bankrupt was the reputed owner of the goods, and had them in his possession, with the consent of the plaintiff, at the time the fiat issued. A verdict was entered for the plaintiff, and the present rule was obtained on the ground that these were goods in the order and disposition of the bankrupt within the meaning of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16. s. 72, which enacts "That if any bankrupt, at the time he becomes bankrupt, shall, by the consent and permission of the true owner thereof, have in his possession, order, or disposition, any goods or chattels, whereof he was the reputed owner, &c. the commissioners shall have power to sell and dispose of the same for the benefit of the creditors under the commission." It was submitted that, notwithstanding the goods were in the bankrupt's order and disposition at the date of the fiat, they were not within the meaning of that section, inasmuch as the words at the time he becomes bankrupt do not refer to the issuing of the fiat, but to the date of the act of bankruptcy: therefore, with respect to the first part of the goods on the 15th August, the bankrupt was not in possession of them at all, because the sheriff had seized and was in possession, and they were not in the bankrupt's order and disposition at the time the act of bankruptcy took place. With respect to the second part, they were in the bankrupt's possession at the date of the act of bankruptcy, not as reputed owner, but as real owner, and therefore, as to them, the 72nd section could not apply, and as it could not be contended the execution creditor had notice of the act of bankruptcy, that was a transaction protected by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29; citing Lyon v. Wheldon (2 Bing. 334); Smith v. Copping (5 B. & A. 676); Whitmore v. Robertson (8 M. & W.); Ramsay v. Eaton (10 M. & W. 22); Jones v. Dwyer (15 East, 21).

Dundas, Watson, and Hoggins, contrà, contended that whatever may have been the decisions previous to the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, the effect of that statute is to make the issuing of the fiat the dividing line, and consequently that the words "at the time he becomes bankrupt," in the 72nd section, must refer to the issuing of the fiat, and not to the date of the act of bankruptcy. That if the act of bankruptcy be considered the dividing line, still the 72nd section would apply, inasmuch as there was a continuing act of bankruptcy from the 15th Aug. 1842, down to the 25th Jan. 1843, when the fiat issued.

The judgment of the Court was now delivered by

DENMAN, C. J. who, after stating the facts of the case, proceeded as follows:—For the defendants it was contended that the words of the 72nd section of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, "at the time he becomes bankrupt," have reference to the time of the fiat, and not of the act of bankruptcy; and therefore, as these goods were in the bankrupt's possession at that time, they have a right to them. But we are of opinion that the words "at the time he becomes bankrupt" have reference to the act of bankruptcy, and not to the time of the commission. That was so held in Lyon v. Wheldon (2 Bing. 334) and Smith v. Copping (5 B. & A. 676), and we see no reason to put a different construction on these words to what they have generally received. It was then contended that the property in the goods was by relation vested in the defendants as assignees, for the statute does not protect those which are in the bankrupt's possession, with the owner's consent, after the act of bankruptcy; and in the present case the defendants would be entitled to the goods seized under four executions, if the seizure was after the assignment of the 15th of August. But the seizure under the execution at the suit of the Low Moor Company was made before the act of bankruptcy was committed, and the seizure under the other execution was not made until after. It turns out that the execution creditors are not shewn to have had any notice of the act of bankruptcy; but even if they had, the execution at the suit of the Low Moor Company would still have been available, as that was levied before the act of bankruptcy was committed, and the plaintiff being aware of the act of bankruptcy would make no difference. But a fiat has since issued, founded upon that act of bankruptcy; and although the execution creditors themselves knew nothing of it, the defendants would become assignees, and entitled to those goods which were in the bankrupt's possession at that time. We are, therefore, of opinion that the defendants are entitled to retain all the goods except so much as were seized under the Low Moor execution, and are sufficient to satisfy that; for the plaintiff ought not to be in a worse situation than the Low Moor Company would have been in if they had been aware of the act of bankruptcy at the time of executing the assignment to him. We are, therefore, of opinion that the verdict for the plaintiff must stand for so much as is sufficient to satisfy the Low Moor execution, and for that only. Rule discharged.

ELWOOD v. BULLOCK.

(Argued June 7.)

Demurrer—Reasonable custom—Pleading.

A custom to erect booths upon a highway running through a fair is a reasonable custom, and good in law.

Demurrer to Replication.—The pleadings and arguments are stated in the judgment.

Watson (Gordon with him), in support of the demurrer.

Gunning, contrà.

The judgment of the Court was now delivered by

DENMAN, C. J.—This was an action of trespass for pulling down a booth and carrying away various articles the property of the plaintiff. The defendant justified, under a bye-law of the corporation of Bury St. Edmund's, of which he was mayor, a bye-law passed for the suppression of public nuisances. That bye-law had been held bad for the reasons given during the course of the argument. Then came another special plea, in which the defendant alleged that, long before and at the said time when, &c. and from time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary, there was, and of right ought to have been, a common public highway into, through, and along the said close, called Angel-hill, and that the said booth and the said goods and chattels were wrongfully erected and put upon the said common public highway, and that the said booth incumbered and obstructed such common and public highway, so that it could not be used by the defendant without removing the obstruction; wherefore the defendant, having occasion to use the said highway, had removed it. The replication by the plaintiff to this plea was, that the said highway was within the borough within which there had been immemorially, at a certain time of the year, a fair, in which persons had been accustomed to erect booths, &c. for the refreshment of people attending such fair, and leaving open a sufficient part of the close, and of the said public highway for the Queen's subjects to pass and repass. The replication then stated a custom for every victualler within the borough to enter upon parts of this highway to offer refreshments to such as should attend the fair, and for the purpose of more conveniently carrying on their business as such victuallers during the fair, to erect booths, &c.; and it justified the obstruction of the highway under this custom. To this there was a special demurrer, and the defendant objects to this plea as inconsistent, on the ground that the plaintiff admits the close, &c. to be a public highway, and yet claims a right to obstruct it, which claim and admission are, as he contends, inconsistent with each other and incapable of being sustained in law. It is further objected, that the plaintiff has not set forth the bounds on the highway within which he claims the right to erect the booth. But we do not think that it is any part of the custom, nor is it necessary to the validity of the custom, that the booth should always be placed in the same situation. That was so held by Lord Ellenborough in the case of Rex v. Lloyd (1 Camp. 260). Then the question is, supposing the plaintiff to have an answer to the plea, in what manner it ought to be given; whether by a traverse, or by introducing new matter in the replication. He could not traverse the existence of the highway over the spot on which the goods stood, and we think that the answer to the plea comes properly in the shape of a replication introducing the whole matter therein. This brings us to the question of whether the custom there stated is good in law, and on that point we find it stated to be immemorial; and it is in itself reasonable, and we therefore think it is good. The present case cannot be referred to those where the obstruction of a public way is for a private purpose, for the existence of fairs is treated in the law-books as a matter of public convenience. If, therefore, the custom might have had a reasonable origin, there seems nothing unreasonable in the custom itself, for it does not abridge or obstruct the enjoyment of any public right, without offering a countervailing advantage. As to the origin of the custom, it may well be that the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses have had a right to hold a fair there, before the locus in quo became a highway, for the fair might have been held originally for the benefit of the town, and might have been held in a close which was within the borough, but which did not at that time form any part of a public highway; and so the dedication of that part of the close to the public as a highway, might have been subject to its use for the purposes of the fair. Again, this was not a general, but only a partial and a limited obstruction of the public right. On the whole, therefore, we think the replication good, and there must be judgment for the plaintiff.

Judgment for plaintiff.

KEIR v. LEEMAN and ANOTHER.

Where an offence is of such a nature that the injured party may sue at law and recover damages in respect of it, there it is competent to a prosecutor who proceeds by indictment to compromise such indictment with the sanction of the Court: aliter, where the offence is wholly of a public nature, for no agreement can be valid which has the effect of stifling a public prosecution.

Assumpsit on a special agreement stating that the plaintiff had sued one George Emmett, and recovered against him a certain sum of money; that a fieri facias was sued out thereupon, and the sheriff entered and seized certain goods and crops of the said George Emmett; that afterwards William Emmett and others assaulted the sheriff's officer, and turned him out of the farm until the sheriff's officer re-entered and repossessed himself of the same; that an action of trespass was thereupon commenced by William Emmett against the sheriff, and amongst other issues there was one alleging that the property in question did not belong to the said William Emmett, and that, at the trial of the said issue, the sheriff obtained a verdict. That an indictment was also prosecuted by the sheriff's officer, at the plaintiff's expense, against Emmett and others for riot and assault; that after the verdict in the aforesaid action was given, and when the indictment was about to come on for trial, it was agreed that, in consideration of the prosecutor's not proceeding further with the said indictment, and the sheriff withdrawing from possession of the farm and crops, the defendants should pay costs as between attorney and client upon the said indictment, and the balance of the principal money and costs unsatisfied in respect of the original action, and also the costs and charges under the said writ of fieri facias in the said action, together with certain other costs incurred in respect of the trial of the said issue. The declaration then averred that the Court were aware of the agreement, and that by the consent and with the leave of the Court the prosecutor offered no evidence, and and thereupon the said Emmett and others were acquitted, and the sheriff withdrew from possession.

The Plea set out the indictment, from which it appeared that one of the counts was for an assault upon a peace-officer, and the plea then averred that the consideration for the said agreement was illegal, and the contract void.

Demurrer.

Bliss (Pickering with him), in support of the demurrer, submitted, in the first place, that the plea was bad for not averring that the offence had been committed; but, secondly, it was submitted there was nothing illegal in compromising an indictment for misdemeanor with the consent of a Court of Oyer and Terminer; that this was an indictment for an injury partly of a private and partly of a public nature, and that there could be no distinction between a compromise effected before and one effected after judgment. That, at any rate, if the whole consideration was not good, the agreement would be sustained to the extent to which it was good: citing Johnson v. Ogleby (3 P. W. 277); Drage v. Ibbotson (2 Esp. R. 641); Collins v. Blantern (2 Wils. 341); Rex v. Rant, Rex v. Coombes, Rex v. Lord Falkland (cited in Watson on Awards, 47); Rex v. Coteswerth (2 Dow. & Ry.); Bailey v. Wingfield (11 East, 46); Fallows v. Taylor (7 T. R. 475); Edgecomb v. Rodd (5 East, 294); Poole v. Bousfield (1 Camp. 55); Baker v. Townsend (7 Taunt. 422); Kirk v. Strickwood (4 B. & Ad. 441); Elworthy v. Burke (2 Sim. & S. 372); Harvey v. Morgan (2 Stark. R. 15); Ch. on Contracts; Harrington v. Cockroft (4 Doug.).

Kelly (Pashley with him), contrà.—It is admitted that it may be lawful, with the sanction of the Court, to compromise an indictment for a misdemeanor of a private nature, after a conviction has taken place; for then public justice has been satisfied, and it is in the breast of the judge what sentence he will inflict upon the defendant, and in many instances it may be the best means of doing justice to the prosecutor; but the question in the present case is, whether an agreement to pay a sum of money, in consideration, among other things, of the person to whom it is to be paid proceeding no further in a prosecution he has instituted for riot and assault, is good. There is no difference at all in this respect between felonies and misdemeanors, and it is perfectly incompetent to a party to stifle a prosecution for a felony in this manner upon receiving a sum of money, and, therefore, equally so in the present case: citing Story on Equity, ch. 7, ss. 237, 294; 4 Black. Com. 363; Narrot v. Wallace (3 T. R. 17); Garth v. Earnshaw (3 T. & C. 584); Evans v. Jones (5 M. & W. 77).

The judgment of the Court was now delivered by

DENMAN, C. J.—After stating the pleadings, his lordship proceeded to observe, that it appeared in the present case that the agreement was stated to the judges of the Court, and that by leave of the Court the prosecutor did not proceed further with the indictment, and the sheriff withdrew from possession. The principal case on this subject is that of Collins v. Blantern (2 Wils. 341); and in Ogleby v. Johnson (3 P. W. 277), a bill was filed for specific performance of an agreement made, in consideration, amongst other things, of dropping an indictment which the plaintiff had preferred against the defendant, but which, when ready for trial, had been compromised by the parties; and the reporter there states that the Lord Chancellor (Lord Talbot) started another point, viz. that the agreement being to stifle a public prosecution, was not to be enforced in equity. The reasons are not, perhaps, very satisfactorily stated in that case, but the question was much considered in Collins v. Blantern, and the doctrine has been several times discussed by Lord Kenyon, and in Kyd on Awards two of his decisions are reported. [His lordship here referred to and commented upon the cases of Fallows v. Taylor (7 T. R.); Drage v. Ibbotson (2 Esp. 641); Poole v. Bousfield (1 Camp. R. 55); Edgecomb v. Rodd (5 East, 296); Bailey v. Wingfield (11 East, 46); Kirk v. Strickwood (4 B. & Ad. 411); Baker v. Townsend (7 Taunt. 422); Elworthy v. Burke (2 Sim. & S. 372).] The result of the cases makes it appear that some indictments for misdemeanor may be compromised; and the law on the subject is collected by Gibbs, C. J. in his judgment in Baker v. Townsend, from which it appears that where the offence is of such a nature that the injured party may sue at law, and recover damages in an action brought in respect of it, there the indictment may be compromised, for in such case the injury is frequently more of a private than of a public nature; but if the offence is entirely of a public nature, so that no other than a criminal proceeding can be had upon it, a compromise cannot be come to, for no agreement can be valid which has the effect of stifling a public prosecution, for the rights of the public cannot be sacrificed to private advantage. In the present case, the indictment being for riot and assault, is one of a wholly public nature, and it was competent neither to the judge nor the prosecutor to compromise it. Perhaps the judge may lawfully be asked to sanction a compromise of a private misdemeanor, but clearly not of a public one. But according to this record, the learned judge's sanction was not made the consideration for the promise, and was not, in fact, obtained until after the agreement was made. We think the agreement is invalid, as being founded upon an illegal consideration, and therefore that the defendant is entitled to judgment.

Judgment for the defendant.(a)

Saturday, July 6.

ALDRED and ANOTHER, Assignees, &c. v. CONSTABLE.

(Argued 27th June.)

In an action of trover against a sheriff, the defendant justified under a writ at the suit of J. B. The plaintiff now assigned, and the defendant pleaded not guilty to the new assignment. It appeared that the sheriff had received two writs, under the first of which he had seized all the goods before he received the second writ. The goods produced more than sufficient to satisfy the first writ. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the verdict on the new assignment in respect of the surplus. Held also, that primâ facie a sheriff's sale is for ready money, and that he is not justified, after he has sold as much as will apparently satisfy the writ, in going on to sell more, on the speculation that it is possible that the actual delivery of such goods as are already sold may be prevented by loss or accident.

Martin shewed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff on the fourth issue, and to enter the same for the defendant. The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment.

Cases cited: Stead v. Gaskell (8 Taunt. 527); Batchelor v. Vyse (4 Moore & Sc. 532); Norman v. Bell (10 B. & C.).

Wortley, E. V. Williams, and E. Bevan, contrà; citing Dand v. Kingscote (6 M. & W. 174; 1 Wms. Saund. 299, c); Pratt v. Groom (15 East, 235); Oakley v. Davis (16 East, 82; Buller's N.P. 92); Barnes v. Hunt (11 East, 451); Drew v. Lainson (5 A. & E.).

The judgment of the Court was now delivered by

DENMAN, C. J.—The question in this case arises on the new assignment to the fourth plea to a declaration in trover by the assignees of John Brown, a bankrupt. The defendant states in that plea that a writ of fi. fa. at the suit of James Brown, indorsed to levy the sum of 79*l.* was delivered to him as sheriff of Yorkshire before the issuing of the fiat against John Brown, and that he as sheriff, before the fiat, seized and took in execution the goods in the declaration mentioned, for the purpose of levying the sum of money mentioned in the writ, and that a day before the fiat he levied the said sum of money, as by the said writ commanded.

To this plea the plaintiff has newly assigned that he brought his action not in respect of the goods seized, taken, and sold under the writ first mentioned in the plea, but for goods and chattels other and different from the goods and chattels seized, taken, and sold under the said writ in the said plea mentioned. To this new assignment there was a plea of not guilty. From the evidence it appears that on the 23rd April the sheriff received a writ at the suit of James Brown, under which he justifies, and that on the 24th April he received a writ of fi. fa. at the suit of Charles Brown for 313*l.* 11s. The sheriff had seized all the goods under the writ at the suit of James Brown before he received the writ at the suit of Charles Brown, but remained in possession under both writs until the time of the sale, which took place on the 28th and 29th May. The first day's sale of the goods produced more than enough to cover and satisfy the writ at the suit of James Brown, and there remained at the end of the first days' sale as many goods which had been seized by the sheriff under the two writs as produced at the sale on the following day 49*l.*; and the plaintiffs contend that they are entitled to a verdict on the new assignment in respect of these goods. The defendant contended, first, that the plaintiff, by his new assigning, had admitted that all the goods mentioned in the declaration were covered by the plea, and that he ought not to have new assigned, but ought to have traversed the allegation in the plea that the goods taken and sold were so taken and sold to satisfy the writ at the suit of James Brown; that the sale, although continuing for two days, was, in fact, but one sale; that the sale was under the writ at the suit of James Brown, and that, though enough was raised by the first day's sale to satisfy James Brown's execution, the sheriff might, nevertheless, sell more under that writ, in order to protect himself, in case, after the sale, some unforeseen loss by fire or theives might render the produce of the first day's sale insufficient to satisfy James Brown's debt. Upon both these points our opinion is in favour of the plaintiffs, and, therefore, we think that the new assignment is the proper mode of pleading. The declaration is such as might apply to any goods within the number and description stated. The defendant says he seized, took, and sold the goods mentioned in the declaration under a writ of fi. fa. at the suit of James Brown. This is apparently an answer to the declaration, for the defendant did seize, take, and sell certain goods within the number and description in the declaration mentioned in the writ, and the declaration being general, it may be that the goods seized and sold under the writ were the goods for which the plaintiff brought his action. But the plaintiff, admitting that the defendant did seize and sell certain goods within the number and description of those stated generally in the declaration, says, by his new assignment, that the goods in respect of which he brought his action are not those seized and sold under James Brown's writ, but other goods; and this is the proper mode of pleading in such a case. Then the question becomes one of fact, whether all the goods sold at both sales were sold under one writ at the suit of James Brown, and upon the fact of the case the second point made by the defendant arises, upon which the cases of Woodman v. Baldock (8 Taunt.), and Ranstone v. Wilkinson (4 M. & S.), are direct authorities, viz. that if a sheriff sell more goods than are sufficient to satisfy the writ, he is liable to an action of trover in respect of those goods. Whether he sold more under the circumstances than was necessary, is a question of fact in each particular case; and in the present there can be no doubt the produce of the first day's sale was sufficient to satisfy the execution at the suit of James Brown; and we are of opinion that the sale of the second day was not warranted by James Brown's writ, and that the goods sold on that day cannot be considered as sold under that writ. We also think that, primâ facie, a sheriff's sale is considered to be for ready money and immediate delivery, and that the sheriff is not justified, after he has sold as much as will apparently satisfy the writ, in going on to sell more, on the mere speculation that it is possible that the actual delivery of such goods as are already sold may be prevented by loss or accident. This rule will, therefore, be discharged; and the verdict entered for the plaintiff on the new assignment will stand.

Rule discharged.

WHITEHEAD v. HARRISON.

[We insert a fuller report of this case, of which a brief note appeared in our last.]

(Argued June 7.)

In an action of detinue, a plea traversing the common bailment is bad.

This was an action of detinue, and the declaration stated that the plaintiff delivered an indenture from him (the plaintiff) to the defendant, to be redelivered on request.

Breach—That the defendant detained after request.

Plea—traversing the bailment as alleged.

Demurrer—on the ground that the plea was an unnatural traverse, and that it sought to put in issue matters that are not traversable.

(a) We understand that the agreement was strictly performed by the defendants; the question was raised in a dispute as to the costs.

Addison, in support of the demurrer, submitted that the plea was bad, inasmuch as the common bailment in detinue was no more traversable than the finding in an action of trover; that the action of detinue was an fiction in the nature of an action of tort, and not ex contractu, and used only for the purpose of trying the right of property, and would be useless for that purpose if the defendant could traverse the bailment; citing Broadwood v. Ledyard (3 P. & D. 46); Gledstanes v. Hewitt (1 C. & J. 565; Cro. Eliz. 666); Walker v. Jones (2 C. & M. 673); Mills v. Graham (1 N. R. 140); Jones v. Dow (9 M. & W. 19).

Jno. Henderson, contrà, contended, that the plea was pleaded in the only mode in which the defendant could put in issue the title of the defendant consistently with the new rules; that in the old forms the words, "of the plaintiff," that is to say, the allegation of ownership, is not to be found, and if now inserted in the declaration, and not specifically denied by the defendant, it would be admitted under the general issue; that the action of detinue must be an action ex contractu, and not of tort, because it may be joined with assumpsit, and that if, instead of the allegation of a bailment to redeliver on request, the allegation were to redeliver in three months, it could never be said that the defendant was estopped from disputing that point; citing Rastall's Entries, 211, b, 212, 213; Brownlow's Ent. 259; 1 Brown's Entries, pl. 3, 147, 149; Rich v. Aldred (6 Mod. 216); Lane v. Tuson (12 A. & E. 816); Year Book, 5 Ed. 3, 152, pl. 4; 2 Mod. Ent. 425; Bateman v. Elmore (Cro. Eliz.); Phipps v. Robinson (4 Bing. R.); Mason v. Farnell (13 L. J.)

The judgment of the Court was now delivered by

DENMAN, C. J.—After stating the pleadings, his lordship proceeded to say: Doubtless, before the new rules, the common bailment was not traversable (Gledstanes v. Hewitt, 1 C. & J. 565; and Walker v. Jones, 2 C. & M. 673); and the question is, whether the new rules have made any difference. See also Jones v. Dow (9 M. & W. 19). Here it was argued that you could not traverse that part of the declaration, because the words are not material and not to be found in the entries in the older books; and that as the case of the plaintiff might merely consist of some actual contract, the defendant could in no way put the plaintiff to proof of his case unless this traverse is allowed; and that it seems most unjust to compel the defendant to plead specially, and take the onus of proof on himself, instead of being able in this, as in all other cases, to put the plaintiff on proof of his right by a common traverse. On the other hand, the plaintiff relies on the authorities which shew that he is at liberty, notwithstanding the averment of the bailment, to shew any other mode by which these goods came into the defendant's hands, and consequently, that the bailment is not traversable. The recent case of Mason v. Farnell (13 L. J. Ex.) favours this view of the case; and however hard it may appear on the defendant, we feel ourselves bound by the authorities to hold that a plea traversing a common bailment is bad; and in this case we must give our judgment for the plaintiff.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

DAVIS v. VERNON.

In trover for title-deeds, the defendants cannot set up the supposed superior title of a stranger, a mortgagee. Agents, as well as principals, are liable for conversion; and a refusal by agents to give up the deeds, except on a condition which they have no right to annex, and which they profess to annex, not as a matter of duty to their principal, but in their own right, is evidence of a conversion.

Trover for the recovery of title-deeds: verdict for the plaintiff.

Rule nisi, for setting aside the verdict, and entering a nonsuit, on the following grounds:—1st, that there was not evidence of the conversion; 2nd, that the legal estate was not in the plaintiff; 3rd, that the defendants, who were solicitors, had a right to hold for their bill of costs; 4th, that the action should not have been brought against the defendants, but against their principal.

The facts of the case were these. By the operation of a fine and of recovery, bearing date the year 1810, certain estates, one of them known as the Hepton estate, which had been the exclusive property of the plaintiff before her marriage with Edward Davis, were settled, in default of appointment by Edward Davis and the plaintiff, on Edward Davis for life, remainder to the plaintiff for life, remainder to the children of the marriage. On the 8th of April, 1830, the power was executed, and the Hepton estate was mortgaged for 750*l.* and a term of 1,000 years to attend the inheritance was created and vested in one Allen. On the 2nd of September in the same year, the mortgage was assigned to Mary Davis, the appointing party; and, as the mortgage-deed contained a covenant for passing the title-deeds of the estate, while there was no such covenant in the assignment to Allen, the title-deeds were handed over to Mary Davis, and by her to her father: at all events, they got into his possession. Edward Davis had an estate in his own right, and this he mortgaged to Sir Edward Vernon (not one of the defendants), in January 1831, for the sum of 600*l.* and handed over the deeds of the other estates as collateral security. The title-deeds were deposited with the defendants, who were the solicitors of Sir Edward Vernon, and they gave the following memorandum:—"We acknowledge that the above-named documents have been deposited with us by Edward Davis, esq. as collateral security for 600*l.* advanced by Sir Edward Vernon. In September 1832, Mary Davis assigned her mortgage to John Jobson, the elder, to secure a debt which had been contracted with him by her father; but nothing was said about the title-deeds. On the 5th November in the same year, Edward Davis and the plaintiff appointed John Jobson, the younger, receiver of the rents of the Hepton estate. In March 1833, the fee was conveyed to Thomas Jobson in trust for John Jobson, the elder, by Mr. and Mrs. Davis. That conveyance does not make mention of the title-deeds. Mr. Davis having died, Mrs. Davis intimated to the defendants her intention to pay off the 600*l.* and that she should then require the deeds to be delivered up. The defendants replied, that before they could deliver up the deeds, they must insist that there be paid to them, not only what was due to Sir Edward Vernon, but what was due to themselves; and, as they persisted in refusing to give up the deeds, this action was brought. Against the rule for setting aside the verdict, cause was shewn (Feb. 9) by

R. V. Richards, Q.C. and V. Lee, who contended, 1st, that on the determination of the life-estate the plaintiff, and she alone, had a right to the possession of the title-deeds; 2nd, that a mortgagee, as mortgagee, has no right to the title-deeds, unless expressly conveyed to him (Yea v. Field, 2 T. R. 203; Wiseman v. Westcott, 1 Y. & J. 117); that when title-deeds relate to several estates, they are usually retained in the custody of him who owns the larger or the larger number (Sugden on Vendors, 105; 2 Preston on Conveyancing, 166; 2 Powell, 632); that the case of Owen v. Knight (4 Bing. N. C. 54) did not apply; because a Court of Equity would not enforce the execution of a defective power without a consideration, especially in the case of a feme covert (2 Sugden on Powers, 127), ceremonies being then matter of substance. 3rd. That the supposed right of the mortgagee being thus disposed of, the action would well lie against the defendants. 4th. That the refusal had not been absolute, but conditional only.

W. J. Smith, contrà, contended that a mortgagor cannot maintain trover while the superior title of the mortgagee exists, nor against an attorney who holds for his principal; that the jus tertii may be set up in an action of trover (Locke v. Loveday, 5 Scott, 508; 12 L. J. Ex. 65), and, therefore, also the right of Jobson by the present defendants, for the memorandum was not an attornment, and did not operate by way of estoppel; besides that the memorandum was dated in 1831, and the title of Jobson only accrued in 1832. The plaintiff had to shew her title; whatever negatived that was sufficient (Phillips v. Robinson, 4 Bin. 104); that the title was in Jobson or Mary Davis, and the defendants could not have answered to their principal the delivery of the deeds (Stephens v. Badcock, 3 B. & Ald. 254; Myers v. Soalsby, 2 Mod. 242; Lane v. Cotton, 12 Mod. 488); that there was no evidence of a refusal (Green v. Dunn, 3 Camp. 215, n; Alexander v. Southey, 5 B. & A. 247), which decide that an offer to pay must be absolute and unqualified (Strong v. Harvey, 3 Bin. 304; Sutton v. Hawkins, 3 C. & P. 359; ——— v. Thompson (2 C. & P. 50); and that it was no part of the duty of a solicitor to receive mortgage-money, or give up title-deeds deposited with him by or for his employers. (Mune v. Joliffe, 1 M. & R. 327; Sykes v. Giles, 5 M. & W. 645.) Cur. adv. vult.

The judgment of the Court was now pronounced by

DENMAN, C. J. to the effect following: There are three questions in this case: 1st, whether the plaintiff was entitled to maintain this action; 2nd, whether the defendants were the proper parties against whom to have brought it; 3rd, whether there was evidence of a conversion. On the first point we think that no one but Jobson can be supposed to have a claim to these title-deeds, and that he had not, because the deed of mortgage to him was silent respecting them, and, as there was no claiming under the deed of 1830, which was a good execution of the power, the delivery of the title-deeds by Mary Davis was a delivery to the plaintiff as well as her husband. The plaintiff, then, had a superior right to Jobson, and, therefore, also to a stranger, who cannot be permitted to set up a mortgagee's title. And the defendants were strangers, because their right terminated with that of the person from whom they derived it, with the life-estate of the husband. Secondly, we are of opinion that an agent is liable for conversion. Stephens v. Badcock does not apply; Crouch v. White (1 Bin. N. C.) is much more general, and shews that the action will lie. Thirdly, we are of opinion that the refusal to deliver up, except on a condition which the defendants had not the right to impose, was a conversion. This is not the case of Alexander v. Southey, for here the defendants are not principals, but agents, and rely, not on their duty to another, but on their own right. Rule discharged.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Saturday, June 29.

JENKYNS v. USBORN.

An unpaid vendor of an interest in a contract for the delivery of goods may, on the insolvency of the purchaser, stop the goods in transitu.

The transfer to a bonâ fide holder for value of a delivery-order, where the party transferring is not in possession of the bill of lading, does not defeat the right of stoppage in transitu.

H. and C. ordered of L. and Company, merchants at Leghorn, a quantity of beans. L. and Company shipped a larger cargo than the quantity ordered, and forwarded to the plaintiff, their agent in England, two bills of exchange, drawn on H. and C. one for the portion of the cargo ordered by H. and C. and the other for the residue, and a bill of lading for the entire cargo indorsed by the shippers in blank. The bill of lading was delivered by the plaintiff to H. and C. on their accepting the bill for that portion of the beans ordered by them; and on their declining to take the residue of the cargo and accept the other bill, the plaintiff himself accepted it, and it was paid at maturity. H. and C. wrote to the plaintiff acknowledging that the residue of the cargo belonged to him, and gave him a delivery-order on the captain for the same. The plaintiff sold his interest in the cargo to T. and handed to him the delivery-order. T. pledged the order with the defendant for a valuable consideration: afterwards, on the 1st of July, T. became a bankrupt. On 2nd of July the vessel arrived with the beans, when the plaintiff gave notice to the captain not to deliver the portion sold to T. On the 16th of July H. and C. received their division of the cargo, and on the 9th of August there was evidence of a conversion by the defendant.

Held that, T. not having paid his purchase-money, the plaintiff had a right, under the above circumstances, to stop in transitu his share of the cargo, and that he had duly exercised that right.

Held also, that on the delivery to H. and C. of their share of the cargo, the residue became vested in the plaintiff, and that he might therefore maintain trover for a subsequent conversion.

This was an action of trover, in which a verdict had been taken for the plaintiff for 320*l.* 11s. 9d. as the amount of damages, subject to the opinion of the Court on a special case, from which it appeared that Messrs. Hunter and Coventry, English merchants, had ordered of Messrs. John Lloyd and Company, merchants at Leghorn, a quantity of Saxon beans. Lloyd and Company shipped a larger quantity than was ordered, and transmitted to the plaintiff, who was their general agent in this country, two bills of exchange drawn on Hunter and Coventry—one for 539*l.* 9s. 1d. being the amount to be paid for the beans ordered by Hunter and Coventry; and the other for 317*l.* 14s. 6d. the value of the residue of the cargo of beans, consisting of 1,442 sacks and three-fourths of a sack, together with a bill of lading, which covered the whole shipment, and was made out to the order of the shippers, and indorsed in blank by Lloyd and Company. Hunter and Coventry accepted the bill drawn on them for 539*l.* 9s. 1d. but declined to take the residue of the cargo and to accept the other bill. The plaintiff upon this delivered the bill of lading to Hunter and Coventry, and accepted himself the bill for 317*l.* 14s. 6d. which was afterwards paid at maturity to the house of Lloyd and Company at Leghorn; and Hunter and Coventry wrote a letter to the plaintiff, dated 24th of May, 1841, by which they acknowledged that that portion of the beans for which the bill for 317*l.* 14s. 6d. was drawn belonged to the plaintiff, and handed to him a delivery-order to receive these beans. The order was addressed to the captain of the vessel (The Agnes), and authorized him to deliver 1,442 sacks and three-fourths of Saxon beans to the bearer. The plaintiff sold to one Thomas his interest in the smaller portion of the cargo (being that for which the bill for 317*l.* 14s. 6d. had been drawn), and sent to Thomas, for his acceptance, a bill drawn on him by John Lloyd (who happened then to be in England), in the name of the firm John Lloyd and Company, and which was indorsed by them to the plaintiff. Upon the purchase by Thomas, the delivery-order from Hunter and Coventry was handed to him by the plaintiff; and Thomas subsequently transferred this order to the defendant as a security for an advance of money, which was, upon the faith of such order, made to him by the defendant. Afterwards, on the 1st of July, 1841, a fiat in bankruptcy issued against Thomas. On the 2nd of July The Agnes arrived with the cargo of beans, and thereupon the plaintiff gave notice to the captain not to deliver the 1,442 sacks and three-quarters, on receiving the delivery order given by Hunter and Coventry. The captain being indemnified by the defendant, refused to comply with this, and to deliver these beans to the plaintiff.

On the 16th July 1841, that portion of the cargo which belonged to Hunter and Coventry was del-vered to them, and afterwards, on the 9th August, the conversion of the beans by the defendant took place, there being on that day a formal demand and refusal.

The case was argued in Easter Term last by Shee, Serjt. (with Addison), for the plaintiff, and Byles, Serjt. (with Ogle), for the defendant, when the following cases were cited: Brandt v. Bowlby (2 B. & Ad. 932); Mitchell v. Ede (11 Ad. & Ell. 888); Haille v. Smith (1 Bos. & P. 563); Anderson v. Clark (2 Bing. 20); Bryans v. Nix (4 M. & W. 775); Evans v. Nicol (3 M. & G. 614); Akerman v. Humphrey (1 C. & P. 53); Tucker v. Humphrey (4 Bing. 516); Abbott on Shipping, 7th ed. p. 526; Litt v. Cowley (7 Taunt. 169); Whitehead v. Anderson (9 M. & W. 518); Morison v. Gray (2 Bing. 260); and Re Westzinthus and Others (5 B. & Ad. 817).

Cur. adv. vult.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was an action of trover, in which the plaintiff sought to recover the value of a quantity of beans under the circumstances stated in a special case. On the part of the defendant it was contended that by the indorsement of the bill of lading by John and Thomas Lloyd to Hunter and Coventry, coupled with the acceptance by Hunter and Coventry of a bill of exchange for 539*l.* in payment of that part of the cargo which equalled the amount of their order, the property in the whole cargo was transferred to Hunter and Coventry, and that there could be no property in the plaintiff as agent to Lloyd and Co. or in his own right. We cannot, however, agree to this proposition. The delivery of a bill of lading indorsed, as was done in this case, puts it in the power of the indorsee to transfer the property to a bonâ fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, and that deprives the original owner of any right of stoppage in transitu; but, as between the original parties, the consignor and consignee, the question, whether the property passed, will depend on what the real intention of the contract was. If Messrs. Hunter and Coventry had accepted the two bills of exchange drawn on them, the property in the whole cargo would have passed to them; but they declined to do so, and entered into an agreement with the plaintiff, the nature of which is to be collected from the letter of the 24th May, 1841, and the delivery order made in pursuance thereof. This agreement, so far as the assent of John and Thos. Lloyd is necessary to give validity to it, appears to us to have been sufficient, and was ratified by them, inasmuch as the bill of exchange accepted by the plaintiff, which was in their hands, is shewn to have been paid to them by the plaintiff—a fact which is quite inconsistent with the notion of the plaintiff having acted merely as their agent in accepting the bill. The effect of this agreement, then, appears to us to have been to give the right to Hunter and Coventry to take possession of and receive their proportion of the cargo on the ship's arrival, and to the plaintiff a right to receive the residue. It was further contended on behalf of the defendant, that, supposing the interest should have been held to have passed to the plaintiff under this agreement, still no particular specific amount of the cargo passed to him, and consequently that there was no such property in the plaintiff as was necessary to support an action of trover. Upon the part of the plaintiff it was admitted that, until the division of the cargo between Hunter and Coventry and the plaintiff, there was no specific appropriation of any part of the cargo to the plaintiff; but it was contended, and we think rightly contended, that on the delivery to Hunter and Coventry of their share of the property, the residue of the cargo was vested in the plaintiff, who might therefore well maintain this action for the subsequent conversion, provided he had a right to stop the goods in transitu, and he duly exercised that right. The general right of an unpaid vendor of goods to stop in transitu, notwithstanding the acceptance of bills for the value of the goods, was not and could not be disputed. (Feise and Another v. Wray, 3 East, 93.) But it was objected, that it is only the owner of the goods who could exercise this right; that the property in the goods had not vested in the plaintiff at the time of the stoppage, but only the interest in the right to receive a certain portion of the cargo to be afterwards ascertained and appropriated to the parties interested. But we see no sound distinction with reference to the right of stopping in transitu between the sale of the goods of which the party is the vendor, and the sale of the interest which he has in a contract for the delivery of the goods to him: if he may rescind the contract in the one case, on the insolvency of the purchaser, he must, by parity of reasoning, have a right to rescind it also in the other. But it is further objected, that the agreement between the plaintiff and Thomas, coupled with the delivery-order by the indorsee of the bill of lading, and the subsequent transfer of the right of Thomas to the defendant, for a valuable consideration, put an end to the right of stoppage in transitu. Such an agreement was treated as equivalent to an actual assignment of the bill of lading, which, if made to a bonâ fide purchaser for value, would have that effect. The actual giving of the indorsed bill of lading might undoubtedly, by indorsement, transfer a greater right than he himself has. It is at variance with the general principle of law that a man should be allowed to transfer to another a right which he has not; but the exception is founded on the nature of the instrument in question; which being, like a bill of exchange, a negotiable instrument, for the general convenience of commerce, has been allowed to have an effect at variance with the ordinary principles of law; but this operation of a bill being derived from its negotiable quality, appears to us to be confined to a case where the person who transfers the right is himself in possession of the bill of lading, so as to be in a situation to transfer the instrument itself, which is the symbol of the property. In the present case, Thomas was not in possession of the bill of lading; he had only an order on the captain to deliver the goods on their arrival; and when, under the circumstances stated in the case, that order was handed over to the defendants, it appears, that though the interest in the contract passed, the interest in the goods did not pass as it would have done if the transfer had been by the assignment of the bill of lading; but such interest in the goods was still liable to be determined by the insolvency of Thomas on a proper exercise of the right of stopping in transitu. No case has been found exactly resembling the present; but the observations of Burrough, J. in the case of Akerman v. Humphrey (1 Car. & P. 53), appear to us to be very applicable to the present case. In that case, certain goods had been consigned by Dent to Hutchinson, the invoice had been sent to him, and a shipping-note, apprising him that the goods had been shipped on board for him at Hayes's wharf. Hutchinson handed over the shipping-note to Akerman, as a security for the money advanced by Akerman, and gave him an order on the wharfinger to deliver the goods on their arrival. Hutchinson became insolvent, and the goods were stopped in transitu. Burrough, J. said, "I do not think the giving of the shipping-note and the delivery order to the plaintiff made a change of the property, and I think the shipping-note does not amount to a bill of lading; a bill of lading is exactly like a bill of exchange, and the property it refers to passes by indorsement on it, but not by delivery of it without indorsement. I do not think that this shipping-note, from the nature of it, is indorsable, and here, in point of fact, it is not indorsed; therefore, in my judgment, that is no change of property." Another objection to the plaintiff's right to recover was slightly glanced at, though apparently but little relied upon, namely, that Thomas was the person intrusted with the delivery-order within the meaning of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 94, s. 3, and is capable of making a valid claim. We think there is no ground for this objection, for the Act appears to us intended only to apply to persons intrusted with such documents in the capacity of factors or agents, and Thomas was in possession of the documents in question, not as the agent of another, but in his own right; on the whole, we think, for the reasons we have assigned, that none of the objections which have been urged can be sustained, and, consequently, there will be Judgment for the plaintiff.

BONZI and ANOTHER v. STEWART.

Trover for bales of silk—Plea, that D. and Co. the factors of the plaintiffs, were intrusted by the plaintiff with certain dock-warrants for the delivery of the bales of silk, and that D. and Co. had applied to the defendant for an advance of money on the said bales of silk, and that it was agreed between D. and Co. and the defendant to pledge with the defendant the said bales of silk, as a security for the money. That, in pursuance of such agreement, the bales of silk were pledged, and the dock-warrants delivered to the defendant, who advanced thereon the money, without notice that D. and Co. were not the actual owners of the bales of silk. Replication, that D. and Co. were not so intrusted by the plaintiffs with the said dock-warrants, nor did D. and Co. so agree with the defendant to pledge the said bales in manner and form, &c. Held, on special demurrer, that the replication was bad for duplicity.

The declaration was in trover for bales of silk.

The defendant, among other pleas, pleaded,—thirdly, as to four of such bales, that certain persons using the firm, &c. of Douglas, Anderson, and Co. were the factors of the plaintiffs, and that the said Douglas and Co. were intrusted by the plaintiffs with, and were in possession of, four dock-warrants for the delivery of the said four bales of silk, and that Douglas and Co. being so intrusted, applied to the defendant for the advance of a certain sum of money upon the pledge of the said four bales of silk. The plea then set out an agreement between Douglas and Co. and the defendant, to pledge with the defendant the four bales of silk as a security for the money to be advanced, and then, that Douglas and Co. in pursuance of such agreement, did pledge the four bales of silk, and deliver to the defendant the four dock-warrants, as security for the money advanced; and that the defendant advanced such money on the faith of such dock-warrants, and had not notice that Douglas and Co. were not the actual owners of the said bales. The plaintiffs replied, that Douglas and Co. were not so intrusted by the plaintiffs with the said dock-warrants, nor did Douglas and Co. so agree with the defendant to pledge the said bales in manner and form, &c. To this replication the defendant demurred specially, on the ground of duplicity.

Shee, Serjt. for the defendant, and Sir Thomas Wilde, for the plaintiff, argued this demurrer in Easter Term last, when the following cases were referred to: Robinson v. Rayley (1 Burr. 316); Bell v. Tuckett (3 M. & G. 785); Bennison v. Thelwell (7 M.&W. 512); Purchell v. Salter (1 Q. B. 209); Webb v. Weatherby (1 Bing. N. C. 502); Brogden v. Marriott (2 Bing. N. C. 473); Pigeon v. Osborn (12 Ad. & Ell. 715); Selby v. Bardons (3 B. & Ad. 1); O'Brien v. Saxon (2 B. & C. 908); Carr v. Hinchliff (4 B. & C. 547); Isaac v. Farrer (1 M. & W. 65); Humphreys v. Churchman (Rep. temp. Hard. 289).

Cur. adv. vult.

Judgment of the Court was now delivered by

TINDAL, C. J.—This was an action of trover, to which the defendant pleaded various pleas; the plaintiff having replied, the defendant has demurred to the replication to the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh pleas; and as the same question arises on each of the replications, it is sufficient to advert to the third plea and the replication thereto. That replication was objected to on the ground that it is double, and puts in issue two separate and independent facts, either of which, it is contended, if separately traversed, affords a complete answer to the plea; namely, the fact of Douglas, Anderson, and Co. being intrusted with the dock-warrants mentioned in the plea, and also the fact of their agreeing to pledge the bales of silk that are described in those dock-warrants. As a general proposition, it cannot be denied that a number of facts may be so connected together as to form but one point of defence so as to admit of their all being put in one and the same traverse; a familiar illustration of which rule occurs where the assignees of a bankrupt sue in trover, and the plaintiffs allege that they were possessed as assignees; the defendants may plead that the plaintiffs were not possessed as assignees, thereby putting in issue the whole of that complicated chain of facts which go to constitute their valid title as assignees. The difficulty, however, arises, not in laying down the rule, which is well established, but in the application of it to each particular case. It is frequently a matter of difficulty to say whether several facts that go towards the constituting of the defence are so connected together as to form one complex point of defence so as to admit of their being joined in one traverse, or that several of these facts, together constituting a defence, are so disconnected that the opposite party is obliged to select some one single isolated fact, and traverse it, thereby admitting all the rest. In Robinson v. Rayley (1 Burr. 316), which is a leading case on the subject, the defendant to an action of trespass quare clausum fregit appears to have pleaded "prescriptive right of common," by which he put the cattle into the close in question, being his own commonable cattle, levant and couchant; the plaintiff traversed that they were his own commonable cattle levant and couchant, and the Court held that the whole complex proposition was capable of being joined in one traverse. This case has been followed by many others cited in the argument, namely, Bennison v. Thelwell, Purchell v. Salter, Pigeon v. Osborn, Bell v. Tuckett, and others. It is not necessary to examine these cases in detail, because the principle on which they proceed is not disputed, but only the application of that principle to the present case. The plea in this case alleges—[his lordship here read the plea]. The question is, whether the two allegations in this plea—namely, that Douglas, Anderson, and Co. were intrusted with the dock-warrants mentioned in the plea, and that they agreed to pledge the silk mentioned in those dock-warrants—do constitute one point of defence, or whether the plea consists of two separate and independent allegations, each of which, if traversed singly, is an answer to the plea; and we think those allegations in the plea are of the latter description, and are allegations of facts independent of each other. The denial that the factors were intrusted with the dock-warrants is a complete answer to the plea, and, if found for the plaintiffs, would entitle them to a verdict. Again, the denial that they agreed to pledge the silks with the defendant, is a complete answer to the plea, and, if proved for the plaintiffs, entitles them to a verdict. In the case of Robinson v. Rayley, which has been alluded to, where the defendant alleges that the cattle turned into the locus in quo were his own commonable cattle, levant and couchant, he is giving the same description of the same cattle, and the replication only denies the truth of his entire description of the same cattle; but, in the present case, the defence consists of two separate facts, arising and happening at different times—the intrusting to the factors by the plaintiff at one time, and the agreement made between the factors and the defendant, at another time, to pledge the articles: each of those facts being independent of the other, and having with it no necessary connection. The present case resembles very nearly the case De Wolf and Another v. Bevan and Another,(a) determined in the Court of Exchequer last term. For the reasons above given, we think the replication is too large, and ought not to be allowed; but we think it is not unreasonable, where the question is one of considerable nicety, that the plaintiffs should be at liberty to amend their replication on payment of costs, if they should be so advised, and to take issue on either of the separate allegations in the plea; otherwise,

Judgment for the defendant.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

LYON v. REED.

JUDGMENT.

[Note by the EDITOR.—In consequence of the great importance of this case, we hasten to give, instead of our usual brief notes, the verbatim report of the judgment, which was taken for the Real Property Reports of the Verulam Society. The arguments and cases cited will be set out at length in the Verulam Reports. The judgment contains a statement of the facts and will be sufficient for the purpose here. The importance of this case must be our apology for trespassing so largely upon our columns.]

Where reversions or incorporeal hereditaments which pass only by deed are disposed of, there cannot be a surrender of a lease by act and operation of law.

PARKE, B. delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was a special case, which was argued in Easter Term. It was an action of debt by the plaintiff, as assignee of the reversion of certain houses and rope-walks at Shadwell, which were held under a lease from the Dean of St. Paul's, against the defendants, who are executors of one Shakespeare Reed, deceased. The plaintiff claims from the defendants nineteen years of rent, accrued due between Christmas 1820, and Christmas 1839, partly in the lifetime of Shakespeare Reed, who held the premises during his life, and partly since his decease, while the premises were in the possession of the defendants, his executors. The material facts of this case are as follows:—The premises in question are parcel of the possessions of the Dean of St. Paul's, and it appears, on the 26th of December, 1803, the then dean demised a large estate at Shadwell, including the house and premises in question, to two persons of the names of Ord and Planta, for a term of forty years, commencing at Christmas 1803, and which would therefore expire at Christmas 1843. On the 24th of March, 1808, Ord and Planta made an underlease of the premises in question to Shakespeare Reed for thirty-four years, commencing from Christmas 1807, so that the term created by this underlease would expire at Christmas 1841, leaving a reversion of two years in Ord and Planta. The rent sought to be recovered is the rent which accrued due on the underlease between Christmas 1820 and Christmas 1839. It appears that, previously to the month of October 1811, Robert Hentshaw Barber and Francis Charles Parry were appointed by the Court of Chancery trustees for the Bowes family in the place of Ord and Planta, who had been formerly trustees, and by an indenture, dated 3rd of October, 1811, indorsed on the lease of 1803, all the property at Shadwell demised by that lease was assigned by Ord and Planta to Barber and Parry, the trustees succeeding them. Soon after this assignment, the Bowes family appear to have negotiated with the Dean of St. Paul's for a renewal of the lease of 1803, and, accordingly, a new lease was executed by the dean, dated on the 7th April, 1812, for a term of forty years, from Christmas 1811, and which term would, therefore, endure to Christmas 1851. This lease, unfortunately, instead of being made to Barber and Parry, the new trustees, in whom the old term (subject to the underlease to Reed) was vested, was made to Ord and Planta, the old trustees; the fact of the change of trustees and the assignment of the 3rd October, 1811, having at the time escaped observation. In this state of things a private Act of Parliament was passed, enabling the dean and his successors for the time being to grant leases of the Shadwell estate to the trustees of the Bowes family, for successive terms of ninety-nine years, renewable for ever. This Act, which is entitled "An Act to enable the Dean of St. Paul's, London, to grant leases of messuages, tenements, lands, and hereditaments in the parish of Saint Paul, Shadwell, in the county of Middlesex, and to enable the lessees to grant subleases for building on and repairing that estate," and which received the Royal assent on the 22nd July, 1812, begins by reciting the will of Mary Bowes, whereby she bequeathed her leasehold estate at Shadwell, held under the Dean of St. Paul's (being the estate afterwards demised by the leases of 26th December, 1803 and the 7th April, 1812), to Ord and Planta on certain trusts for the Bowes family; and then, after reciting the lease of the 7th of April, 1812, and after stating that it would, for the reasons therein mentioned, be beneficial to all parties that the dean should be empowered to grant long leases of the Shadwell property perpetually renewable; and further stating that Ord and Planta were desirous of being discharged from their trust, and that John Osborn and John Burt had agreed to act as trustees in their place; it enacted that it should be lawful for the dean and his successors for the time being, and he and they are thereby required, on a surrender of the existing lease, to demise the Shadwell estate to Osborn and Burt, their executors, administrators, and assigns, for a term of ninety-nine years, and at the end of every fifty years to grant a new lease on payment of a nominal fine, with various provisions (which it is is unnecessary to state) for securing to the dean and his successors a proportion of all improved rents to be thereafter obtained; and by the second section of the Act it is enacted that immediately on the execution by the dean of the first lease for ninety-nine years, to be granted in pursuance of the Act, the lease of the 7th April, 1812, should become void. It is plain from the provisions contained in this Act, that the persons by whom it was obtained were not aware, or had forgotten, that in the month of October preceding Ord and Planta had assigned their interests in the property to Barber and Parry, the new trustees appointed by the Court of Chancery. In pursuance of the Act of Parliament, by an indenture of three parts, dated the 31st day of August, 1812, and made between the dean of the first part, Thomas Bowes (the party beneficially interested for his life) of the second part, and Osborn and Burt of the third part, the dean demised the Shadwell property to Osborn and Burt for a term of ninety-nine years, and the demise is expressed to be made as well in consideration of the surrender of the lease of the 7th April, 1812, "being the lease last existing," as also of the rents and covenants, &c. Mr. Bowes, and Osborn and Burt, his trustees, appear to have discovered, some time before the month of January 1814, the mistake into which they had fallen, and, for the purpose of curing this defect, two further deeds were then executed. By the former of those deeds, which bears date the 6th January, 1814, made between Barber and Parry of the one part, and the dean of the other part, reciting that at the time of the granting of the lease of the 7th of April, 1812, the estate and interest created by the original demise of the 26th of December, 1803, was vested in Barber and Parry; and also reciting that the fact of the assignment to them by the deed of the 3rd of October, 1811, was not known to the parties by whom the said act was solicited; it is witnessed that Barber and Parry did bargain, sell, and surrender to the dean the whole of the said Shadwell estate, to the intent that the term of forty years, created by the lease of the 26th December, 1803, might be merged in the freehold, and that the dean might execute a new lease to Osborn and Burt, according to the said Act. By the other deed, which bears date the 29th January, 1814, and is made between the dean of the first part, and the said Thomas Bowes of the second part, and the said Osborn and Burt of the third part, the dean, in consideration of the effectual surrender of the two prior leases of the 26th December, 1803, and 7th of April, 1812, and for the other considerations therein mentioned, demised the Shadwell estate, pursuant to the said Act of Parliament, to Osborn and Burt, their executors, administrators, and assignees, for a term of ninety-nine years. The interest of Osborn and Burt, under these two leases to them has, by various assignments, become vested in the plaintiff, and there can be no doubt that he is as well entitled to receive the rent in question in this action as Osborn and Burt would have been.

Such being the principal facts, we must consider how they bear on the several issues raised by the pleadings. The declaration, after stating the demise from the dean to Ord and Planta in 1803, and the underlease from them to Reed in 1808, goes on to state that by the deed of the 3rd of October, 1811, Ord and Planta assigned all their interest in the premises to Barber and Parry, and that the dean, being seized of the reversion expectant on the term of forty years so assigned to Barber and Parry by the indenture of the 31st of August, 1812, demised the premises to Osborn and Burt for a term of ninety-nine years, by virtue whereof they became entitled to the reversion for that term. The declaration then goes on to state that, by the indenture of the 6th January, 1814, Barber and Parry assigned their interest to the dean, to the intent that he might grant a new lease to Osborn and Burt, and that afterwards, on the 29th of January, 1814, the dean, by the indenture of that date, made a new demise of the premises to Osborn and Burt for a fresh term of ninety-nine years, they by the same indenture surrendering the former term created by the demise of the 31st of August, 1812. The declaration then traces the title in the present plaintiff by assignment from Osborn and Burt previously to Christmas 1820, and so claims title to the rent accrued due after that date. To this declaration the defendants pleaded six pleas: 1st. A plea traversing the averment, that at the time of the demise to Osborn and Burt of the 31st of August, 1812, the dean was seized in fee of the reversion. 2ndly. A plea traversing that demise. 3rdly. A plea, traversing the assignment by Barber and Parry to the dean, to the intent that he might grant a new lease to Osborn and Burt. 4thly. A plea, traversing the surrender by Osborn and Burt of the first term of ninety-nine years. 5thly. A special plea, stating the indenture of the 7th of April, 1812, whereby Ord and Planta became entitled to the reversion for forty years from Christmas, 1811, and continued until, up to, and after the execution of the indenture of the 29th of January, 1814. 6thly. A plea, traversing the demise to Osborn and Burt by the indenture of the 29th of January, 1814. Issue was joined on all the pleas except the fifth, and to that the plaintiff replied, that after the making of the lease of the 7th of April, 1812, and before the lease of the 31st of August, 1812, a private Act of Parliament was passed, authorizing the dean, on the surrender of the existing lease, to grant a lease for ninety-nine years to Osborn and Burt; and the replication then avers that the lease of the 31st of August, 1812, was duly made in pursuance of the Act, and that at the time when it was made, the lease of the 7th of April, 1812, was duly surrendered. To this the defendant rejoins, traversing the surrender of the lease of the 7th of April, 1812, and on this issue was joined. The second, third, and sixth issues, it will be observed, are mere traverses of the execution of deeds which are found by the special case to have been duly executed, and as the traverse merely puts in issue the fact of the execution, and not the validity of the deeds, or the competency of the parties to make them, the verdict in those issues certainly must be entered for the plaintiff, and also that on the fourth issue, whereby the defendant traverses the surrender by Osborn and Burt of the first term of 99 years, on the demise of the second term being made to them. It is quite clear that the acceptance of the second demise was of itself a surrender in law of the first, even if no surrender, in fact, was made. For whom, then, is the verdict on the remaining issues, the first and fifth, to be entered? The issue on the fifth plea is, it will be observed, whether the lease of the 7th of April, 1812, was duly surrendered at the time of the making of the indenture of the 31st August, 1812; and the issue on the first plea is substantially the same; for if the plaintiff succeeds in shewing that the indenture of the 7th of April, 1812, was duly surrendered, as set forth in his declaration, then it follows that the dean was at that time seized of the reversion; and so the plaintiff must succeed on the first issue. If, on the other hand, he fails on the fifth issue, he must also fail on the first. The real question, therefore, for our consideration is, whether the plaintiff has succeeded in shewing that the term of the 7th April was surrendered previously to the execution of the indenture of the 31st August, 1812. On this subject it was argued by the counsel for the plaintiff, 1st, that the circumstances of the case warranted the conclusion that there was an actual surrender in fact; and, if that be not so, then, 2ndly, that they prove conclusively a surrender in point of law. We will consider each of these propositions separately. And, first, as to a surrender in fact; the subject-matter of the lease of the 7th April, 1812, was, it must be observed, a reversion; a matter, therefore, lying in grant, and not in livery, and of which, therefore, there could be no valid surrender, in fact, otherwise than by deed; and on this part of his case, therefore, the plaintiff must make out that, before the execution of the first lease for ninety-nine years, Ord and Planta, by some deed, not now forthcoming, assigned or surrendered to the dean the interest which they had acquired under the lease of the 7th of April. But what is there to warrant us in holding that any such deed was ever executed? Primâ facie, a person setting up a deed in support of his title is bound to produce it; but, undoubtedly, this general obligation admits of many exceptions. Where there has been long enjoyment of any right which could have had no lawful origin except by deed, there, in favour of such enjoyment, all necessary deeds may be presumed, in the absence of any thing to negative such presumption. Has there, then, in this case, been any such enjoyment as may render it unnecessary to shew the deed on which it has been founded? The only fact, as to enjoyment, stated in the case, has precisely an opposite tendency: it is stated, so far as relates to the property, the rent of which forms the subject of this action, namely, the houses, &c. underlet to Reed, that no rent has ever been paid, and, therefore, as to that portion of the property included in the lease of April 1812, there has certainly been no enjoyment inconsistent with the hypothesis that that lease was not surrendered. The circumstances on which the plaintiff mainly relies as establishing the fact of a surrender by deed, are the statements in the two leases to Osborn and Burt, that they were made in consideration, inter alia, of the surrender of the lease of the 7th of April, and the fact of that lease being found among the dean's muniments of title. These circumstances, however, appear to us to be entitled to very little weight. The ordinary course pursued, on the renewal of a lease, is for the lessee to deliver up the old lease on receiving the new one, which usually states that it is made in consideration of the surrender of the old one. No surrender by deed is necessary where, as is commonly the case, the former lessee takes the new lease; and all which is ordinarily done to warrant the statement of the surrender of the old lease, as part of the consideration for granting the new one is, that the old lease itself, i. e. the parchment on which it is ingrossed, is delivered up. Such surrender affords strong evidence that the new lease has been accepted by the old tenant, and such acceptance undoubtedly operates as a surrender by operation of law, and so both parties get all which they require. We collect from the documents that this was the course pursued on occasion of making the lease of the 26th December, 1803, and the lease of the 7th April, 1812; and we see nothing whatever to warrant the conclusion that any thing else was done on occasion of making the lease to Osborn and Burt. When a surrender by deed was understood by the parties to be necessary, as it was with reference to the term assigned to Barber and Parry, where it was regularly made, the deed of surrender being indorsed in the lease itself, there is no reason for supposing that the same course would not have been pursued as to the lease of April 1812, if the parties had considered it necessary; if any surrender had been made, no doubt the deed would have been found with the other muniments of title. But no such deed of surrender is forthcoming, and we see nothing to justify us in presuming that any such deed ever did exist. We may add that the statement in the new lease of the surrender of the old one cannot certainly of itself afford any evidence against the present defendants, who are altogether strangers to the deed in which those statements occur. It remains to consider whether, although there may have been no surrender in fact, the circumstances of the case will warrant us in holding that there was a surrender by act and operation of law. On the part of the plaintiff, it was contended that there is sufficient to justify us in such a conclusion; for, it is said, the fact of the lease of the 7th of April, 1812, being found in the possession of the dean, even if it does not go to the length of establishing a surrender by deed, yet it furnishes very strong evidence to shew that the new lease granted to Osborn and Burt was made with the consent of Ord and Planta, the lessees under the deed of the 7th of April, 1812; and this, it is contended, on the authority of Thomas v. Cookes (2 B. & Ald. 119), and Walker v. Richardson (2 M. & W. 882), is sufficient to cause a surrender by operation of law. In order to ascertain how far those two cases can be relied on as authorities, we must consider what is meant by a surrender by operation of law. This term is applied to cases where the owner of a particular estate has been a party to some act, the validity of which he is by law afterwards estopped from disputing, and which would not be valid if his particular estate had continued to exist. There the law treats the doing of such act as amounting to a surrender. Thus, if a lessee for years accept a new lease from his lessor, he is stopped from saying that his lessor had not power to make the new lease; and as the lessor could not do this until the prior lease had been surrendered, the law says that the acceptance of such new lease is of itself a surrender of the former. So, if there be tenant for life, remainder to another in fee, and the remainder-man comes on the land and makes a feoffment to the tenant for life, who accepts livery thereon, the tenant for life is thereby estopped from disputing the seizin in fee of the remainder-man, and so the law says that such acceptance of livery amounts to a surrender of his life estate. Again, if tenant for years accepts from his lessor a grant of the rent issuing out of the land, and payable during the term, he is thereby estopped from disputing his lessor's right to grant the rent; and as this could not be done during his term, therefore he is deemed in law to have surrendered his term to the lessor. It is needless to multiply examples. All the old cases will be found to depend on the principle to which we have adverted, namely, an act done by or to the owner of a particular estate, the validity of which he is estopped from disputing, and which could not have been done if the particular estate continued to exist; the law there says that the act itself amounts to a surrender. In such case, it will be observed, there can be no question of intention. The surrender is not the result of intention. It takes place independently, and in spite of intention. Thus, in the cases which we have adverted to, of a lessee taking a second lease from the lessor, or a tenant for life accepting a feoffment from the party in remainder, or a lessee accepting a rent-charge from his lessor, it would not at all alter the case to shew that there was no intention to surrender the particular estate, or even that there was an express intention to keep it unsurrendered; in all these cases the surrender would be an act of the law, and would prevail in spite of the intention of the parties. These principles are all clearly deducible from the cases and doctrine laid down in Roll, and collected in Viner's Abridgment, title Surrender F. & G. and in Comyn's Digest, title Surrender, T. & T. 2, and the authorities there referred to. But in all these cases it is to be observed the owner of the particular estate, by granting or accepting an estate or interest, is a party to the act, which operates as a surrender; that he agrees to an act done by the reversioner, is not sufficient. Brooke, in his Abridgment, title Surrender, pl. 46, questions the dictum of Prowick, who says, "If a termor agrees that the reversioner shall make a feoffment to a stranger, this is a surrender;" and says he believes it is not law; and the contrary was expressly decided in the case of Swift v. Heath (Carthew, 110), where it was held that the consent of the tenant for life to the remainder-man making a feoffment to a stranger did not amount to a surrender of the estate for life; and to the same effect are the authorities in Viner's Abridgment, Surrender, F. 3 & 4. If we apply these principles to the case now before us, it will be seen that they do not at all warrant the conclusion that there was a surrender of the lease of the 7th of April, 1812, by act and operation of law. Even adopting, as we do, the argument of the plaintiff that the delivery up by Ord and Planta of the lease in question affords cogent evidence of their having consented to the making of the new lease, still there is an estoppel in such a case. It is an act, which, like any other ordinary act in pais, is capable of being explained, and its effect must, therefore, depend not on any legal consequence necessarily attaching on and arising out of the act itself, but on the intention of the parties. Before the Statute of Frauds, the tenant in possession of a corporeal hereditament might surrender his term by parol, and, therefore, the circumstance of his delivering up his lease to the lessor might afford strong evidence of a surrender in fact, but certainly could not, on the principle to be gathered from the authorities, amount to a surrender by operation of law, which does not depend on intention at all. On all these grounds, we are of opinion that there was in this case no surrender by operation of law, and we should have considered the case as quite clear, had it not been for some modern cases, to which we must now advert. The first case, we believe, in which any intimation is given that there could be a surrender by act and operation of law by a demise from the reversioner to a stranger, with the consent of the lessee, is that of Stone v. Whiting (2 Starkie, 236), in which Holroyd, J. intimated his opinion that there could; but there was no decision, and he reserved the point. This was followed soon afterwards by Thomas v. Cooke, reported in 2 Starkie, 408, and 2 B. & Ald. 119. That was an action of debt by a landlord against his tenant from year to year, under a parol demise. The defence was, that the defendant Cook, the tenant, had put another person (Parkes) in possession, and that Thomas, the plaintiff, with the assent of Cook, the defendant, had accepted Parkes as his tenant, and that so the tenancy of Cook had been determined. The Court of King's Bench held that the tenancy was determined by act and operation of law. It is matter of great regret that a case involving a question of so much importance and nicety should have been decided by refusing a motion for a new trial. Had the case been put into a train for any solemn argument, we cannot but think that many considerations might have been suggested which would have led the Court to pause before they came to the decision at which they arrived. Mr. Justice Bayley, in his judgment, says the jury were right in finding that the original tenant assented; because, he says, it was clearly for his benefit; an observation which shews very forcibly the uncertainty which the doctrine is calculated to create. The acts in pais which bind parties by way of estoppel, are but few, and are pointed out by Lord Coke (Co. Lyt. 352, a). They are all acts which anciently really were, and in contemplation of law, have always continued to be, acts of notoriety; not less formal and solemn than the execution of a deed, such as livery, entry, acceptance of an estate, and the like. Whether a party had or had not concurred in an act of this sort was deemed a matter which there could be no difficulty in ascertaining, and then the legal consequences followed. But in what uncertainty and peril will titles be placed if they are liable to be affected by such accidents as those alluded to by Mr. Justice Bayley. If the doctrine of Thomas v. Cooke should be extended, it may very much affect titles to long terms of years, such as mortgage terms, in which it frequently happens that there is a consent, express or implied, by the legal term, or a demise from the mortgagor to a third person. To hold that such a transaction could, under any circumstances, amount to a surrender by operation of law, would be attended with most serious consequences. The case of Thomas v. Cooke has been followed by others, and acted upon to a considerable extent; whatever doubt, therefore, we might feel as to the propriety of the decision, that in such a case there was a surrender by act and operation of law, we should probably not have felt ourselves justified in overruling it; and perhaps the case itself, and others of the same description, might be supported upon the ground of the actual occupation by the landlord's new tenant, which would have the effect of eviction by the landlord himself, in suspending the rent or compensation for use and occupation during the continuance of that occupation. But we feel fully warranted in not extending the doctrine of that case, which is open to so much doubt, especially as such a course might be attended with very mischievous consequences to the security of titles. If, in compliance with these cases, we hold that there is a surrender by act and operation of law, where the estates dealt with are corporeal and in possession, and of which demises may therefore be made by parol or writing, and where there is an open and notorious shifting of the actual possession, it does not follow that we should adopt the same doctrine, where reversions or incorporeal hereditaments are disposed of, which pass only by deed. With respect to these, we think we ought to abide by the ancient rules of the common law, which have not been broken in upon by any modern decision; for that of Walker v. Richardson, in 2 M. & W. 882, which has been much relied on in argument, is not to be considered as an authority in this respect, inasmuch as the distinction, that the right to title lay in grant, was never urged, and probably could not have been with success, as the leases perhaps passed the interest in the soil itself. Moreover, according to the report of that case, it would seem that the new lessees, before they accepted their lease, had become entitled to the old lease by an actual assignment from the old lessee. There could of course be no doubt, if this were so, that the old lease was destroyed by the grant and acceptance of the new one. It is, however, right to say, that we believe this statement to have crept into the report inadvertently, and that there was not in fact any such assignment.

The result of our anxious consideration of this case is, that the verdict on the issues on the first plea, and on the rejoinder to the replication to the fifth plea, must be entered up for the defendant; and as those pleas go to the whole cause of action, the judgment must be for him. In the case as it was originally stated, it did not appear that there had been any change of dean since the original demise in 1803. We desired to have the case amended on this point, in order that the fact might appear, if the case should be turned into a special verdict; for during the incumbency of the dean who made the lease for ninety-nine years, that lease would be good, independently of the private Act; and as the immediate reversion on which the defendant's lease depended was assigned to the dean by Barber and Parry previously to the demise of the 29th of January, 1814, that reversion undoubtedly passed to Osborn and Burt, and would enable them, or the plaintiff claiming under them, to sue for the rent so long as the estate of the same dean continued, whether the lease for ninety-nine years was or was not warranted by the Act; and so the plaintiff might possibly have been entitled to judgment non obstante veredicto. It appears, however, by the case as now amended, that the Bishop of Lincoln, who was the dean granting the lease of ninety-nine years, ceased to be dean, and was succeeded by Dr. Van Mildert in October 1820, before any part of the rent sought to be recovered in this action had accrued due, and therefore no question on this head arises. It appears that, in 1820, the difficulties in which the parties had involved themselves, by neglecting to get a proper surrender of the lease of the 7th April, 1812, was brought under the consideration of the Court of Chancery in a suit there pending relative to the affairs of the Bowes family. Master Cox, by his report of the 15th of February, 1820, stated that he was of opinion that both the leases of ninety-nine years were void: the first, because it was made when the original term of forty years was outstanding in Barber v. Parry; and the latter, because, at the time of its creation, the lease of the 7th of April, 1812, was still outstanding—thus shewing clearly his opinion that nothing had happened to cause a surrender of that lease by operation of law, and he recommended that an Act of Parliament should be obtained to remedy the defect. His report was afterwards confirmed, and the second Act stated in the case was accordingly obtained. That Act, which received the royal assent on the 15th of July, 1820, enacted that the lease of the 29th of January, 1814, should be valid to all intents and purposes, and further, that immediately after the passing of the Act, the leases of the 26th of December, 1803, the 7th of April, 1812, and the 31st of August, 1812, should be void to all intents and purposes. The effect of this was to destroy altogether the reversion in respect of which the rent now sought to be recovered was payable, and it may, therefore, well be doubted whether, even if all the issues had been found for the plaintiff, he could have had judgment. It is sufficient for us to say, that the Act certainly does not entitle the plaintiff to any thing which he would not have been entitled to if no such Act had passed, more especially, when it is considered that by the saving clause the defendants are excepted out the operation of the Act. The result therefore is, that the verdict on the first and fifth issues must be entered up for the defendant, and on the other issues for the plaintiff, and there will be Judgment for the defendant.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Tuesday, July 19.

Ex parte GIBBS re GIBBS.

Uncertificated bankrupt—Solicitor—Costs.

Quære, whether costs awarded to an uncertificated bankrupt (who was a solicitor, and acted on his own behalf) on a petition, to which he was a respondent in the character of a trustee, belong to his assignees or not?

The bankrupt, in this case, was a solicitor. By an order of the Court of Review on a petition, to which the bankrupt was a respondent in the character of a trustee, costs were awarded to him. As the bankrupt had acted as his own solicitor, but had not received his certificate, the assignees gave notice to the parties ordered to pay the costs, not to pay them to the bankrupt.

Swanston now moved, on the part of the bankrupt, that these costs should be paid as directed by the order of the Court. He cited Chippendale v. Tomlinson (Cooke's Bankrupt Law, 428.)

Bacon, for the assignees, cited Crofton v. Poole (1 B. & Adol. 568).

Trower, for the party by whom the costs were to be paid.

Swanston, in reply.

The Chief Judge.—The costs in this case are incurred by the bankrupt as respondent in the character of a trustee. Costs are adjudicated to him by the Court, by an order to which the assignees are parties. It was ordered that the costs of the bankrupt and the assignees should be paid to them severally. The assignees have never instituted any proceeding, or taken any step for the purpose of claiming the benefit of this order. They have merely given notice to the party liable, to pay them to them. Under all the circumstances combined, without entering into the question of the general law, I am of opinion that I ought to let the matter take its course; the party obtaining the order to be at liberty to issue a writ for the costs, and the assignees to be at liberty to take such proceedings as they may be advised. If they intend to sue the bankrupt, I shall not interpose to prevent them. I order that the registrar do issue to Mr. Gibbs a writ for the costs, without prejudice to any question as to the title to the costs when recovered. With regard to the costs of this application, there was certainly a question to be raised; but I am of opinion that the party ordered to pay the costs might have paid them to the bankrupt without being liable to pay them over again; and it was incumbent on the assignees to institute some proceedings of their own if they intended to follow up their claim. As, then, between the parties who have created the difficulty and the assignees, I shall give no costs. As between the assignees and the bankrupt, I reserve the question of costs. All I do now is to order that the registrar do immediately deliver to Mr. Gibbs a writ for the costs in dispute.

BUCKINGHAM SUMMER ASSIZES, 1844.

(Before Mr. Baron Alderson.)

Reg. v. Purcell.

Semble—In an indictment for larceny for extracting of a ham and a loaf, if it turns out that the thing produced as the "ham" does not come within the meaning of that word, still evidence may be given of the theft thereof; for proof of the theft of the so-called ham would be proof of the theft of the loaf which was taken at the same time.

To semble further—Like law holds, though the indictment be for larceny of the loaf alone.

The indictment charged that the prisoner burglariously entered the house of Richard Cave with intent to steal the goods of Richard Hazelwood, and that he stole a ham, the property of the said Richard Hazelwood, and three loaves, the property of the said Richard Cave.

The evidence shewed that the so-called ham was not ham, but pork, which was in the process of curing, and had not yet become ham.

The only evidence against the prisoner consisted of testimony which shewed him to have been in the possession of this pork within a very few hours after the burglary.

Alderson, B. said it did not signify by what name the pork was called; the tracing into the possession of the prisoner something which had been stolen from the prosecutor's house at the time of the burglary made him guilty of the larceny of the loaves, which had been taken at the same time.

The prisoner was convicted of burglary, and sentenced to ten years' transportation.

Mills, for the prosecution.

Sanders, for the prisoner.

[N.B. The indictment for burglary is sustained by proof of burglarious entry with the felonious intent laid in the indictment. The felonious intent is laid in general language, "with intent the goods and chattels of one A B, in the said dwelling-house then and there being, then and there feloniously and burglariously to steal, take, and carry away." (Vide Archbold's Criminal Pleadings, 9th ed. p. 301.) So the indictment on the above case was fully sustained by the facts detailed.]

Reg. v. Wheeler.

The fact of striking a man with the fist with force enough to break his jaw is not, per se, evidence sufficient of intent to do grievous bodily harm.

The prisoner was indicted for feloniously cutting, stabbing, and wounding one Birch. (7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 84, s. 4.)

The prosecutor's evidence shewed that he and a companion were walking, and came up to prisoner, who was fighting with his brother.

The prosecutor's companion said the Wheelers were very quarrelsome people, whereupon the prisoner knocked the said companion down, and said he would do the same to the prosecutor if he would fight. The prosecutor refused, and threatened to take the law. The prisoner struck the prosecutor a blow with his fist, which broke prosecutor's jaw on both sides of his face.

Alderson, B. directed the jury that striking a blow in the face with the fist is not a striking with intent to do grievous bodily harm. There is no deliberate intention to that effect.

The prisoner was acquitted of the felony, and found guilty of an assault, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment with hard labour.

Wells, for prosecution.

Sanders, for prisoner.

[Note.—Wounding includes contusions which break the skin. (See Archbold's Criminal Pleadings, 9th ed. p. 259.) The charge of felony against the prisoner failed for want of proof of the intent.]

Reg. v. Crouch.

Possession of stolen property is not enough to convict a man of burglary if the evidence discloses that he could not have entered the house. Proof of his presence must be adduced.

The prisoner was indicted for burglary.

The evidence traced some of the stolen property to the prisoner's possession within a very short time after it was stolen; but it also shewed that the hole by which the entry had been effected was too small to admit the prisoner. This defect was supplied by evidence of admission by the prisoner—that he had stood on the outside whilst others entered and handed out the property.

The jury at first returned a verdict of guilty of receiving stolen goods.

Alderson, B.—He is guilty of the burglary, or of nothing. Perhaps you don't know that being present whilst others did it is the same thing as doing it.

The jury then found a verdict of guilty; and the prisoner was sentenced to transportation for ten years.

Wells, for prosecution.

The prisoner was undefended.

Reg. v. Chandler and Keen.

Semble—Circumstances simply indicative of a common intention to poach will not make one of the poachers answerable if one of his companions kills a keeper whilst he is himself continuing his flight.

Suspicion that A B intends to arrest C D will not, per se, clear C D from the charge of murder if he kills A B to prevent the arrest.

The prisoners were indicted for the murder of one Leech. In this case the evidence was that Elliot and Leech, who acted in the capacity of gamekeepers, were in search of snares, and came to a ditch, where they found the prisoner Keen with a gun, which they wrested from him. Elliot then went towards one snare, and Leech towards another. Keen and Chandler came up to Elliot, and afterwards they were joined by a third man. On this the keeper shouted for assistance, and the three men set off running. Chandler picked up a hurdle-stake, and said to the keepers, "If I had my butty's gun I'd blow your brains out." The three men ran over several fields, Elliot went for assistance, and Leech pursued the men at the distance of a few yards. After getting over a hedge, a game-bag, which was on Chandler's arm, detained him. Leech was at this time stepping over the ditch which was between the hedge and where Chandler stood; Chandler turned round, struck him from above with the hurdle-stake (a stick about three feet long, and about the thickness of a man's wrist, as the witness described it). The blow felled Leech, and he died a few days after in consequence of it. At the time the blow was struck, Keen and the third man were continuing their flight.

Alderson, B. ruled that there was no evidence whatever against Keen—no common purpose which could make him answerable for the acts of Chandler. Chandler's act was, under the circumstances, separate and unconnected with any thing that related to Keen, and not done in the pursuance of any common purpose agreed on between them. He directed the jury to acquit Keen. He, moreover, ruled, that nothing turned on the question of whether the gamekeeper had been properly authorized or not; nor on whether Leech was pursuing with intent to arrest Chandler, for that Chandler had struck Leech when he was not in the act of arresting him. So, all discussion as to Leech's authority was beside the question, and as to Leech's intention, that was equally so. He directed the jury on the law which distinguishes between murder, manslaughter, and simple misadventure. The jury found Chandler guilty of manslaughter, and acquitted Keen. Chandler was sentenced to fifteen years' transportation.

Prendergast, for the prosecution.

Sanders, for Chandler.

Wells, for Keen.

[Note.—If Leech had been in the act of arresting Chandler, then Chandler would have been free from murder if he had even killed Leech, unless Leech had been duly authorized to effect the arrest; but since Leech was not in the act of arresting Chandler, there was no legal occasion for, or justification of, Chandler in striking Leech.]

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

The County Courts Bill is abandoned for the Session, and nothing is yet heard of the Debtors and Creditors Bill, though we are still assured that it is to form one of the few results of this most fruitless session. Mr. Kelly's Criminal Appeal goes into committee, but it is not expected to go much further until a vacation has afforded leisure for its examination.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

DISSENTERS' CHAPELS BILL.

MONDAY, July 15.—The LORD CHANCELLOR, in calling attention to the amendments of the Commons on the Dissenters' Chapels Bill, adverted to the anticipated opposition to be given, not to the amendments, which would be perfectly consistent, but to the principle of a Bill which had received the sanction of both Horses of Parliament. He hoped that their lordships would confine themselves to the real question before them, which was their agreement or disagreement with the amendments, and entreated them not to put such a slight on the House of Commons as to seize the present opportunity to reject a Bill which, in both Houses, had been passed by large majorities.—The Bishop of LONDON admitted that he was taking an unusual course, only to be justified by the urgency of the case. In opposing the Bill at this final stage his conduct might be deemed pertinacious; but as all the arguments urged in opposition to the Bill remained unanswered, pertinacity became a virtue. After arguing at considerable length against the Bill, he moved that the amendments of the Commons be taken into consideration that day three months.—The Bishop of DURHAM spoke in favour of the Bill, which he considered as a measure of justice, from which no evil effects could flow.—Lord BROUGHAM urged that the Commons' amendments were decided improvements on the Bill, and professed himself unable to discover any reasonable ground for their rejection.—The Bishop of NORWICH approved of the Bill, which was based on the principle of doing as we would be done by.—The Earl of RODEN opposed the Bill at considerable length, contending that, if passed, it would be a blot on the statute-book. Little did he think, some five or six years ago, when opposing, with the present Lord Chancellor, the measure of spoliation known as the "Appropriation Clause," such a measure as the present would be brought in by those calling themselves Conservatives. —Lord COTTENHAM affirmed that the measure was strictly Conservative in its principle, its object being to protect those in the possession of property which was theirs by prescription and use, and to which no other body could substantiate a claim.—Lord TEYNHAM, the Earl of GALLOWAY, and Lord LYTTLETON opposed the Bill, and on a division there appeared—

For the Bishop of London's amendment (present and proxies)......	41
Against it (present and proxies)....	202
Majority..................	—161

The Commons' amendments to the Bill were then agreed to, and the House adjourned.

ALIENS BILL.

THURSDAY, July 18.—Lord BROUGHAM said, he rose to move the second reading of the Aliens Bill—a measure coming from the other House, of which he had taken charge. In doing so he felt it right to state to their lordships what were the principal points of this very important measure, to which he called the particular attention of the noble duke opposite and of the noble earl the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. Their lordships were aware of the law which, time out of mind, had prevailed in this country on the subject of aliens—namely, that till they were naturalized by Act of Parliament, or denizened by letters of denization from the Crown, they were debarred from many great and important privileges. They could not hold any office; they could not sit in the House of Commons; they could not possess by purchase house or land, freehold or leasehold property. To which had been added certain other restrictions and regulations, which he thought both discreditable and impolitic. They could not, for instance, register themselves as owners of vessels. These were the common and ordinary disqualifications of aliens; but there were also several Acts, passed at different times, containing other restrictions. The noble and learned lord then proceeded to notice some of he anomalies and inconsistencies connected with the existing law in respect to aliens. With regard to Naturalization Bills, he said that the expense of each was not less than 100*l.* and the average number passed in the course of the year did not exceed eight. A committee of the House of Commons had considered the subject, and the result of their deliberations was the present measure, which he now proposed should be read a second time The Bill enabled aliens to be naturalized without the necessity of coming to Parliament, subject to a discretionary power vested in the Secretary of State for the Home Department; and on being naturalized they would enjoy all the privileges of natural born subjects, with the exception of the right to vote for members of Parliament; an exception, however, the expediency of which he did not perceive. Aliens, on being naturalized, were to take a most minutely-framed oath of allegiance. The Bill also enabled every person born out of her Majesty's dominions of a British mother to enjoy all the rights of a natural born subject; and in committee he should propose to add, that the foreign wives of British subjects should also be taken to be naturalized by their marriage ipso facto. There was one defect in the Bill, namely, that it had no compensation clauses; but these must be left to be added by the House of Commons, as their lordships could not supply that deficiency. The Bill was then read a second time.

ART-UNIONS BILL.

Lord MONTEAGLE moved the second reading of a Bill to legalize art-unions, the purport of which he would explain in a few words. These art-unions might be simply described as voluntary associations of individuals who contributed their money to form a fund, which was placed at the disposal of a superintendent committee of management, to be expended in the purchase of works of art, the distribution of which took place by lot. These associations originated in the report of a committee of the House of Commons of 1836; before which, various persons of great eminence were examined, both English and foreign, and among them was a distinguished subject of Prussia—Dr. Waagen, who stated that for many years previous to that inquiry, from 1825, he (Lord Monteagle) believed, there had existed in Prussia a Kunstverein, or Art-Union. Similar associations existed in Hanover, Bavaria, Wurtemberg, and other parts of the continent; and on this plan the Art-Union of London was formed. At first it received but slight encouragement; but the number of subscribers had subsequently rapidly increased, and the present contributions of the Art-Union of London for the purchase of works of art amounted to a much larger sum than was appropriated to that purpose by the munificence of Parliament. The subscribers to the London Art-Union had increased from some 400 to near 14,000; they had acquired the patronage of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge and of a host of influential persons among the nobility and gentry. But, by a certain construction of the Act for suppressing lotteries, it appeared that every one of those persons, and all the members of the societies throughout the country, were liable to pains and penalties. Their lordships had recently passed a measure for protecting those who had incurred penalties in horseracing bets. Now, surely the present was a far more favourable case, as the societies had acted for a very laudable object, on a bonâ fide impression of the law, and under the advice of two such eminent lawyers as Sir E. Sugden and Mr. F. Kelly. (Hear, hear.) However, the Government had very properly served all the societies with notice that they incurred the risk of prosecution; and this was properly done, because otherwise, if they were to be allowed to go on, the whole system of lotteries, which had been abandoned by the state as illegal, might be revived for the private purposes of speculation. (Hear, hear.) The measure he recommended contained two important provisions; the first legalized all past transactions, embracing, as they had done, the proceedings of societies not only in the metropolis, but in most of our great towns. (Hear, hear.) The other provision was, that on approval of the Board of Trade, any societies might in future be legalized after the 1st of January next. He could not avoid adding that he had given this power to the Board of Trade partly from what he had read in the highly-valuable third report of the School of Design Commission. He could not help further stating that it was of the highest importance, if the measure were approved of, that it should pass as speedily as possible. (Hear, hear.) He should be forgiven for saying a word on behalf of a body whom it deeply concerned—the artists of the country (hear, hear), who, from these societies choosing their prizes from the annual exhibitions, were accustomed to look upon them as their best customers, preparing paintings with a view to this source of demand, which, unless the measure were speedily passed, would be thrown upon their hands with great loss and grievous disappointment. (Hear, hear.) Their lordships must be desirous of protecting these societies and the artists from actions of speculating attorneys. And although he advocated the case on higher than merely commercial grounds, the reports of the School of Design Commission shewed forcibly the numerous benefits accruing to our manufactures from the encouragement afforded to art by the diffusion of correct taste in design promoted by such institutions. The schools of design now included some 1,500 ingenious and industrious persons of both sexes, whose progress in art was greatly aided by the influence of these societies, and who vastly improved our manufactures. The Bill was then read a second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE LAW OF SETTLEMENT.

FRIDAY, July 12. Mr. LIDDELL wished to know whether the right honourable baronet at the head of the Home Department was prepared to bring in any Bill upon the question of settlement during the present session?—Sir JAMES GRAHAM said, that a Bill had been prepared upon that subject; and before the close of the session, he would move for leave to bring it in, that it might be taken into consideration during the recess.

CHAIRMAN OF THE MIDDLESEX SESSIONS.

Sir C. NAPIER wished to ask the right hon. baronet at the head of the Home Department whether it was his intention to introduce during the present session a Bill for giving a salary to the chairman of the Middlesex Sessions?—Sir J. GRAHAM said that he had brought in a Bill for the better administration of justice in criminal cases in Middlesex, and that, among its other provisions, it fixes a salary for the chairman of the Quarter Sessions of the county.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE (MIDDLESEX) BILL.

Sir J. GRAHAM said this Bill, which he begged leave to introduce, was for the better administration of criminal justice in Middlesex. The effect of this measure would be to give the Middlesex magistrates jurisdiction throughout Westminster, and a control over the Bridewell as well as the Middlesex Prison. It proposed also that the adjourned quarter sessions should be held at least twice every month in Middlesex, the effect of which would be that every fortnight there would be a gaol delivery in Middlesex. When the necessary arrangements should be made, and a prison provided, it would be duty of the metropolitan magistrates to commit for trial to the Middlesex Prison generally, except for henious offences. The effect of this delivery would be to relieve Newgate from its present crowded condition, to diminish the expenses of the city of London and the costs of the county of Middlesex, and to confer incalculable benefit by more frequent gaol deliveries. He should not have felt himself justified in recommending this change, unless he had made provision for a competent judge to preside at these sessions. A measure similar to this had been contemplated by his predecessor, but a difficulty had arisen as to the appointment of a chairman, his predecessor thinking it improper to call upon the public to pay the salary of the chairman, if he was to be elected by the Middlesex magistrates, instead of being nominated by the Crown. The Middlesex magistrates had, however, now consented to leave the appointment of the chairman to the Crown if the public would consent to pay his salary. He would not then trouble the House with any further details of the measure; he had brought forward the measure as soon as its details could be satisfactorily adjusted, and he was anxious that the Bill should pass without delay.—Mr. HAWES did not doubt that the measure was a valuable one in a public point of view. He could, however, have wished that the right hon. baronet had also looked to the Surrey side of the water, where there was an enormous gaol delivery. A similar provision for that portion of the county of Surrey would have been most valuable, and the whole jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court would have been brought into something like uniformity. He could have wished, also, when this Bill was under the consideration of the right hon. gentleman, that he would have considered what were the claims of those who administered justice in the Central Criminal Court. He thought the learned Solicitor-General would concur with him in thinking that the system of the Central Criminal Court might have been reviewed. He could not recognize the justice of providing for Middlesex the great advantage of a judge to be appointed by the Crown, and to be paid by the Crown, without extending similar privileges to the county of Surrey; and if the Bill should be found to work well in Middlesex, he hoped the county of Surrey would be considered in a future session.—Mr. Trotter said the idea of a paid chairman of the Surrey Sessions had been scouted.—Mr. Hawes said he thought he had seen the hon. gentleman's name to a document recommending a provision to be made for a paid chairman for Surrey.—Mr. T. Duncombe said he understood there was a great difference of opinion as to this measure amongst the Middlesex magistrates. He wished to ask the right hon. baronet whether one of the conditions of the Bill was the reconstruction of the Coldbath-fields Prison, and the adoption of solitary cells?—Sir J. Graham said, that adequate accommodation would be provided in that prison.—Mr. Duncombe: Who are to bear the expense?—Sir J. Graham: That will be borne by the Middlesex county rates.—Leave having been given to bring in the Bill, it was read a first time, and the second reading was fixed for Monday.

Sir J. Graham then obtained leave to bring in a Bill to amend the laws relating to insuring farm buildings. The Bill was of considerable importance, and the necessity for its introduction had arisen from a decision which had left a part of the criminal law in some uncertainty. It was now proposed by this Bill to include the firing certain out-buildings within the crime of fire-raising. The Bill was read a first time, and ordered to be read a second time on Monday.

LAND TAX COMMISSIONERS' NAMES BILL.

Monday, July 15.—On the second reading being proposed, Mr. Williams said he objected to the mode in which these names were selected. He thought one member of that House should have the privilege of selecting those names as well as another.—Lord Worsley entered into a statement respecting the rejection by the commissioners of some names he had suggested for his district. He found out of seventeen names twelve were clergymen. To those clergymen that were not connected by property with the county he objected; but the commissioners replied they saw no reason to alter the list. At some future stage he intended to move that all the names be read.—Captain Pechell wished to give the members for the places where the commissioners sat more power over the lists than they now had.—Mr. Williams moved that two names be added to those for the county of Warwickshire.—The gallery was cleared but no division took place.—Mr. Williams said he considered it of great importance that the land-tax commissioners should be judiciously chosen, as from them were selected the income-tax commissioners. The result of the present system was, that some numbers were placed in a class inferior to that of others, in reference to their power of appointing members of the land-tax commission, which was now entirely in the hands of the county members.—Sir R. Peel had never heard that there was any allegation of abuse under the present system, or opposition to the principle of the Bill. He believed that the cause of the nomination being placed in the hands of the county members was jealousy of the Government. The Bill then went through committee.

PARISH CONSTABLES BILL.

Mr. V. Smith said he wished to ask the right hon. gentlemen opposite whether Government were prepared to make the payment of constables by parishes peremptory?—Sir J. Graham was in hopes that the practice of paying parish constables would be generally adopted; in a great number of parishes it had been brought into operation. He could not say, however, that he thought it had lasted a sufficient time to enable him to say that the experiment had been successful. The Bill was then read a second time.

CIVIL AND CORPORATE OFFICES.

Tuesday, July 16.—Lord Seymour obtained leave to bring in a Bill to facilitate admission to civil and corporate offices. Under former Acts such facilities had been given to various classes of Dissenters, and the object of the present Bill was to extend the principle to other classes of Dissenters than those now embodied, and also to Jews.

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

ARSON, &c.

The following return was published on Monday:—A statement of the number of persons committed, convicted, and executed, for arson and other wilful burning in England and Wales, during each of the six years which have elapsed since 1837, when the law was mitigated, with the total numbers; also the number of persons committed, convicted, and executed, for arson and other wilful burning in England and Wales, during each of the six years preceding the year 1837, when the law was mitigated, with the total numbers; likewise, the centesimal proportions of convictions to commitments, during each period of six years preceding and following the mitigation of the law.

The Sinking Fund.—Mr. Joseph Hume has just obtained a return of the sums appropriated to the creation or support of a sinking-fund from the year 1786 downwards—that is to say, since the passing of Mr. Pitt's Act in that year for the purpose in question. As no summary is given of this voluminous return, it would occupy more time and labour than we can at present afford to make the numerous arithmetical calculations which would be necessary in order to arrive at an accurate general result. It may therefore be sufficient to state on this occasion, that from 1786 down to 1794 the annual amount so appropriated to the creation or support of the sinking-fund was never less than 500,555*l.* nor more than 1,872,200*l.*; that from 1794 to 1798 the said amount was never less than 2,143,595*l.* nor more than 3,400,670*l.*; that from 1798 to 1801 it fluctuated between 4,118,236*l.* and 4,911,135*l.*; from 1801 to 1813 it gradually increased at the rate of about a million sterling per annum (in round numbers), the amount appropriated in 1812 having been 13,975,551*l.*; in the year 1820 it increased to 16,305,590*l.*; and in 1821 to 17,510,628*l.* which seems to have been the highest annual amount ever appropriated. In 1824 the amount was reduced to 7,505,271*l.* (or more than 50 per cent. in one year), since which period it has been gradually reduced, the last amount given in the return (that appropriated in 1829) having been only 1,543,186*l.* Several other interesting statements are given, of the capital stock purchased, the interest thereon, and the amount of sinking fund applied to the public services, for which we regret we have no room. The gross total amount applied to the payment of Dissenters upon the reduction of the Five per Cents. the Four per Cents. and other stocks, between 1823 and 1829 inclusive, was, in round numbers, 8,955,000*l.* The sinking fund loan of 59 Geo. 3 (12,000,000*l.*) created a capital stock of 17,152,000*l.*; that of 1 Geo. 4 (12,000,000*l.*) created a capital stock of 17,064,000*l.*; that of 1 and 2 Geo. 4 (13,000,000*l.*) a capital stock of 16,892,990*l.*; and that of 3 Geo. 4 (7,500,000*l.*) a capital stock of 9,339,687*l.* The Act 10 Geo. 4, c. 27, directs that in lieu of the sum of 3,000,000*l.* required (by the 9 Geo. 4, c. 90) to be issued towards the reduction of the national debt, there shall be issued, from and after July 5, 1829 (for the same purpose), such annual sum as shall appear to be the actual annual surplus revenue of the United Kingdom beyond the actual annual expenditure thereof.

Appeals.—A return of the number of causes or petitions heard on appeal before the Lord Chancellor and her Majesty's Privy Council during the last two years, with the dates of such hearing, &c. has just been printed, on the motion of the hon. member for Montrose. It hence appears that the total number of such causes, &c. which were heard on appeal before the Lord High Chancellor, between Easter Term in the year 1842, and Hilary Term, 1844 (inclusive), amounted altogether to 117; in all of which causes judgment had been given, with the exception of nine. It further appeared that the total number of causes or petitions heard on appeal before her Majesty's Privy Council, from the 1st day of January, 1842, to the 29th day of February, 1844, amounted to ninety-two, in three of which cases judgment has not been delivered.

Member returned to serve in this present Parliament.—Borough of Birmingham—Richard Spooner, esq. in the room of Joshua Scholefield, esq. deceased.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

Nothing of moment calls for comment. Judgment on the Writ of Error in O'Connell's case is expected to be given in the House of Lords early in the ensuing week. It is, we believe, understood that the judges were unanimous in their opinion that the judgment ought to be affirmed, but the delay has been occasioned by the necessity of collecting and condensing their replies to the questions submitted to them, and which, when framed, have again to be sent them for final approval.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

Again the heavy judgments delivered at the close of the Term occupy a large portion of our pages; but their great value and interest make apology needless. Of one remarkable case, that of Lyon v. Reed, in the Exchequer, we have procured a verbatim report; for the judgment contains a more extensive and valuable body of law than has been offered by any case since the commencement of our labours. We have also to direct the attention of our readers to an interesting account of the conflict between the Bar and the Bench in Paris, with which we have been favoured by an eminent Avocat who has taken a prominent part in the affair. To-day, the usual summary of the decisions of the two last Terms is commenced, and will, we trust, help the practitioner in noting up his books, as well as to refresh his memory by a succinct and collected review of the law as recently settled by the various judges.

REVIEW OF THE CASES DECIDED IN ALL THE COURTS OF COMMON LAW,

During Easter and Trinity Terms and Vacations, 1844.

In consequence of the proximity of Easter and Trinity Terms, we were obliged to review the cases decided in them together, and the late period at which some of the judgments were given has necessarily delayed this notice. We have now completed the review of what may be called the legal year from Michaelmas 1843 to Trinity Vacation 1844.

ATTORNEY AND SOLICITOR.

Liability of Attorney.—In our review of Michaelmas Term (2 Law T. 293) we noticed the case of Jarmain v. Hooper (since reported in 1 Dowl. & Lowndes, 769), in which the client was held liable in trespass for the false instructions given by his attorney to the sheriff, and the consequent wrongful seizure of goods, and we have now to add an important case, which, carrying out the principles laid down there and in Codrington v. Lloyd (8 Ad. & El. 449), has determined that an attorney is liable in trespass who causes an arrest at the suit of his client under final process, if the judgment be subsequently set aside for irregularity, and that the fact of such judgment having been in existence at the time of the execution is not even admissible in evidence for mitigation of damages. (Rundle v. Little, 3 Law T. 100, 202.) In an action brought against attorneys, being partners, for negligence, the verdict must be against all or none, for it is, in fact, an action ex contractu, although in form ex delicto. (Davies v. Lock, 3 Law T. 125.)

Authority of Attorney.—The Court of Queen's Bench have followed the old decisions upon the effect of an attorney acting without authority (Salk. 86 and 88), although, as it seems to us, not easily reconcilable with any legal principles. In Harrison v. Potts (3 Law T. 178) they refused to interfere to set aside proceedings where the defendant had been taken in execution upon a judgment obtained in consequence of an attorney having appeared for him without authority, and where the arrest was the first intimation of the existence of such an action. The refusal was grounded upon the apparent ability of the attorney to pay the costs of any action brought against him, so that an act by a party assuming to be authorized is to be considered the act of the principal whose agent he pretends to be, or not, according to the solvency or insolvency of the pretended agent. The only reason we can see for such a decision, which would not hold good in any other questions of contract, is the danger that a contrary decision would give rise to numerous applications by defendants where no strict evidence existed of an express retainer, which, in practice, is so often thought unnecessary.

Bill of Costs.—Lester v. Lazarus (2 C. M. & R. 165) has been sometimes considered an authority to shew that an attorney's bill need not necessarily contain the name of the court in which the business was done; but it must in future always be inserted, or the omission will render the bill a nullity. (Lewis v. Primrose, 3 Law T. 219.)

Taxation.—We have so recently (see "Practical Notes," supra, p. 232) given a view of the decisions on this subject, that we now have only to add the case of Re Pator (3 Law T. 240). From this we learn, that a party in whose favour an order is made for payment of taxed costs may, without any express direction to that effect, make the order a rule of Court; thereby giving it the force of a judgment under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 111, and obtain the costs of doing so from the party against whom the order was made. The judge's order in this case was—"And I further order, that the Master do tax the costs of such reference, and certify what shall be found due to or from either party in respect of such bill and demand, and of the costs of such reference, to be paid according to the event of such taxation, pursuant to the statute." The application in the principal case was made one month after the delivery of the bill; but the Court in their judgment do not seem to have laid any stress upon the words "subject to such conditions and directions," in the 37th section, but rather upon the words in the 43rd; and as that section refers to every application under the Act, we apprehend that this decision will apply to all cases in which the costs of the reference are ordered to be paid.

Attorneys—Partners.—Hasland v. Young (3 Law T. 34; 13 L. J. 205, Q. B.) may be placed under this head, although an illustration of the general subject of partnership. It was there held that one of two attorneys cannot bind the firm by an undertaking for the payment of the debt and costs of a client in order to procure his discharge from custody, it not being an undertaking in the usual course of business. This should be carefully borne in mind in compromises and settlements of actions.

BANKRUPTCY.

Annulling fiat.—A new and important point was decided in Trinity Term, as to the effect of an order of the Lord Chancellor annulling a fiat. There were strong dicta by Lords Eldon, Hardwicke, and Macclesfield, that the old supersedeas, which was equivalent to the present order to annul, was so completely retrospective as to put the parties into the same position as if a commission had never issued; and so, in the case of Smallcombe v. Ollivier (3 Law T. 222), it was contended that a sheriff, who, during the existence of a fiat, had returned nulla bona to a writ of fi. fa. against the bankrupt, was by the order annulling the fiat rendered liable in an action for a false return. The Court of Exchequer would not admit such a doctrine, the strange and startling consequences of which are well pointed out in their judgment, and they decided that the sheriff was not liable. Any other decision, indeed, would have rendered an alteration by statute imperative.

Composition by petitioning creditor with bankrupt.—The 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 8, is directed against any collusive proceedings between the petitioning creditor and the bankrupt, for the purpose of obtaining more than a due proportion of his debt, and even, independently of that section, an agreement to abandon the fiat upon such terms cannot be enforced (Davis v. Holding, 1 M. & W. 159); but the debt will not be forfeited unless the proceedings in bankruptcy be continued either on the old fiat or on a new one (Davis v. Holding, 11 Ad. & El. 710); and by the recent case of Belcher v. Sambourne (3 Law T. 53, 280), it is decided that the petitioning creditor will not be liable to repay or deliver up the money or security so obtained to the assignees suing merely in their capacity as assignees, but only to the person or persons specially appointed by the commissioners.

Proof under fiat pending action.—Since the judgment only entitles the plaintiff to costs, they cannot be proved under a fiat obtained before the judgment; yet if the creditor proves for the debt, and then takes proceedings by sci. fa. in the judgment to obtain the costs, the Court will interfere to stay the proceedings, as the suit has, by the proof of the debt, been legally relinquished. (Woodward v. Meredith, 3 Law T. 207.)

Protected transactions. — Another doubtful point, arising upon the interpretation of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, has been settled by Whitmore v. Green (3 Law T. 59, 211). Skey v. Carter (1 Law T. 173; 11 M. & W. 571), having finally determined that executions under warrants of attorney were not protected by the words of that Act, against a fiat intervening between seizure and sale, and the proviso excluding contracts, dealings, &c. from protection in cases of actual notice of a prior act of bankruptcy, the question naturally arose as to the effect of a notice of an act of bankruptcy between the seizure under such execution and the sale. The Court of Exchequer held that the execution being actually completed before the fiat, and the notice given subsequent to the seizure, it was protected. In this case the execution creditor was sued with the sheriff in trover, and the Court observed that even had the execution been invalid, he could not be liable in that form of action merely because he received the proceeds.

Right of bankrupt to after-acquired property.—The important question of the right of a bankrupt twice certificated, and who has not paid 15s. in the pound, to after-acquired property, was decided in the Exchequer Chamber in Herbert v. Sayer (13 L. J. 269, Q. B.), in which the judgment of the Queen's Bench was reversed. (See 1 Law T. 169) It was an action brought by indorsee against acceptor, and the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had been twice bankrupt, and his estate had not paid 15s. in the pound, whereby the cause of action had vested in the assignees, but did not allege any interference on the part of the assignees. The Court of Queen's Bench held the plea good, but the Court of Error unanimously reversed their judgment. They decided that a twice-certificated bankrupt was in the same position with respect to property acquired after the second certificate as an uncertificated bankrupt was with respect to property acquired after the assignment before the recent statute. This was the opinion of the Court of Exchequer in Fyson v. Chambers (9 M. & W. 460), and in accordance with reason and convenience: for were it otherwise, there would be no protection to parties dealing with bankrupts twice certificated; for the protecting statutes only contemplate transactions before the fiat. The cases of Kitchen v. Bartsch (7 East, 53), Fowler v. Down (1 Bos. & Pul. 44), and Drayton v. Dale (2 B. & C. 293), shew that an uncertificated bankrupt had a right to such property, against all but his assignees. A twice-certificated bankrupt is, therefore, in fact, only an agent contracting for and on behalf of his assignees, and, according to the general rules of agency, entitled to sue in his own name until his principals interpose. The case of Young v. Rishworth (8 Ad. & Ell. 872) cannot, therefore, be supported, except as to the retrospective operation of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 127, which, indeed, seems there to have formed the main subject of consideration.

Set-off and mutual credit.—It was long ago decided that the holder of a bill may prove against the drawer's estate, before it is dishonoured by the acceptor (Starey v. Barns, 7 East, 435), and in accordance with this, in the case of Alsager v. Currie (3 Law T. 59; 13 L. J. 203, Ex.(a)) it was held that bankers who had discounted and become indorsees of bills drawn by the bankrupt were entitled to set off the amount in an action brought by the assignees before the bills became due for the balance of the bankrupt's account in their hands, for "it was a mutual debt and credit" within 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 50. This case well illustrates the distinction between the statutes of set-off and the rights of set-off in bankruptcy. The principle of the former is to avoid circuity of action, and all that is required is, that they shall be legal debts due to each in his own right; while the object of the latter is to do substantial justice between the parties; for, on the one hand, the debt need not be such as the defendant could have sued the bankrupts for, nor, on the other hand, would such a debt suffice if it appeared that, although recoverable in a cross-action, it would only be recovered in trust for another. (Fair v. McIver, 16 East, 130; Forster v. Wilson, 12 M. & W. 191.)

(a) See form of plea and replication in this case (11 M. & W. 14).

CONTRACTS.

Acceptance of goods.—Although it is quite clear that delivery to a carrier appointed by the vendee of goods is not a sufficient compliance with the Statute of Frauds, which requires both delivery and acceptance (see Bill v. Bament, 9 M. & W. 36), yet a long delay on the part of the vendee in repudiating the contract will be some evidence of such acceptance, although the goods never went out of the possession of the carrier, as, for instance, where goods were sold at three months' credit, and no repudiation took place until seven months, and a new trial was therefore granted, where the judge had withdrawn such a case from the consideration of the jury. (Bushell v. Wheeler, 3 Law T. 125; 8 Jur. 532.)

Churchwardens and overseers.—The effect of 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 17, is to make the churchwardens and overseers a quasi-corporate body; and the officers for the time being take, by a species of parliamentary succession, what their predecessors held; but in suing upon any contracts made by their predecessors, they must sue in their individual names, and describe themselves as such churchwardens and overseers. (Ward v. Clark, 3 Law T. 58; 11 L. J. 229, Ex.) We may here remark that one overseer or churchwarden may authorize a distress for rent in arrear in respect of property vested in them by this Act. (Gouldsworth v. Knights, 11 M. & W. 337.)

Guardians of the poor.—The board of guardians must be sued in their corporate capacity, and no individual member can be sued personally on any contracts made with the board. (Jenkins v. Davies, 3 Law T. 100.) An individual member might, of course, make himself personally liable, in the same way as, in Re Bennett and Sidney (3 Law T. 101), a clerk to commissioners under an Act of Parliament was held to be personally bound by an agreement of reference, in which he described himself as such clerk, notwithstanding such description, because he undertook "for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators."

Construction of contracts.—Two useful cases on this subject may be mentioned. Where, by conditions of sale, the vendee, on the completion of the purchase, is to be entitled to the "rents and profits" from a certain bygone day of such parts of the estate as are let, he will not be entitled to a fine which accrues between that day and the time of completion. (Earl of Hardwicke v. Lord Sandys, 3 Law T. 60; 13 L. J. 233, Ex.) A contract to sell a house, and also the furniture, at a certain valuation, when the title to the house is completed, does not pass the property in the furniture to the vendee before the completion of the title. (Lanyon v. Toogood, 3 Law T. 161.)

Executor de son tort.—In Allen v. Hopkins (3 Law T. 204), the Court of Exchequer decided that an executor de son tort cannot enforce payment for goods of the deceased sold by him, if the vendee has paid the rightful representative before action brought. This question had been mooted in James v. Pritchard (7 M. & W. 216), where a vendee had been served with a notice by the rightful representative, and upon being sued by the executor de son tort, applied for relief under the Interpleader Act, but was refused; Alderson, B. saying, "If the circumstances amount to a defence, they should be pleaded." Although it is a clear principle that all lawful acts done by an executor de son tort will bind the rightful representative, this decision may give rise to a doubt whether, after such a notice, the vendee would be justified in making a payment to the executor de son tort.

Husband and wife.—A somewhat novel inference was attempted to be drawn from the civil disabilities consequent upon outlawry in the case of Robinson v. Gore (3 Law T. 54), where it was argued that an outlaw in a civil proceeding became so completely civiliter mortuus that his wife was competent to contract as a feme sole; but it was not allowed; and it would have been strange to have seen such a decision after the recent cases, which tend to shew that an outlaw is capable of appearing in court to avoid proceedings against himself (see Byrne v. Manning, 2 D. N. S. 403), as well as to reverse his outlawry. He is in a very different position from a convicted felon, who, pending his period of punishment, is altogether dead in law.

Guarantee.—It was attempted, in Jones v. Kearns (3 Law T. 178) to support a count for an account stated by an acknowledgment of a debt which, in fact, had reference to a previous guarantee void for want of consideration; but this was not permitted, for it would have been only a circuitous method of evading the Statute of Frauds.

Laches.—Cases on this subject must usually be determined on their individual merits; but we think that of Keele v. Wheeler (3 Law T. 202) may fitly find a place in our Review. The plaintiff sold to the defendants eight Old Pier Bonds. Securities under this name usually bore 5*l.* per cent. interest, but for some particular reason these bonds, with a memorandum apparently made when they were originally executed, bore only 4 per cent. The bonds were seen by the agent of the defendant, and delivered to him. He kept them for two days, when the defendant, discovering the mistake, returned them. The plaintiff brought an action for non-acceptance. No fraud was imputed to either party. The Court held that there was greater laches on the part of the plaintiff in not informing the vendee of the memorandum than there was in the defendant's agent retaining the bonds two days without discovering it, and upheld the verdict for the defendant.

Limitations, Statute of.—The text-books usually lay down, that where the plaintiff is abroad at the time when the cause of action accrues, the statute does not attach against him until his return, and this position, resting on the authority of Strithurst v. Greene (3 Wils. 145), was fully confirmed in Levieux v. Berkeley (3 Law T. 50; 13 L. J. 213, Q. B.)

Money had and received.—An action for money had and received will not lie unless there is something definite and certain to be paid over, and, accordingly, where a party authorizes certain trustees to receive moneys for him on particular trusts, the surplus to be paid over to him, he cannot bring an action in this form for the surplus. (Edwards v. Bates, 3 Law T. 203.)

Partnership.—The general test of partnership is the right to participation in the profits, and accordingly, the opinion of Coltman, J. who held at Nisi Prius, in Campbell v. Pownall, that an agreement among several persons to share each other's losses, &c. constituted a partnership, was overruled by the Court of Exchequer, and a new trial granted. (3 Law T. 182.)

Authority of one partner to bind the firm.—There are two cases worthy of notice on this head in addition to that of Haslam v. Young, already given under the head of Attorney and Solicitor. The first is Clark v. Cole (3 Law T. 183), in which one Blachford, a partner in two distinct banks, had affected to transfer a customer's balance from the one to the other, but without the knowledge of his co-partners in the second bank. The customer drew upon the second bank, but on the failure of the first bank, discovered that Blachford never, in fact, transferred his account, and the second bank then sued the customer for the money they had advanced upon the cheques which had been drawn against the balance supposed to have been transferred. The jury at the trial found that "Blachford, who was the responsible agent of both firms, entered into the agreement without the knowledge of his partners;" but the Court held that, in the absence of express authority for him to do this, he could not bind the firm, and that they would not construe the word "responsible" to mean that he had such authority, and that therefore, without regard to the hardship of the case, the second bank were entitled to recover.

Gordon v. Ellis (3 Law T. 204) is another useful case on this subject. The facts were, that the plaintiffs were co-partners; that the plaintiff Gordon, with the privity of the other partners, employed the defendants to sell the property; that the defendants believed Gordon to be the sole owner of the property, and having no knowledge that the other plaintiffs had any interest in it, before the property was sold, at the request of Gordon, lent him several sums of money in the pleas mentioned, and it was agreed that they (the defendants) might retain, and deduct, and reimburse themselves out of the proceeds of the property so sold, and that the loans and advances were made on the faith and confidence of such agreement. This was held to be a good defence against an action brought by the firm, for it would have been so against Gordon suing alone, and the principle is, that where a plaintiff is barred of a demand due to himself and others, he cannot recover by joining the others in a subsequent action.

Shipowner, when liable.—It was formerly supposed, that the being registered owner was a sufficient legal ownership to make a party liable for necessary repairs to the ship; but this doctrine was repudiated in Briggs v. Wilkinson (7 B. & C. 35), and again, in the recent case of Curling v. Robertson (3 Law T. 56, 13 L. J. 137, C.P.), so that it is settled law, that by continuing on the register after parting with all beneficial interest no liability is incurred.

Stoppage in transitu.—The frequency of sales and resales in docks and warehouses renders the case of Lackington v. Atherton (3 Law T. 57, 13 L. J. 140, C. P. 8 Jur. 407), deserving of attention. It shews that an unpaid vendor of goods still standing in the name of a prior vendor, may stop in transitu, notwithstanding he has affected to transfer the possession of the goods by a delivery order to his vendee; for as the goods stand in the name of the original vendor, the bailees are not bound to obey any other order but his, and there is no constructive delivery by the second order. But had the bankrupt vendees previously sold the goods, or acted upon the faith of this ineffectual order, it seems that the vendor would then have been estopped from questioning the efficacy of his own delivery-order.

COSTS.

We have several cases to notice upon this head of practice, which, following the arrangement adopted in our previous reviews, we keep distinct, placing the titles alphabetically for the greater convenience.

Action directed by Court of Equity.—The costs of an action directed by a court of equity are determined according to the courts of common law, but those of an issue are within the jurisdiction of the courts of equity. (Gebert v. Pales, 3 Law T. 183.)

Affidavit of increase.—The rule of court, M. T. 1830, Ex. requires the party seeking the increase to serve a copy of his affidavit on the other side, and the omission of the jurat in such copy would render it insufficient, and the taxation would be reviewed. (Wheldale v. Northern and Eastern Railway Company, 3 Law T. 138.)

Amendment after cause made a remanet.—Where, after a cause is made a remanet, the plaintiff amends the declaration, and defendant pleads de novo, the plaintiff will not, in case of ultimate success, be entitled to the costs of the issue and of preparing for the first trial. (Wilton v. Snook, 3 Law T. 105; 13 L. J. 236, Ex.)

Feigned issue.—Upon a feigned issue under the Tithe Commutation Act, with several counts, to try the validity of an equal number of moduses, as to some of which the plaintiff succeeds, and the defendant as to the remainder, neither party is entitled to the general costs of the issue, but the order will be drawn up as in Lewis v. Holding (2 M. & G. 885), under the Interpleader Act, giving to each party the costs of such portion of the issues as he has succeeded upon.

Lower scale.—In our review of Michaelmas Term (2 Law T. 293) we pointed out the case of Richardson v. Kensit, just reported in 1 D. & L. 748, as shewing that the Master is not imperatively bound to tax the defendant's costs according to the lower scale when less than 20*l.* is sought to be recovered; and Ellman v. Williams (3 L. T. 106) is not at variance with this; for the observation of Coleridge, J. that the Master has no discretion, must be considered with reference to the facts, and it is quite correct that he has no discretion in taxing the plaintiff's costs. The reason of the distinction is, that the plaintiff is within the letter of the rule, and the defendant only within the spirit.

Notice of Trial.—The costs of the day must, it seems, be always paid by the plaintiff, if, in consequence of the cause being called on before the time mentioned in the notice of trial, it is struck out of the list, nor will the court interfere with the decision of the judge at Nisi Prius as to the propriety of the cause being struck out. (Gurney v. Walker, 3 Law T. 183.)

Payment to one defendant.—If, in an action ex contractu against two defendants, judgment against them both is set aside for irregularity, with costs at the instance of one defendant only, a payment of the costs to the other defendant will be bad, and no answer to a demand by the other. (Showler v. Stoakes and Yeomans, 3 Law T. 127; 8 Jur. 580.)

Prosecutor and party grieved under 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 11.—The party grieved, being also the prosecutor of an indictment for nuisance, is entitled to his costs under this statute, although he may have received pecuniary assistance from other parties; for it would be very inconvenient for the Court to inquire into the actual amount he has contributed. (Reg. v. Williams, 3 Law T. 220.)

Trespass.—The case of Brewer v. Dew (3 Law T. 60) has recognized the correctness of the decision in Taylor v. Rolfe, as explained supra, vol. 2, 323. But although the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, does not apply to judgments on demurrer, yet the plaintiff, who, after succeeding on the demurrer, goes down to trial on the other issues, and recovers less than forty shillings, and the judge refuses to certify, he will only be entitled to the costs on the demurrer, and not to the general costs of the cause or of the issues in fact found for him.

In a recent article on Costs (supra, p. 174) we noticed the case of Shirwin v. Swindalls (3 Law T. 106), and observed that, by the 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 11, a certificate might have been granted at any time between the verdict and final judgment. The case has since been more fully reported in 13 L. J. 237, and more clearly in 8 Jur. 580.

It seems from these reports, that the 8 & 9 Wm. 3, although not repealed, must be considered so far modified by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, that the certificate must be given "immediately." The exact construction of section 3 is doubtful. It may be that the judge is bound to certify whenever there has been a notice in writing, or it may be that the plaintiff is entitled to costs without any certificate. In this case it would seem that a suggestion would be necessary, according to the rule that where the right to any costs is in question and depends upon a fact, the determination of which is not by the statute law vested in the Court it must be stated upon the record. But then it would be traversable (Watson v. Quilter, 11 M. & W. 760), a defendant would consequently have it in his power to cause great delay and expense before the costs could be obtained. It will, therefore, be advisable in all cases, even where an express written notice is proved, to obtain the judge's certificate. As to the construction of the word "immediately," see supra, 173.

Trespass for mesne profits.—A plaintiff can only recover in an action for mesne profits, as costs of a previous ejectment, the amount allowed by the master as between party and party. His allocatur is the proper and only criterion. (Doe v. Filliter, 3 Law T. 181.)

CUSTOM AND PRESCRIPTION.

A case, involving all the learning respecting these somewhat abstruse subjects, has been decided in the Exchequer Chamber, and may be examined advantageously in connexion with that of Hilton v. Lord Grenville (Review of H. T. 2 Law T. 447). The point decided was, that inhabitants quâ inhabitants cannot prescribe for an easement in alieno solo, which a right to place stalls in a market-place, without making any payment to the owner of the market, must be considered to be, although possibly a mere claim of exemption, or discharge from tolls, might be so prescribed for. (Lockwood v. Wood, 3 Law T. 139.)

EVIDENCE.

We have little of importance to notice in this branch of the law. Under the pleas of payment on agreement that the plaintiff should accept an authority to pay himself out of moneys belonging to the defendant, and about to be received by the plaintiff, as payment, is admissible, because the parties have agreed to treat it as payment. (Nicholas v Morgan, 3 Law T. 183.) So, any agreement by way of part payment would take the debt out of the Statute of Limitations. (See Cottam v. Partridge, 4 S.C. N. R. 819.)

Work and Labour.—Under the general issue in an action for work and labour performed under a written contract, evidence is admissible that a portion of the materials were furnished by the defendant. (Newton v. Forster, 3 Law T. 58, 78.) This was decided on the authority of Cousins v. Paddon (2 C. M. & R. 547), and Turner v. Diaper (2 M. & Gr. 241). In the latter case, to cover the balance due upon an agreement for certain work, the defendant proved that he had employed workmen to finish a certain portion, equal in value to that balance, as was shewn by the fact that he had paid to the workmen the amount of the balance, and it was held, that the plaintiff's demand was answered. The plaintiff having declared upon the executed contract, was bound to shew that he had completed work to the amount contracted for.

THE PROPERTY LAWYER.

I.—DEVISE—CONTINGENT REMAINDER—LIMITATION TO CHILDREN WHO SHALL ATTAIN TWENTY-ONE.

The case of Festing and Others v. Allen and Others (12 Mees. & Wels. 279) requires to be noticed here. The facts are these:—

Roger Belk, being seized in fee of certain freehold estates, devised them to trustees, to the use of his granddaughter, Martha H. Johnson, for life, "and from and after her decease, to the use of all and every the child or children of her, the said M. H. J. who shall attain the age of twenty-one years," &c. &c. "And for want of such issue," the trustees were to hold same, in trust as to one moiety, to permit Ann Johnson, the wife of his grandson, T. R. B. Johnson, to receive the rents and profits during her life, for the maintenance and education of all and every the child or children of his said grandson, T. R. B. Johnson, lawfully begotten, who should attain the age of twenty-one years, to hold as tenants in common, &c. And as to the other moiety, to stand possessed thereof to the use of Sarah Rhodes, for life, and after her decease, to the use of the children of the said Sarah Rhodes "who should attain the age of twenty-one years, to hold as tenants in common," &c.

Roger Belk, the testator, died in 1824, leaving the said M. H. Johnson, the said Ann Johnson, who had four children, and the said Sarah Rhodes, who had seven children, heirs, surviving. Maria H. Johnson married M. G. Festing in 1825, and died in 1833, leaving three children infants. Some of the children of Ann Johnson and Sarah Rhodes attained the age of twenty-one.

A bill in Chancery being filed, Vice-Chancellor WIGRAM directed a case to be stated for the opinion of the Barons of the Exchequer, and upon the facts above stated, the following questions were submitted:—

First, whether, upon the death of the said Martha Hannah Festing, Thomas Roger Belk Johnson, the heir-at-law of the testator, took any and what estate or interest in the real estates devised by the will, or the rents and profits thereof. Secondly, whether, upon the death of the said Martha Hannah Festing, the plaintiffs, as the infant children of the said Martha Hannah Festing, took any and what estate or interest in the real estates devised by the said will, or the rents and profits thereof. Thirdly, whether, upon the death of the said Martha Hannah Festing, the said Ann Johnson and her children, and the said Sarah Rhodes and her children, took any and what estate or interest in the said estates devised by the said will, or the rents and profits thereof.

These questions were elaborately argued by counsel.

Malins, for the infant children of Martha H. Festing, contended that they took upon their birth vested estates in fee-simple in the premises in question, liable to be devested if they died under twenty-one. He cited Doe dem. Herbert v. Selby (2 B. & Cr. 926); Loddington v. Kime (3 Lev. 431); Boraston's case (3 Co. 19); Mansfield v. Dugard (Fearne, 245); Goodtitle v. Whitby (1 Burr. 215); Denn v. Satterthwaite (1 W. Bl. 519); Doe v. Lea (1 T. R. 41); Warter v. Hutchinson (1 B. & C. 721); Doe dem. Cadogan v. Ewart (7 Ad. & El. 636); Edwards v. Hammond (3 Lev. 132); Bromfield v. Crowder (1 N. R. 313); Doe dem. Roake v. Nowell (1 Man. & Sel. 327); Doe dem. Hunt v. Moore (11 East, 601); Doe dem. Dolley v. Ward (9 Ad. & El. 582); Phipps v. Ackers (3 Ch. & Fin. 703); Duffield v. Duffield (3 Bligh, N. S. 20); Russell v. Buchanan (2 C. & M. 561); Leach v. Robinson (2 Meriv. 363); Bull v. Pritchard (1 Russ. 213); Newman v. Newman (10 Sim. 50); Doe v. Nowell (5 Dow. 202); Doe v. Selby (2 B. & C. 926).

Smythe, for Ann Johnson and all the representatives of T. R. B. Johnson, further argued that the trustees took the legal estate in fee, and, therefore, that the contingent trust limitations did not require a preceding particular estate of freehold to support them. He cited Doe dem. Compere v. Hicks (7 T. R. 433); Doe dem. Tomkyn v. Willan (2 B. & Ald. 84); Houston v. Hughes (6 B. & C. 403); Barber v. Greenwood (4 M. & W. 431); and Hopkins v. Hopkins (Fearne Cont. Re. 304).

Butt, for Mrs. Rhodes and children, argued that there was a difference between cases where the devise is to children "if" or "when" they shall attain a certain age, and to those "who" shall attain such age.

W. T. S. Daniel, for the devisees of the heir-at-law, argued, 1st, That the children of Hannah Festing were not entitled, because, at her death, they had not attained the age of twenty-one, the attainment of such age being part of the description of the devisee. 2nd. If the plaintiffs cannot take, the will fails altogether, and the heir is entitled: citing Doe v. Colyear (11 East, 377); Jones v. Wenwil (1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 245); Meadows v. Parry (1 Ves. & B. 124).

The judgment of the Court was delivered by ROLFE, B. who, after reading the will, said:—

Martha Hannah Johnson survived the testator's widow, and after his death, namely, in the year 1825, married Maurice Green Festing. She died in 1833, leaving three infant children; and the main question is, whether those children took on her death any interest in the devised estates.

We think that they did not. It was contended on their behalf that they took vested estates in fee immediately on the death of their mother, subject only to be devested in the event of their dying under twenty-one, and the case, it was said, must be treated as coming within the principle of the decision of the House of Lords in Phipps v. Ackers, and the cases there referred to. To this, however, we cannot accede. In all those cases there was an absolute gift to some ascertained person or persons, and the Courts held, that words accompanying the gift, though apparently importing a contingency or contingencies, did in reality only indicate certain circumstances on the happening or not happening of which the estate previously devised should be devested, and pass from the first devisee into some other channel. The clear distinction in the present case is, that here there is no gift to any one who does not answer the whole of the requisite description. The gift is not to the children of Mrs. Festing, but to the children who shall attain twenty-one, and no one who has not attained his age of twenty-one years is an object of the testator's bounty, any more than a person who is not a child of Mrs. Festing. Even if there were no authority establishing this to be a substantial and not an imaginary distinction, still we should not feel inclined to extend the doctrine of Doe v. Moore and Phipps v. Ackers to cases not precisely similar. But, in fact, the distinction to which we have adverted in a great measure forms the ground of the decision in the case of Duffield v. Duffield, in the House of Lords, and Russell v. Buchanan (2 C. & M. 561) in this court, and on this short ground our opinion is founded. We think that Mrs. Festing was tenant for life, with contingent remainders in fee to such of her children as should attain twenty-one; and as no child had attained twenty-one when the particular estate determined by her death, the remainder was necessarily defeated. It is equally clear that all the other limitations were defeated by the same event, namely, the death of Mrs. Festing leaving several infant children, but no child who had then attained the age of twenty-one years. For the limitations to take effect at her decease were all of them contingent remainders in fee, one or other of which was to take effect according to the events pointed out. If Mrs. Festing had left at her decease a child who had then attained the age of twenty-one years, her child or children would have taken absolutely, to the exclusion of all the other contingent remainder men. If, on the other hand, there had at her decease been a failure of her child or children who should attain twenty-one, then the alternative limitations would have taken effect; but this did not happen, for though she left no child of the age of twenty-one years, and therefore capable of taking under the devise in favour of her children, yet neither is it possible to say that there was at her decease a failure of her issue who should attain the age of twenty-one years, for she left three children, all or any of whom might and still may attain the prescribed age; so that the contingency on which alone the alternative limitations were to take effect had not happened when the particular estate determined, and those alternative limitations, all of which were clearly contingent remainders, were therefore defeated. On these short grounds, we think it clear, that neither the infant children of Mrs. Festing, nor the parties who were to take the estate in case of her leaving no child who should attain twenty-one, take any interest whatever, but that on her death the whole estate and interest vested in the heir-at-law.

We shall certify our opinion to Vice-Chancellor Wigram accordingly.

The following certificate was afterwards sent:—

"We have heard this case argued by counsel, and we are of opinion,

"First, that upon the death of Martha Hannah Festing, in the pleadings named, Thomas Roger Belk Johnson, therein also named as the heir-at-law of the testator, Roger Belk, took an estate in fee-simple in the real estates devised by the will of the said testator, Roger Belk.

"Secondly, that upon the death of the said Martha Hannah Festing, the plaintiffs, as the infant children of the said Martha Hannah Festing, took no estate or interest in the real estates devised by the said will of the said testator, Roger Belk, or the rents and profits thereof.

"Thirdly, that upon the death of the said Martha H. Festing, neither the said Ann Johnson nor her children, nor the said Sarah Rhodes nor her children, in the pleadings respectively named, took any estate or interest in the real estates devised by the said will of the said testator, Roger Belk, or the rents and profits thereof.

II.—WILL.—CHARGE OF DEBTS ON REAL ESTATE.

PRICE v. NORTH.
(Reported 1 Ph. 85.)

Roderick Gwynne commenced his will thus:—

"First, I will that all my just debts, funeral expenses, and the costs and charges of proving this my will, be fully paid and satisfied."

He then devised his real estate to his daughter and her issue, in strict settlement; and, after giving one specific and one pecuniary legacy, he gave all the residue of his personal estate, "after and subject to the payment of all my just debts, funeral, and testamentary expenses, and the legacies thereinbefore bequeathed," to his said daughter at the age of 21.

The proceeds of the testator's real estate had been, by the Court of Exchequer (see 4 Y. & Coll. 509), declared to be legal assets.

The administrators, on behalf of the simple contract creditors, appealed from that order to the Lord Chancellor.

Swanston and Coleridge, in support of the order below, contended that the presumption arising from the first clause of the will, of an intention to charge the real estate with debts, was rebutted by the words "after and subject to the payment," &c. in the subsequent clause. But

The LORD CHANCELLOR (Lyndhurst) said:—

The question is, whether this will constitutes a charge upon the testator's real estate, for the payment of his debts. Now, the first direction in the will clearly amounts to a charge: that is admitted; but it is only a charge by implication, and may therefore be rebutted, provided there be any thing to be found in other parts of the will inconsistent with the supposition that such was the testator's intention. Thus, in Thomas v. Britnell (2 Ves. sen. 313), the testator first ordered all his debts and funeral charges to be honourably paid after his decease; but in a subsequent clause he devised all his real estate, with a certain exception, to trustees, in trust for the payment of his debts, funeral expenses, and legacies, at the same time directing that the excepted estates should be applied first to payment of the legacies. That specific appropriation of a part only of his estates to the payment of debts was clearly inconsistent with an intention to charge the estates generally. So, in Douce v. Lady Torrington, the will commenced with a similar clause; but, by the codicil, the rents and profits of the testator's real estate were charged with the payment of 200*l.* a year to his son, and the residue only was to be applied to the discharge of the testator's simple contract debts. That was also clearly inconsistent with a general charge of debts on the real estate, and so it was accordingly held. The case of Palmer v. Graves perhaps goes further; but that decision was professedly founded on the two last-mentioned cases, and cannot therefore be considered as laying down any new principle.

Now, what is here relied on for repelling the implication? It is the last clause. But when the testator bequeaths his personal estate, "after and subject to the payment of his debts," he does nothing inconsistent with an intention to charge his real estate with them also as an auxiliary fund; and, therefore, such a direction cannot control the operation of the general charge. Courts of equity have always been desirous of sustaining such charges for the benefit of creditors, and the presumption in favour of them is not to be repelled by any thing short of clear and manifest evidence of a contrary intention.

The decree, therefore, must be varied, by declaring that the real estates are equitable assets instead of legal.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

PRACTICAL WORKING OF THE LIBEL LAW.

(From the Cheltenham Examiner.)

As an illustration of the practical working of the law of libel, and the immense expense it entails on those who unhappily fall under its operations, the following particulars of the recent actions against the proprietors of this paper may not be uninteresting to the public. At the close of the year 1842, and early in 1843, certain proceedings took place at the Cheltenham Police-office, which created a great degree of excitement in the public mind. A series of articles commenting on these proceedings appeared in the Cheltenham Examiner, and in the month of January, 1843, Messrs. Rowe and Norman, the proprietors, were served with a copy of a writ, in an action complaining of four articles which had appeared respectively on the 7th, 14th, and 28th of December, 1842, and the 25th January, 1843. This writ was served at the suit of Mr. Augustus Newton; and shortly after another action was commenced in the names of Mr. and Mrs. Newton conjointly, complaining of one only of the same four articles. This action, after having had the venue changed from Herefordshire, was brought to trial at the Gloucester Spring Assizes, April, 1843, before Mr. Justice Erskine and a special jury, and resulted in a verdict, on the general issue, of Not Guilty for defendants. The expenses of this action to the day of trial, and in answering subsequent unsuccessful applications by the plaintiffs for a new trial, were, to the defendants, about 240*l.*; and of this sum they never received one farthing, the male plaintiff discharging his personal liability by means of the Insolvent Court. In the month of January, 1844, defendants were served with a copy of declaration, in the first action by Mr. Newton alone, and embracing, be it remembered, the very article on which, in the former action, the defendants had been declared not guilty, and the action, after repeated delays, came on in the Court of Common Pleas, at Westminster, before Chief Justice Tindal, on the 15th of June, just passed. The defendants pleaded a justification to the whole, and after a hearing of three days, and the examination of numerous witnesses for the defence, the jury returned a verdict that the justification was established on two material counts in the declaration, and a verdict on the two other counts for the plaintiff, with one farthing damages on each. The expense of this second action to the defendants, including counsel's fees, travelling expenses, maintenance and payment of witnesses, and other unavoidable charges, amounted in the whole to upwards of 600*l.* Thus in the two actions, grounded on nearly the same articles, and arising out of the same transactions, and on both of which the jury have returned virtual verdicts of not guilty, Messrs. Rowe and Norman have been put to the enormous expense of nearly 900*l.*; and that of course reckoning nothing for anxiety of mind, interference with business, and their own personal expenses.

The expense of these actions is a standing witness against the present libel law, and is enough to deter the journalist from doing his duty to the public, by commenting freely on matters of public import. These expenses, be it remembered, are incurred by parties pronounced not guilty; had the results been otherwise, and by a failure of the justification, a verdict of 40*s.* damages been given against them, the defendants, in addition to this 900*l.* would have had to pay the plaintiff's costs, amounting to several hundreds more.

WHITEHALL, July 10.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed R. Fulford, of Exeter, gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed William Freeman, of Cheltenham, in the county of Gloucester gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

The Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas has appointed Mr. John Lyon Foster, of Hertford, gentleman, one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgment of deeds by married women, under the Fines and Recoveries Act.

Mr. Comm ioner Evans has left his delightful residence at Hampstead, for his estates in Ireland.

SOMERSET.

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled.

The humble petition of Attorneys and Solicitors residing and practising in the county of Somerset, agreed to at a meeting of the Somersetshire Junior Attorneys' Club, held at the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace for the said county, at Bridgwater, on Wednesday, the 3rd day of July, 1844,

Sheweth—That the attention of your petitioners has been drawn to the Bill for the Amendment of the Laws for the Relief of the Poor, now before your honourable House, by which it is proposed to enact that clerks and officers to boards of guardians, constituted under the Poor Law Act, may conduct proceedings on behalf of the guardians before justices at special and petty sessions, although not certified attorneys, without incurring penalty for so doing; and that the auditors of the union accounts shall be empowered to tax any bills of costs of attorneys and solicitors against the union or the parishes comprised therein.

That the exclusive right of practising in all courts of justice has been conferred upon attorneys and solicitors by Act of Parliament, and that in consideration of the right thus secured, and of the privileges derived therefrom, your petitioners are called upon to pay heavy stamp-duties on their articles of clerkship, and their admission as attorneys and solicitors, and also a heavy annual duty for their certificates, under which they are entitled to practise. That your petitioners regard such proposed enactment as a violation of the tacit compact upon which these several duties are levied, and an open violation of the rights and privileges of your petitioners as attorneys and solicitors.

That the bills of costs of attorneys and solicitors should not be submitted to any other than the proper officers of the courts in which the business, the subject of such bills, is transacted, acting under the authority of such courts, and bound in such taxation by the principles laid down in the orders of the same courts for the taxation of costs, and qualified by official experience and knowledge of the principles on which such taxation should be made in the performance of their official duties.

Your petitioners therefore humbly pray your honourable House not to confer such authority as aforesaid on clerks and officers of boards of guardians, or to subject their remuneration to the adjudication of incompetent persons, but to expunge the before-mentioned clauses from the said Bill, so that your petitioners may not thereby be deprived of the rights and privileges which have been conferred on them, and to which they are at present by law entitled; or to afford to your petitioners such other relief in the premises as your honourable House, in its wisdom, may think fit.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray, &c.

YORKSHIRE LAW SOCIETY.

At a meeting of the above society, held on Tuesday, the 16th of July inst. the following report of the proceedings of the committee was read:—

Report of the Committee—Summer Assizes, 1844.

The committee have, in the first place, to report to the members of this society, that considerable progress has been made in the formation of a General Union of the Provincial Law Societies. The resolutions of the meeting held on the 15th of March last, to the effect, "that in order to resist the various attempts constantly being made to centralize the business of the legal profession in the metropolis, continual exertion and watchfulness on the part of the country solicitors is required, and some permanent union between the different law societies is very desirable; that the secretary communicate with the Manchester Law Association, and the other societies, urging the importance of a union of this description, with a view to mutual co-operation on all matters of general importance to the Profession; and that Manchester, on account of the facility of communication between that town and the different parts of the kingdom, and the activity and efficiency of its present Law Association, be recommended as the place of union, and that it be also recommended that representatives from the various law societies meet there annually,"—were duly forwarded to the various provincial societies, and have met with very general approval and concurrence; the committee of the Manchester Law Association have promised every assistance in their power towards effecting the proposed union, and so many societies have expressed their intention to join it, that no doubt can now be entertained of its complete formation: the importance and necessity of it seem to be generally admitted.

During the last few months, matters have engaged the attention of the committee, in which the necessity of a general co-operation amongst the members of the Profession has been apparent. We have joined in petitioning Parliament on the subject of the monstrous Chancery compensations, and the additional fees imposed upon the suitors of the court; a considerable reduction has since been made in the charge for office copies, but the evil complained of has not yet been removed.

The committee have also petitioned Parliament respecting certain obnoxious clauses inserted in the Poor Law Amendment Bill, now before Parliament, by which the Attorneys and Solicitors Act is to a certain extent repealed. By clause 34, it is proposed to enact "That on application of any overseer, or of any board of guardians, or of any attorney-at-law, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the peace of the county or place, or his deputy, if thereunto required, to tax any bill due to any solicitor or attorney in respect of business performed on behalf of any parish or union situate wholly or in part within such county or place, and the allowance of any sum on such taxation shall be primâ facie evidence of the reasonableness of the amount, but not of the legality of the charge; and the clerk of the peace shall be allowed for such taxation, after the rate to be fixed from time to time by the Master of the Crown Office, and declared by an order of the said commissioners; and if any such bill be not taxed before it is presented to the auditor, the auditor's decision on the reasonableness as well as the legality of the charges shall be final;" and by clause 60, "That notwithstanding any thing contained in an Act passed in the seventh year of the the reign of her Majesty, intituled 'An Act for consolidating and amending several of the Laws relating to Attorneys and Solicitors practising in England and Wales,' it shal be lawful for any clerk or other officer to any board of guardians constituted under the said first recited Act, or to any district board, if duly empowered by such board, to make or resist any application, claim, or complaint, or to take and conduct any proceedings on behalf of such board before any justice or justice of the peace at petty or special sessions, or out of sessions, although such clerk or officer be not an attorney or solicitor, or have not obtained a stamped certificate in pursuance of the provision of the said Act." It is difficult to imagine any thing more unjust in principle than those clauses, but they appear likely to pass the House of Commons without the slightest opposition. The committee cannot leave this subject without recommending the Profession to turn their attention to the necessity of securing some advocates of their views in the House of Commons, the Profession being at present without a representative in the House, and the barristers, instead of supporting them, usually taking the opposite course.

The Ecclesiastical Courts Bill, referred to in the last report, has been withdrawn; the committee recommend the greatest watchfulness on this subject, as they believe the parties in favour of centralization have been principally concerned in defeating it. It is also a subject of regret to the committee to report that the County Courts Bill is likely to be withdrawn, so that the humbler classes of the community, are in many places still to be left without the means of recovering small debts, except at ruinous expense and risk. The committee have forwarded petitions to Parliament relating to both these Bills, since the last general meeting, copies of which are annexed.

In compliance with a resolution of the last general meeting, the secretary has suggested to the clerks of the peace in the city and county, the expediency of advertising in the LAW TIMES the periods of holding the Quarter Sessions of their respective jurisdictions; this has been in some instances complied with, and the committee have no doubt that, if generally adopted, it would be found to be very useful to the Profession.

It having been represented to the committee, that an attorney's clerk at ——, was carrying on business there in the name of a solicitor residing at ——, the committee felt it to be their duty to take certain steps with respect to the matter, which have led to the postponement of the party's admission as an attorney on his making an application for that purpose in Trinity Term last.

CORRESPONDENCE.

STAMP DUTIES.

(MORTGAGE TRANSFERS.)

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I am glad to find the Profession are so keenly alive to the insensate decision (if I may so call it) in Brown v. Pegg, LAW T. 22nd June last.

The manner in which this item of our statute law had been previously interpreted by the Courts was such that, with the above case to boot, it is absolutely ridiculous to look to the decisions for the law thereon; we must go back to the Stamp Acts themselves; and by way of testing the notions of those who conceive that in cases of mortgage-transfer, with further money advanced, there is any other duty payable than the ad val. (mortgage) duty in respect of such further amount, let us ask the advocates on that side of the question to be kind enough to furnish their professional brethren at large with the precise grounds, drawn exclusively from the Stamp Acts, whereon they argue the liability to any such further duty.

Theirs being the affirmative of the proposition, they should establish it by quotation from the statutes.

The subject is one which, by its very minuteness, seems hitherto to have baffled judicial optics; let us now have a plain, straightforward, practical version of the liability (if any) delivered out of court. This may save us from being again compelled to hear, as we have done, of such awful monstrosities as that of the ad valorem on transfers actually "swallowing up the transfer duty"!!!—vide Patteson, J. in Lant v. Pease.

I remain, Mr. Editor,

Yours, truly,

Shefford, July 15, 1844. GEO. AUSTIN.

REMOVAL—CERTIFICATE OF CHARGEABILITY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Among the various objections to which the certificate of chargeability "under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 57, s. 17," is liable, where that instrument has been used as evidence by magistrates making an order of removal, there is one, and, as it seems to me, a very important one, though I cannot find that it has been taken in any reported case, which has hitherto prevented me from adopting it as the evidence of chargeability, on applying for an order of removal. I allude to its date. The certificate states that the pauper became, at a stated period, and "hath thence, until this day, continued chargeable to the said parish."

Now there is not one case in fifty in which the order of removal is made (or can be made) on the same day that the certificate of chargeability is obtained; and if the order is not obtained until several days afterwards, say a week, how does the certificate afford evidence that the pauper is chargeable at the time of making the order of removal? It has always appeared to me that the certificate can only be used as evidence of the chargeability on the hearing of an appeal before the Quarter Sessions, in which case, one can always be obtained subsequent in date to the order of removal; and this may, perhaps, save the expense of taking the relieving officer to the sessions as a witness; but, generally speaking, a greater expense will be incurred in taking the clerk to the guardians, or some other person, as a witness to prove the certificate. In every case there is more trouble in proving the certificate than the facts of the chargeability. Surely such an instrument, with all its attendant formalities, ought to be allowed to prove itself.

I trouble you with these observations, thinking that they may perhaps be useful,

And am, Sir, your obedient servant,

EDWARD ARGLES.

STAMP ON TRANSFER OF MORTGAGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—There is no doubt that the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in the late case of Brown v. Pegg is calculated to cause some stir in the profession. I concur, generally, in the commentary of your "Subscriber of Age and Experience," as published in your last number (p. 293), but may I be allowed to ask him, whether he considers that a "progressive" duty is payable on transfer of mortgages exceeding thirty folios in length? It will be seen, that your correspondent, Mr. Austin, contends that no progressive duty is payable, whatever may be the length of the deed; and upon this point there appears some doubt, though I believe it has never been distinctly raised in argument.

Ever since the decision in Doe dem. Bartley v. Grey, the profession, generally, have no doubt acted on the principle there laid down: but where the first mortgage is for a term only, and on its being transferred to a party making a further advance, that party takes a conveyance of the fee to himself by a feoffment or lease and release (before the late Act abolishing the lease for a year), and has the term assigned to a trustee for him, surely the 35s. duty must be payable on the lease for a year, and the ad valorum duty for the further advance on the release; there must be a lease for a year, or something equivalent to it, and that instrument must surely be liable to duty. If not, I shall be very glad to be enlightened on this subject. In Brown v. Pegg, the fee was conveyed by appointment under a power, and in that case, therefore, I should have considered the 35s. stamp to be wholly unnecessary. I am, Sir,

Your very obedient servant,

EDW. ARGLES.

NEW INSOLVENT ACT.

5 & 6 VICTORIA, CAP. 116, SEC. 1.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Since the LAW TIMES has become a very general organ of the Profession, I apprehend a portion of its columns may not improperly be devoted to observations of its subscribers from time to time, suggestive of improvements in the principles and practice of the various departments of the law; therefore I take the liberty of requesting the insertion of the following remarks:—

By the above Act, any person not being a trader, or being a trader owing less than 300*l.* on giving and publishing the required notice, may present and file a petition to the Court of Bankruptcy in London, or District Court of Bankruptcy in the Country (as the case may be), and thereupon the judge or commissioner is to give a protection (called the Interim Order) to the petitioner from all process whatever, &c. with the exception stated in the second section.

Such of your readers as have practised in the Court of Bankruptcy under this statute will, I think, agree with me, that it is desirable to alter, with a view of amending this section, and the rules of court founded thereon; by enabling the petitioner to obtain his protection or Interim Order immediately upon the first publication of his notice in the Gazette, on a peremptory undertaking to file his petition and schedule within a certain given time, or on other stringent terms.

According to the existing law and practice, I submit, but few insolvents can avail themselves of the beneficent provisions of the Legislature, without experiencing both injustice and expense, whilst, on the other hand, the creditor is delayed and incurs a heavy loss in the shape of the costs of a vexatious and fruitless action.

Thus:—An insolvent, finding his circumstances desperate, being pursued by one or more creditors, is advised to avail himself of this statute, and petition the Court of Bankruptcy (which, at the lowest estimate, I believe, in the country, will cost him 25*l.*), and if, as is generally the case, he has delayed matters so far as to allow execution to be issued out, it then also becomes necessary (at a great expense, which must come eventually out of his estate) to make himself non est inventus during the time required for the two preliminary publications of the notice in the Gazette and newspapers.

This constitutes an evil to be complained of, as being unnecessarily caused, without the slightest benefit whatever resulting to either the estate or creditors of the petitioner. Now, if the protection or Interim Order were granted (upon a peremptory understanding that the petition and schedule be filed without delay), concurrently in point of time with the first publication of the required notice in the Gazette, much delay and expense would be saved, both to the petitioner, his estate, and creditors, whilst the operation of the Act would be most beneficially extended, without encouraging unavailing and unintentional efforts to "take the benefit of the Act."

Yours, respectfully,

AARON WILLS GAY.

TRANSFERS OF MORTGAGE STAMPS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I confess I do not see the discrepancies alleged to exist in the decisions upon this subject.

In Doe dem. Bartley v. Gray (1825) the question before the Court was the proper duty upon a tranfer of security from the original mortgagee, with the concurrence and confirmation of the mortgagor, to a new party, who made a further advance, charged in the same premises, and then the Court ruled that an ad valorem stamp in the further advance, with the progressive duty of 1*l.* was sufficient, Lord Denman adding that it was not necessary to decide whether a common deed-stamp was necessary in addition, as the transfer stamp erroneously put on coverred that.

In Doe dem. Barnes v. Rowe (1838) it was held that an ad valorem stamp upon the further sum was sufficient without any deed-stamp, thus settling the question left open in the prior case.

In Lant v. Pearce (1838) the facts were different. There, there was a further advance upon a transfer of the old mortgage and other premises, which were brought into the security; and it was ruled that a deed-stamp was rejected in respect of the further security.

The question, then, in reference to the late case of Brown v. Pegg, is, whether it was not analogous to that of Lant v. Pearce—whether the grant of the fee of the premises, originally charged for a term, constitutes a "further security?" A covenant for payment was added; and the Court said—"It is clear this operated as a new security, and that a deed-stamp, at least, became necessary in consequence thereof."

If the Court be right in its view, that the grant of the fee constitutes a new security, then is Brown v. Pegg consistent with Lant v. Pearce. But, at all events, I think I am right in saying that there is no absolute discrepancy in the decisions; inasmuch as the point upon which Brown v. Pegg turned was not a question in the prior cases.

It does not in either of them appear what weight is attached to the covenant for payment of the entire sum entered into by the mortgagor with the new mortgagee; though the Court, in Brown v. Pegg, seems to have coupled its existence with the grant of the further estate in the premises, and, having alluded to both, observed a new security was given.

It will now be very desirable to have a decision upon the effect of the covenant per se, as it would then be ascertained what weight is attached to the grant of the fee without it. When both meet, the practice may be considered settled; and we shall do well, I think, in all cases where a further estate in the premises is granted to a new mortgagee, to affix the deed-stamp, treating it quoad this estate as a new, or further security. But what is to be done in respect of a covenant, when no new estate, or further security, is created?

I shall be glad to have it shewn, if I am wrong in the view taken of these cases.

Yours, truly,

EDWARD KNOCKER.

Dover, July 18, 1844.

P.S. I may observe that your correspondent's letter in the last Number carries the quotation of Doe dem. Bartley v. Gray much further than it is reported in the Law Journal (K. B. 197, 1826). According to that report, the term was assigned to a trustee for the new mortgagee only. But the statement of the case and arguments of counsel seem to be somewhat at variance. What are the facts?

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

OUTIS, from Lincoln's-inn, thus writes on the subject of the Stamps on Transfers of Mortgage:—

Lest any of your readers should be misled by the statements of a correspondent in your paper of last week, will you permit me to observe that he has quite misunderstood Doe v. Gray (3 Ad. & Ell. 89). That case (as well as Doe v. Rowe, 4 B. N. C. 737), only decided that where the ad. val. duty was payable on a transfer of mortgage, there the 35s. stamp was not payable, if no further security was added. The question, whether the conveyance of the fee constituted such further security, was certainly mooted in Doe v. Gray; but if your correspondent turns from the mortgage note to the report of the case, p. 98 (Ad. & Ell.), he will find that Lord Denman expressly declined to offer an opinion on the point.

The case of Lant v. Peace (8 Ad. & Ell. 248) next decided that the addition of other property constituted such further security.

And, ultimately, the case of Brown v. Pegg, as reported in your paper, decided (as far as I am aware, for the first time) what the Court declined to decide in Doe v. Gray, so that the conveyance of the fee and the covenant contained in the deed amounted to such "further security."

TO READERS.

IN consequence of a pressure of matter requiring immediate insertion received at the latest moment, we are compelled to omit some leading articles, and a great deal of correspondence, which were in type.

Now that the Vacation will afford leisure, we hope the lectures of Professor Carey will be completed, and those of Professor Taylor on Medical Jurisprudence commenced.

THE FRENCH BAR AND THE PRESIDENT OF THE COUR ROYALE.

We are enabled to lay before our readers an account of the late quarrel between the Bar and the President Seguier, which has been forwarded to us from a member of the Bar of of the Cour Royale.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—To give you a correct idea of this judicial incident, which has only two known precedents in France, I must first make you acquainted with the two parties engaged in the struggle. The President, M. Seguier, is a descendant of one of the most illustrious families of the gown in the reign of Henry III. His ancestors shone conspicuously in the ranks of the French magistracy, and many of them distinguished themselves in contesting the claims of the Jesuits and Ultramontanes. At the commencement of the revolution, the present M. Seguier was captain in the Dragoons; but Napoleon, from a vanity but little in harmony with his origin, sought out old names, and finding a Seguier close at hand, lost no time in launching him into the magistracy, and soon made him first President. From that time M. Seguier, whose office is held for life, as are all other magisterial employments in France, has kept his chair, offering in turn his congratulations to Napoleon, the Bourbons, and Louis Philippe. His speeches have, indeed, a peculiar stamp, for his praise and flattery are more exaggerated than the language of other functionaries who at different times are called upon to express their compliments at the foot of the throne. But, in spite of this pertinacious adulation of all governments, the President was exceedingly popular at one period. This was at the Restoration. To Charles the Tenth he annually declared his entire devotedness; but out of court he delighted in counteracting the Jesuitical tendencies of the Priest-party and the emigrants. At the Cour Royale he protected the liberty of the press, and there is a saying of his which deserves to be quoted and remembered:—"The court pronounces decrees, but cannot render services," replied he to a courtier, who requested, as a service to the throne, the condemnation of certain newspapers. But now it is no longer thus. M. Seguier is seventy-eight years of age, of an irascible and impatient temper, and with a most undisciplined tongue. From his seat he is facetious at the expense of pleaders and advocates, and regardless of the timidity of the young or of the experience of older men, he interrupts them perpetually. For some time past the Parisian bar, en masse, has been discontented with such proceedings. And you are aware that in France each tribunal and each Cour Royale has its corporation of advocates, which elects its chief, its council of discipline, and forms its own organization. This fraternity is a guarantee of morality. For the sake of the body, each member watches over himself, and acts suitably to his situation. The discipline of the Bar is very severe; the slightest offence, the slightest deviation from the scrupulous rules of the Profession, and the offender is punished by a suspension of his functions, or is struck off the roll. The Council of Discipline is composed of twenty members, the bâtonnier of the court being president, and now, as at all times, names highly honourable are to be found in it. I need only mention MM. Berryer, Odillon Barrot, Philippe Dupin, Marie, all men held high in the public opinion, and much esteemed. The intercourse between the magistracy and the bar has always been carried on with reciprocal deference, but M. Seguier lately seems to have forgotten what was due to either party, and before entering into the details of the retort which has occasioned the actual quarrel, I will mention one circumstance which caused a great sensation at the Palais de Justice. A barrister solicited that a suit then pleading should be postponed for a week, as he had that morning buried his daughter, and his grief rendered him incapable of doing justice to his client's interests. M. Seguier replied, with some humour, that public duty and the business of the court could not be deferred by private feeling, and to support his argument he quoted the words of Laroche Flavin, formerly President of the Parliament at Toulouse. This quotation did not hit the mark, for if the magistrate of the sixteenth century did instruct his colleagues not to interrupt the usual business of the Parliament for their private concerns, he also tells them neither to forget or neglect their domestic affairs. But if the erudition of M. Seguier failed in its application, on the other hand it produced a most unfavourable sensation from its being addressed to an advocate much esteemed by all. The newspapers took it up, but the President did not notice it, and a fortnight afterwards he gave way to his ungovernable speech with the greatest indecorum. An avoué requested the postponement of a cause, when M. Seguier exclaimed—"Delays are always being required; business is not carried on conscientiously at the bar; integrity, not talent, is wanting in the barristers: they accept all sorts of briefs without examination." The person replied, "I am not a barrister, but an avoué." "Oh!" said M. Seguier, "I thought you were a barrister." These words were heard by a member of the council of the order of advocates, and they too nearly concerned the honour and dignity of the bar for the council not to interfere. A meeting was convoked to deliberate on the measures to be taken, and it was decided, after two long sittings, that the members of the council should address a letter to M. Seguier, declaring their intention of not pleading before the upper chamber of the Cour Royale, unless the words pronounced by the first president were publicly retracted. At the same time, it was agreed that the bâtonnier should make known to the Procureur (Attorney) General, and to the Vice-President of the first Chamber, that this proceeding was a personal quarrel, and did not in the least affect the sentiments of the members of the council towards the magistracy.

Interviews were immediately held between the bâtonnier and many of the magistracy, with the view of effecting a reconciliation; but the political papers having seized upon this event, by no means political, had exasperated the parties, and all conciliatory measures were fruitless. The first time the president took his seat, the bâtonnier, accompanied by four members, appeared at the bar, in the hope that an apology would be made, but they were disappointed; and since then no advocate has pleaded before the upper chamber, for the whole bar has sided with the members of the Council of Discipline, and the suits are pleaded by the avoués, whose number is limited to sixty, out of which four at most are capable of pleading; and, of course, this state of things does not suit those whose causes are pending. Report says, that the Minister of Justice, and even the King, have been solicited to interfere; but, if each party persists, there is no legal means capable of ending the conflict, for M. Seguier's office is held for life, and the barristers cannot be compelled to plead.

The Cour Royale seems, however, to have declared for the President. Two general assemblies have been held, and at the majority of one voice only, the members of the bar who signed the letter addressed to the President have been summoned to appear before the Court.

This decision has created a great sensation in the legal world; and the Palais de Justice has been in a state of excitement, and groups of barristers are to be seen discussing the merits of the measure adopted by the Court, and the texts of law applicable to it; for in France the courts and tribunals have the right of citing before them barristers guilty of want of respect to the magistracy. But do the contents of that letter fail in respect to the magistracy? By no means. Barristers are at liberty to refrain from pleading, and they have a right publicly, but respectfully, to say so. Susceptibility is always honourable in a profession, and the public would not have the right to expect such good offices from a corporation who was careless of esteem. Those that demand respect are bound to render themselves worthy of it; and advocates ought to be commended for the regard they profess for their calling, as it is a guarantee both for their clients and justice. Early yesterday morning the crowd had invaded the Palais de Justice, so great has been the interest excited by this episode of our judicial history, and the members of the Council of Discipline have at length answered their summons to appear before the Cour Royale. But as in France the law prohibits publicity being given to the private deliberations of a Court, we can only repeat what was spoken on the occasion; and we only know that, after a speech of the Attorney-General's, remarkable for its conciliatory spirit, the bâtonnier read a report which had been drawn up and adopted by the council of advocates. The Attorney-General then demanded the suppression of the letter written to the President, warning the barristers, and enjoining them to resume their pleadings before the first chamber; and the Court, after four hours' deliberation, adopted the conclusions of the Attorney-General. As you may perceive, the question has not advanced a step. It is absurd to attempt to compel the advocates to plead; they have a right to refuse, without alleging their reasons; and that letter is unjustly considered to be a breach of respect towards the magistracy, it being nothing more than the expression of an individual feeling. Moreover, that letter has not yet been published, and will only be known when the decree of the Court has been signified to those who signed it.

The Court of Discipline perseveres in its determination, and has resigned en masse, that by new elections they may be convinced of the sympathy and consent of all their brother barristers. It is also said that an appeal will be made to the Court of Cassation against the decree of the Cour Royale, on the ground that it has made use of texts in the law that are not applicable to barristers. The Court of Cassation is, in France, the court of highest appeal, whose decrees are irrevocable, and whose only business is to decide whether the law has been properly applied in the cases submitted to its examination. The principal members of the bar have sided with the advocates, and it is reported that Louis Philippe has said, "Patientia judicis magna est pars justitiæ."

Thus this quarrel stands at present. Its further progress I will duly report to you,

And remain, Sir, yours truly,

Avocat de la Cour Royale.

MORE ABOUT MR. THOMPSON.

We trust never to make an accusation without giving to the accused the most ample opportunity of defending or excusing himself. Upon this principle, we cheerfully insert the following defence of Mr. Thompson, even though it comes to us anonymously.

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—The very strong and positive condemnation passed by you on Mr. Thompson, of Chelmsford, in last Times, has caused me to read the reports of his alleged misdoings very attentively, and it appears to me your severe censure is hardly merited. At all events, as a strong doubt on the subject exists in my mind, and seeing the very great danger of a misuse of your power when commenting on the conduct of individuals, I take leave briefly to review the two cases quoted.

In the first there is nothing to shew that Mr. Thompson drew the briefs on both sides, as you charge him. He appears merely to have handed the two briefs to counsel. How often, at sessions and assizes, does one attorney hand to counsel another attorney's brief?

Did the counsel employed (Messrs. Marsh and Gray) become Mr. Thompson's co-conspirators, and play their parts so badly as to attract the attention of the Bench, or how did it happen the inquiry was made?

As to the case in the Insolvent Debtors' Court, where is the impropriety of an attorney of that court presenting the petition of an insolvent debtor when he had previously sued for another client? In many towns the attorneys practising in that court are very few, in some only one, in many only two, and, no doubt, it often happens they are called upon to put in operation the law to release from imprisonment for persons against whom they have had to use the law inflicting that imprisonment. And, inasmuch as no attorneys are allowed by the Insolvent Court to practise for prisoners in any gaol except those specially appointed for the particular town, were the practice different to that I have mentioned, a prisoner would frequently be found ending his days in gaol because professional etiquette virtually withholds the mercies of the law from him.

Mr. Thompson is a perfect stranger to me, but I like

Fair Play.

Brief will be the reply.

Fair Play contends that it is not shewn that Mr. Thompson did more than deliver the briefs; it does not follow that he drew them.

But though not so stated, it is plainly to be inferred. If the surmise of our correspondent be correct, Counsel would not have exclaimed, nor the Court censured.

As to the manner of the discovery, there is no evidence; but the wrong consists in the deed, and not in the detection of it: unlike many other things, which are wrong only when they are found out.

This affair, therefore, still remains wholly without good excuse.

The case of the Insolvent Court is more dubious. It might be that there was no other Attorney in the neighbourhood practising in that Court. If so it were, there would be some show of excuse, at least it might admit of question. But before Mr. THOMPSON (or his champions) can purify himself from the facts, as they stand recorded, by any explanation, it must be distinctly shewn that his acting as the Attorney for the insolvent, whom he had, as Attorney for the creditor, thrown into prison—thus representing two adverse interests—was a matter of absolute necessity, and that great wrong would have resulted to the insolvent had he strictly observed the rules of professional propriety.

If such a defence can be supported by facts, we shall with pleasure publish it as widely as the charge.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

THE following appears in a recent number of the Times. Could not some of our readers trace the advertiser?

"DEBTS RECOVERED GRATIS, by a professional gentleman, for tradesmen and others, in town or country, without risk. The best references. Parties involved in legal or other difficulties assisted, and their affairs arranged without the exposure of insolvency. Accounts properly adjusted. Address to A. B. C. 29, City-terrace, City-road. N.B. A desirable opportunity for realizing all unpaid Christmas bills. Bad debts, &c. can also be disposed of."

VERULAM SOCIETY.

IT will be observed that the first part of the Reports of Real Property Cases is published to-day, and they can scarcely fail to be acceptable to that very numerous body of practitioners of whose business Conveyancing forms the larger portion. Hitherto they could only procure the few cases they wanted by purchasing the entire body of reports at a costly price. By means of the Society they may henceforth obtain them in a collected form for reading and reference, and at the price of fewer shillings yearly than they have hitherto paid of pounds.

A second part of the Real Property Cases is almost ready for the press.

A collection of Criminal Law Cases will be another novelty. The first part of that is nearly perfected.

The Prospectus of the Complete Practice of the Law, which has been proposed as the first of the Society's Text Books, is in preparation.

The following new members have been enrolled since our last:—

PRACTICE—PLEADING—EVIDENCE.

BY PROFESSOR CAREY.

Delivered at University College, London.

LECTURE IX.

The first step which is to be taken is this: the defendant has eight days to enter an appearance; on the expiration of the eight days, the plaintiff may enter an appearance for him, and he is required to declare before the expiration of the next term. He may however obtain from the Court a rule for further time. The declaration is entitled of the court in which the action is brought, and of the day on which it is filed or delivered. The venue, that is a memorandum of the county in which the cause of action is alleged to have arisen, is stated in the margin. The use of the venue is to ascertain from what county the jury is to be summoned, and consequently where the trial is to be had. The body of the declaration commences with the names of the parties, and a short statement of the process; it then sets forth the cause of action; and concludes with an allegation of damage, and what is termed production of suit. With respect to damages in the action of debt and detinue, they are generally nominal. But in covenant, and in all actions, whether in fact or in form founded on a tort, the damages are the only thing sought to be recovered. Where the plaintiff demands merely the payment of a debt, or the restoration of his goods, damages can only be claimed for the delay or detention. But where he complains of a breach of duty or other tort, he seeks to recover in the form of damages a compensation for all the loss he has sustained by the defendant's alleged misconduct: these actions are said to sound in damages. In the allegation of damages it is necessary to lay them high enough to cover the real demand, for the jury may award to the plaintiff a less sum than he claimed, but not a greater. The production of suit consists in the formula, "and therefore he brings suit &c."—inde producit sectam. This was originally a tender by the plaintiff of his followers or witnesses. It has in modern practice no meaning, unless it be considered equivalent to a verification, i. e. an undertaking to substantiate by evidence the statement made in the declaration. Another formula equally devoid of meaning described by Blackstone, the entry of pledges to prosecute, has been abolished, partly by the Uniformity of Process Act, partly by Peel's Act, 3 Will. 4, 215. In that part of the declaration which contains the statement of the case, all the circumstances must be alleged that are necessary to the support of the action. The declaration in covenant sets forth that by a deed executed by the defendant he covenanted to do certain acts. It then alleges that he has not done the acts in question, and thereby has broken his covenant, to the damage of the plaintiff. A declaration in debt, for goods sold—that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff a certain sum of money for goods sold and delivered, and that he has not paid the said sum. In assumpsit for goods sold—that being indebted to the plaintiff for the value of goods sold and delivered, he promised to pay for them, but has not done it, to the plaintiff's damage. The declaration in trespass, qr. cl. fre. states that the defendant [with force and arms] broke and and entered the close of the plaintiff situate in such a place, and trod down the grass [against the King's peace] and to the plaintiff's damage.

In every action the declaration must shew upon the face of it the right of the party suing and the injury done by the party sued. The application of this rule is very obvious in the simple instances I have given; but the same rule must also be observed in cases where the cause of action is required to be set out more at length—as, for instance, in actions on the case, and actions of assumpsit on a special agreement. (Tolhut v. Selby, 6 A. & E. 786, E. T. 1837.) In an action on the case, the declaration alleged that the plaintiff was entitled to the use of a cistern; that the defendant had fastened up a door leading to the cistern, and thereby prevented plaintiff having access to the cistern. Here the gist of the complaint was the fastening of the door, and the plaintiff had not alleged that he had a right to use it, and for this reason the declaration was held not to be sufficient to support the action. So where a man brings an action on the case against another, for causing him to be wrongfully arrested (Saxon v. Castle, 6 A. & E. 652), malice is the gist of the action, and if the act be not said to be done maliciously, no sufficient wrongful act is alleged against the defendant. In the statement of the case, the cause of action is sometimes set out at once, sometimes it is prefaced by other matter, alleged by way of an inducement, or the allegation of introductory matter. Thus, in an action on the case for a libel, it is usual to allege, by way of inducement, that the plaintiff is a man of the best character imaginable, and particularly free from the faults imputed to him by the libel; and if the action is for a libel on the plaintiff in his trade or profession—if he is an attorney, and the libel imputes to him misconduct in the management of a certain cause—the declaration begins with what is termed a special inducement, stating, with sufficient words of commendation, that the plaintiff is an attorney, and that he was engaged in the cause in question, &c. This introductory matter is necessary, in order to shew how the libel attaches to the plaintiff. (Hart v. Crowley, 10 A. & E. 378.) The word inducement relates more to the form of the allegation than to its nature. In an action on the case for damage to real property, the plaintiff's possession of the land in question is recited by way of inducement, and then the injury done by the defendant is set forth. (Stephen, 39.) Both of these facts are necessary to support the action—the right of the plaintiff, and the wrong committed by the defendant. But the right of the plaintiff is only material in this action with reference to the wrong committed. The wrong committed is the cause of action; the right is alleged by way of inducement. At common law, it was required that every material fact should be laid with a venue; that is, that the place where the fact happened should be stated. The object of ascertaining the place where the fact occurred was to know the neighbourhood—vicenetum visne—from which the jury was to come, venue.

For a long time the county stated in the margin sufficiently designated where the jury were to be summoned from; but the rule of the common law was still maintained, till, by one of the recent rules of Court (Hill. T. 4 Wm. 4), it was provided that the name of the county stated in the margin should be taken to be the venue intended by the defendant, and that no venue should be stated in the body of the declaration, or in any subsequent pleadings. So the name of the place is not to be inserted, as formerly, to every material fact; but it is still required where a local description is to be given. For instance, in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit (Hil. T. 4 Wm. 4), the place on which the trespass has been committed must be designated by name or by abuttals; and although a minute misdescription of any of the abuttals will not be material, yet it is required that the place should be faithfully described in substance, so as to convey to the defendant full information of the place in which he is alleged to have committed the trespass. (Webber v. Richards, E. T. 1841, 1 A. & E. N. S. 439.)

The common law also required that the time should be stated when every material fact occurred; and this rule is still maintained as a matter of form; but—except where a written instrument is set out, or, secondly, where the time affects the merits of the case—the time is not material. Any day may be alleged at the discretion of the pleader, and no inference can be drawn from the day (a). (Arnold v. Arnold, 3 Bing. N. C. 81, Tr. T. 1836.) That was an action commenced on the 20th of February, therefore it was necessary that the cause of action should have been complete before the writ was sued out on the day named. The declaration alleged that the money had been lent on the 27th of February—that is to say, the time stated in the declaration for the cause of action was seven days later than the day the action was commenced. But the time is quite immaterial: you might allege a lending on the 27th of February, and prove a lending on the 1st of January; but the plaintiff would have failed if he had not shewn some cause of action arising before the commencement of the action. But where a written instrument is set out, it must be set out truly, and the date given must be taken to be the right date. Thus, in an action on a promissory note, bearing date the 2nd of January, and payable one month after date, the note, taking into consideration the three days of grace, would become payable on the 5th of February, and, until that day was passed, the right of action would not commence. The action was commenced on the 2nd of February, and, therefore, before the cause of action arose. (Ward v. Honeywood, Doug. 61.) In promissory notes it is not usual to declare on the note as bearing date on a certain day: you do not say that a person made his promissory note bearing date such and such a day; but you say, on the 1st of January he made a promissory note, whereby he promised to pay it. You give a date merely to the contract, not to the writing, and thus you may give one day, and prove a different day. There is another case, Parkinson v. Whitehead (2 M. & G. 329, H. T. 1841). This was an action of assumpsit; an agreement in writing was produced, but a date was not given; it was merely alleged that, by an agreement in writing, the defendant promised, on the 31st of May, 1835, to build houses within two years from Michaelmas then next ensuing: the breach was that the defendant did not build the houses, and the action was brought in 1839. The declaration was bad in not averring that two years had elapsed. Why was the declaration bad? If the time had been material—for instance, if it had been set out as an instrument bearing date 31st of May, 1835, the date would have been material: it would have appeared that two years had elapsed from the time when the contract was made and the time when the action was brought. It merely said that a contract was made in writing, which contract might have been made at any time within the Statute of Limitations. There was formerly a great deal of stress laid on the question, whether it was asserted affirmatively that it was at such and such a time, or under a videlicet to pay on the 31st of January. If the date is important, it being brought under a videlicet will not make it unimportant; and should it appear that the date is put simply without the videlicet, that will not of itself be important. As far as I can collect, in Arnold v. Arnold there was no videlicet. The report is not so clear as to shew that; but if it appears that the date is immaterial, the Court will not consider it to be material merely because the videlicet has been left out; so that in effect the videlicet appears to be much less important than in former cases it has been represented to be; still, of course, it is necessary to put it in, for it is, at all events, an intimation that the pleader means to specify the time in order to comply with the form, but that he does not mean to represent that as the actual time. In some instances, time, place, and quantity, though immaterial in themselves, may be rendered material by the method of pleading. For instance, if an action is brought for not accepting a thousand tons of coal, the defendant pleads, that, except as to one hundred tons of coal, there was not such a contract; and as to one hundred tons, he pleads something else—that there was another contract, whereby it was agreed that some other person should be substituted; and, in respect of that hundred tons, the quantity is made material by his own pleading. With respect to damages in actions of debt and detinue, they are generally nominal. But in covenant, and in all actions where the complaint is founded on a tort, damages only are sought to be recovered.

Where the plaintiff demands the mere payment of a debt, or the restoration of his goods, damages can only be claimed for the delay or detention; but where the plaintiff complains of a breach of duty or other tort, he there seeks to recover, in the form of damages, a compensation for the loss he has sustained by the defendant's alleged misconduct. These actions are said to sound in damages, and the others in debt. It is necessary in the allegation of damages, to lay the damages high, to recover the full demand; for the jury may award less than the sum claimed, but not more. Besides the general allegation of damages at the end of the declaration, there may be, in certain cases, some particular damages alleged. Whenever the plaintiff sustains any damage not necessarily arising from the act of the defendant, he cannot recover any compensation for it unless it is expressly inserted in the declaration. If a man takes away the horse of another, the owner may bring an action of trespass and recover damages for the unlawful taking; but in order to recover any damage not necessarily arising from the taking his horse, the damage must be averred: e. g. if he had paid over money to regain possession, he avers that the defendant took his horse; per quod, he was obliged to pay such and such a sum to regain possession of it. The allegation of special damages is called a per quod. In cases where it introduces mere matter of aggravation, the allegation is only introduced to increase the damages; the action could have been maintained equally well without it. In other cases the allegation of special damage is necessary to the maintenance of the action. For instance, a man's servant is beaten; if he is so beaten that the master loses any portion of his services, an action of trespass lies at the suit of the master, per quod servitium amisit; but without special damage he cannot support an action for beating his servant. Again, where words are used that are actionable in themselves, special damages may be alleged as matter of aggravation, but it is not necessary to support the action; but where the words are not actionable in themselves, an action can only be brought in respect of any special damages they may have occasioned, and that damage must be averred. (Knight v. Gibbs, 1 A. & E. 43, E. T. 1834.) There is a distinction necessary to be averred. If an allegation of special damages is necessary to the maintenance of the action, that is a material issue, and the defendant may traverse it, and may say that the plaintiff did not suffer the damage he complains of, and that would be an answer to the action. If the special damage was not necessary to the maintenance of the action, the defendant cannot traverse it; it would be immaterial. Supposing the defendant traversed it:—the plaintiff complains that the defendant took his horse, whereby he was bound to pay so much; the defendant says he was not bound to pay so much; that would be an immaterial traverse, for the action would lie just as well without the allegation as with it, and the plaintiff could not recover any thing in respect of any special damage, unless he shewed by his evidence it had been actually sustained; so that under no circumstances could the defendant gain any thing by denying it. It does not defeat the action if he shews it to be false; and if it is true, the plaintiff would be equally called upon to prove it, whether he denied it or not. But with respect to special damage, where it is necessary to support the action, it is otherwise. Unless it is denied, it is a material allegation; if it is denied, it is to be proved; but if it is not denied, it is admitted and it does not require proof.

The production of suit has, in modern practice, no meaning whatever, unless it be considered equivalent to verification—that is, an undertaking to substantiate, by evidence, the statements made in the declaration.

New Books.

A Treatise on Presumptions of Law and Fact, with the Theory and Rules of Presumptive or Circumstantial Proof in Criminal Cases. By W. M. BEST, A.M. LL.B. of Gray's Inn, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. Pp. 391. London, 1844. Sweet.

THERE cannot be a question as to the importance of the subject to which this volume is devoted. Our criminal courts daily require from the advocate an accurate knowledge of the principles of Presumptive Evidence, and yet, how few, even among those who have attained to eminence, have formally mastered them. Counsel who would be ashamed to own himself ignorant of a point of law, or a rule of evidence, will not unfrequently exhibit the most lamentable incapacity when dealing with the philosophy of evidence.

We have watched with interest many advocates, having considerable practice in the Criminal Courts, with the express endeavour to discover the true cause of their comparative success or failure. That observation has convinced us, that the power of the first-rate advocate lies not in his eloquence, not in his legal knowledge, not in his ready wit, but in his mastery of that which we may term the Philosophy of Evidence as distinguished from the mere Law of Evidence; meaning by this the principles deduced from observation of the process through which the mind arrives at the condition which we term conviction, and which is not within our control; a state very different from that which too often passes under the name of belief, but which is properly nothing more than assent—an effort of the will; inquiry being essential to the former, but generally excluded from the latter. The really great advocate is he who, by observation and reflection, aided, it may be, by that sort of natural dramatic power which enables the dramatist to become, as it were, the personage he paints, to transform his mind into other minds, and think and feel as those other minds would have thought and felt, has learned how the minds of his fellow-men are to be moved to conviction, and applies that knowledge in addressing a jury. But how rarely this is well done, all will admit who frequent our courts of justice; and the principal cause of the defect we believe lies in the neglect of those who study for the bar, and still more of those who practise there, to master the Philosophy of Evidence; it being a very common, but very false notion in our Profession, that a knowledge of the law is sufficient for an advocate—how erroneous the impression let those tell who have had any experience in advocacy, and learned to feel their deficiency.

Mr. BEST's treatise in part supplies the information on which we have been commenting. His design is to develope the theory and assign the limits of legal presumptions, and to lay down the principles of presumptive reasoning in criminal cases. As the subject is one of very great interest and novelty, and as it has been very ably handled by the learned author, we propose to give to it a more elaborate review than we can devote to ordinary legal publications. And we are justified by the approaching leisure of the long vacation.

We purpose, therefore, to continue this notice from time to time, as an opening offers in our columns.

The essay is distributed into three parts. The first expounds the general principles; the second considers separately the presumptions of law and fact usually met with in practice; the third is entirely devoted to presumptive proof in criminal cases. For the present we will limit our investigations to

PART I.

On Presumptive Evidence and Presumptions in General.

According to LOCKE, the mind has two faculties conversant about truth and falsehood, namely, knowledge and judgment; the former is the result of our actual perceptions, and its range is necessarily limited; but the latter attains the same end, though not with equal certainty, by comparing ideas; the ideas thus employed are called proofs, and the process reasoning.

The foundation of judgment, then, is probability, or the likelihood of a proposition, or fact, being true or false, deduced by reasoning from its conformity or repugnancy to our general knowledge, observation, and experience; and it is also sometimes founded on testimony, in which case our assent flows from reliance on the credit of the narrator.

"In all cases of probable reasoning, the proof is said to be presumptive, and the inference to which it gives rise a presumpt[illegible] which, therefore, taken in its largest and most comprehensive sense, may be defined to be, where, in the absence of o[illegible] until actual certainty of the truth or falsehood of any proposition or fact can be obtained, an inference affirmative or disaffirmative of that truth or falsehood is drawn by a process of probable reasoning."

Truths of facts may be evidenced in two ways; either directly, by evidence of the senses, or indirectly, by reasoning from other truths which have been evidenced directly.

"Evidence, taken in its largest and most comprehensive sense, has been accurately defined to be any matter of fact, the effect, tendency, or design of which, when presented to the mind, is to produce a persuasion therein affirmative or disaffirmative of the existence of some other matter of fact; the latter of which may be called the principal fact, and the former the evidentiary fact. And when the persuasion is at its highest point, the principal fact may, in a more expressive way, be termed 'the fact proved,' and the evidentiary, 'the probative fact.' Hence, it is clear, that evidence of a fact and proof of it are not synonymous terms. Proof (using the word in the sense of persuasion or belief wrought in the mind) is the perfection of evidence; without evidence there can be no proof, although there may be evidence which does not amount to proof. Take the case, for instance, of a man found murdered at a spot towards which another had been seen walking a short time before; this fact would be EVIDENCE to shew that the latter was the murderer, but, standing alone, would be far from PROOF of it."

The modes of reasoning by which any fact not immediately coming under cognizance of the senses may be proved are twofold: first, where the connection between the main fact and the evidence is so absolute that if the latter were admitted, the other follows necessarily, as in the ordinary instance of an alibi; and, second, where the evidentiary facts are strong enough to convince, though, possibly, wrongly; as in case of what is called circumstantial evidence.

Such are the principles upon which the science of evidence is based. We now proceed to their application to the science of jurisprudence.

"Every cause litigated in a court of justice involves two things: the existence of certain facts, the acts of intelligent agents or otherwise, as the foundation or substratum for the application of the principles of jurisprudence—ex facto oritur jus; and, secondly, the applicability to those facts of some one or more of those principles. Hence, in the administration of justice, a twofold duty is in general cast on the tribunal; namely, to ascertain the truth of the alleged facts from the proofs or evidence adduced by the litigant parties; and, secondly, to pronounce a legal decision on those facts, so far as they may appear proved or disproved."

Questions of fact are sometimes determined in courts of justice by the testimony of the senses; but most commonly by the evidence of individuals, or documents, testifying to certain facts, in which cases the evidence is direct.

"But, when any fact in dispute has neither fallen under the cognizance of the senses of any person, nor is stated in terms in any authentic writing, so that its truth or falsehood can only be deduced by special inference from facts proved directly, the evidence of that fact is said to be circumstantial. And when the conclusion of the existence of the principal fact does not follow necessarily from the facts proved, but is deduced from them by probable inference, the evidence is said to be presumptive, and the inference drawn a presumption; which, therefore, in this restricted legal sense, may be defined 'an inference, affirmative or disaffirmative, of the existence of a disputed fact, drawn by a judicial tribunal, by a process of probable reasoning, from some one or more matters of fact, either admitted in the cause or otherwise satisfactorily established.'"

Facts are divided into physical, or those which relate to external nature; and psychological, or those which relate to the mind; as sensations, recollections, opinions, &c.

Presumptions are either of facts, of law, or mixed of law and facts.

And, first, of

PRESUMPTIONS OF LAW.

"Presumptions or, as they are sometimes called, intendments of law, and by the civilians præsumptiones seu positiones juris, are inferences or positions established for the most part by the common, but occasionally by statute law, and are obligatory alike on judges and juries. They differ from presumptions of fact and mixed presumptions in two most important respects. 1st, That, in the latter, a discretion, more or less extensive, as to drawing the inference, is vested in the tribunal, while, in those now under consideration, the law peremptorily requires a certain inference to be made, whenever the facts appear which it assumes as the basis of that inference. If, therefore, a judge direct a jury contrary to a presumption of law, a new trial is grantable ex debito justitiæ;(a) and if a jury, or even a succession of juries, disregard such a presumption, new trials will be granted, toties quoties, as matter of right.(b) But when any other species of presumption is overlooked or disregarded, the granting a new trial is matter for the discretion of the Court; which will be more or less liberal in this respect, according to the nature and strength of the presumption. But 2nd (and it is here that the difference between the several kinds of presumptions is so strongly marked), as presumptions of law are, in reality, rules of law, and part of the law itself, the Court may draw the inference whenever the requisite facts are developed in pleading,(c) while all other presumptions, however obvious, being only inferences of fact, cannot be made without the intervention of a jury."

Some presumptions of law are absolute and conclusive, called by the lawyers irrebuttable presumptions; others conditional, inconclusive, or rebuttable. Mr. BEST collects, in a note, some curious instances of ancient presumptions of law.

"In unenlightened times, or in the hands of a corrupt tribunal, artificial presumptions and fictions are most dangerous instruments, and even in the best times require to be handled with discretion. As an instance of the notions of former ages in this respect, Bartolus gravely expresses himself thus:—'Item dico, si aliquis deprehenditur in domo alicujus, ubi pulchra mulier est, certè facit hunc adulterum manifestum!' (Bartolus, Comment. in 2ndam partem Dig. Novi. fol. 122, b. de Furtis): and a number of very absurd and mischievous presumptions, which at one time received the sanction of the civilians and canonists, are collected by Müller in his edition of Struvius, Syntagma Juris, exercit. 38, tit. 18, n. (ζ). But we need not travel beyond our own law. Lord Coke, in Calvin's case (7 Co. 17, a.), lays it down that 'all infidels are in law perpetui inimici: for the law presumes not that they will be converted, that being potentia remotissima, for between them, as with the devils, whose subjects they be, and the Christian, there is perpetual hostility'—a charitable notion, and borrowed probably from the canonists, with whom it was a maxim, 'semel hæreticus, semper præsumitur talis.' (Struv. in loco cit.) The same great lawyer told the jury, in Sir Walter Raleigh's case, that the law presumes that a man will not accuse himself to accuse another. (2 Howell St. Tr. 19.)"

Nearly allied to these irrebuttable presumptions are legal fictions, too familiar to our readers to need citation; but it may be as well for them to bear in mind two rules by which these fictions are qualified, namely:—

(a) Phil. Ev. 464, 8th ed. See also, Haire v. Wilson (9 B. & C. 643).

(b) Phil. Ev. 459; Tindal v. Brown (1 T. R. 167). There is an exception to this rule in the case of certain estoppels and admissions, which are obligatory on the parties to the cause, but not on the jury. (1 Stark. Ev. 542, 3rd ed.)

(c) Steph. Pleading, 382, 4th ed.; 1 Chitty, Pleading, 221, 6th ed.

1st. That they must never be allowed to work prejudice or injury to an innocent party.

2nd. The matter assumed as true must be something physically possible.

Legal fictions are of three kinds: affirmative, in which something is assumed to exist which in reality does not; as the lease, &c. in ejectment; negative, in which, on the contrary, that which really exists is treated as if it did not; and relative, which last are of four kinds: 1st, where the act of one person is taken to be the act of another; 2nd, where an act done by or to a thing is taken, by relation, as done by or to another, as that possession of part is possession of the whole, &c.; 3rd, fictions as to place; as where contracts made at sea are presumed to be made in London; 4th, fictions as to time; as where title of an administrator refers back to the intestate's death, &c.

Rebuttable presumptions are that large class in which the presumption exists only until the contrary is proved; as the legitimacy of a child born during wedlock, &c.

We now come to

PRESUMPTIONS OF FACT.

And, first, of the grounds or sources from which they are derived.

These are obviously numberless; but some rules are to be extracted; such, for instance, as that uniformity with the ordinary course of nature should always be presumed; and this equally with animate as with inanimate things, and the principle extends even to the acts and thoughts of intelligent agents.

The question now presents itself as to the admissibility of presumptive evidence. The policy of our law excludes much as legal evidence which might in itself be entitled to consideration as being too remote, or too liable to falsification. On the other hand, our law admits as evidence some things that in strictness are not evidence But all these are subjects for a treatise on the law of evidence, and need not be discussed here. We will confine ourselves more to the science of evidence.

Continual differences of opinion arise as to the relative values of presumptive and direct evidence; proceeding from the difference of the rules in the science and in the law of evidence According to the science of evidence, presumptive is inferior in value to direct evidence; according to law, it is of equal value.

Mr. BEST properly objects to Lord Coke's threefold division of presumptions, into violent, probable, and light, and proposes to consider them with reference to their effect on the onus probandi, the general rule of which is that the affirmative is to be proved.

Presumptions may be classified into slight or strong, as they affect the burden of proof; the latter being such as do, the former such as do not shift the onus probandi.

We now come to presumptions of mixed law and fact:

"These consist chiefly of certain presumptive inferences which, from their strength, importance, or frequent occurrence, attract, as it were, the observation of the law, and, from being constantly recommended by judges, and acted on by juries, become in time as familiar to the courts, and occupy nearly as important a place in the administration of justice, as the presumptions of the law itself. They are, in fact, a sort of quasi præsumptiones juris, and, like the strict legal presumptions, may be divided into three classes: 1st, Where the inference is one which common sense would have made for itself; 2nd, Where an artificial weight is attached to the evidentiary facts beyond their mere natural tendency to produce belief; 3rd, Where, from motives of policy, juries are recommended to draw inferences which are purely artificial. The two latter chiefly occur where long-established rights are in danger of being defeated by technical objections, or want of strict proof of what has taken place a great while ago, in which cases it is every day's practice for judges to recommend to juries to presume, without proof, the most solemn instruments, such as charters, grants, and other public documents, together with all sorts of private conveyances."

Mr. BEST's remarks upon the manner of bringing this class of presumptions under the notice of a jury may be advantageously remembered.

"The terms in which presumptions of fact and mixed presumptions should be brought under the consideration of juries by the presiding judge, depend on their weight, either natural or technical. Where the presumption is one which the policy of law and the ends of justice require to be made, such as the existence of moduses, and other immemorial rights, from uninterrupted modern usage, the jury should be told that they ought to make the presumption, unless some evidence be given to the contrary; it should not be put to them as a matter for their discretion. (Jenkins v. Harvey, 1 C. M. & R. 877.) And the same rule seems to apply where the presumption is one of much natural weight and frequent occurrence; as where larceny is inferred from the recent possession of stolen property, &c. In the case of presumptions of a less stringent nature, however, such a direction would be improper; and perhaps the best general rule is, that the jury should be advised or recommended to make the presumption. (R. v. Joliffe, 2 B. & C. 54.) To lay down rules for all cases would of course be impossible; but, as has been remarked by a recent writer on the law of evidence, it is certain that the language of the Courts, expressed in regard to particular presumptions, may be expected to exercise considerable influence in the determination of future cases in which the like presumptions may arise. (Phil. Ev. 461, 8th ed.)"

We have made but a brief excursion into this valuable volume; but here we must pause for the present, promising to return to it.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

THE following scale of charges, reduced more than one-third, has been adopted for Advertisements of Estates for Sale, &c., exceeding 10 lines in length:

For every succeeding 30 words . 1s.

THE MONEY MARKET.

The arrangement of the Consol Account is now in progress, and stock seems very scarce, having been called yesterday, just before the close of business, at 99¼. Money being easy, however, obviates any difficulty that might otherwise be experienced by the Bears. Consols are now marked 99⅛ to ⅜ for immediate transfer, and 99¼ to ⅜ for the August Account. The Unfunded Debt is supported at 77s. to 79s. premium. Bank Stock has realized 199½; and East India Stock 285½. The New Three-and-a-Half per Cents. are 101⅞ to 102; the Reduced 102⅞ to ⅞; and the Three per Cents. 100⅞ to ¼. East India Bonds are 98 premium. The Commissioners have taken 20,000*l*. Consols, at 99⅜.

The Foreign Investments have been comparatively quiet, but Spanish Bonds again look firm, and are higher, the Five per Cents. being 23¼ ½, and the Three per Cents. 33¾ to ¼; Portuguese Converted are dull at 45¾ to ½; Mexican firmer at 36 to ⅛; Colombian have risen to 13¾ ⅞; and Brazilian to 83½. The Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents. at 61¾ to 62—a further slight advance.

The Railway Shares generally rule somewhat higher, and although not in brisk demand, there is a fair business doing.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY v. BIRMINGHAM AND GLOUCESTER RAILWAY COMPANY.

Injunction—Irreparable mischief—Contract to be performed at a future day.

Where one railway company had an option at a future day of purchasing upon defined terms a tramway leading from the waterside to the railway terminus, which was the property of another railway company, and the owners of the tramway, before the time of purchase arrived, laid down rails by the side of the tramway for the purpose of loading their carriages by the water-side, it was held that there was nothing in the nature of irreparable mischief to the tramway in that act; and as it did not prevent the company in possession from performing their contract when the day arrived, the Court would not interfere with the parties in the use of their own property.

Stuart and Stevens moved by way of appeal from the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England, who had refused a similar application, for an injunction to restrain the defendants from altering or destroying a tramway leading from the river Severn to the town of Gloucester. The tramway was connected with the defendants' railway. The plaintiffs had an option under an Act of Parliament of purchasing, within a certain period and upon defined terms, an undivided moiety of the defendants' railway, and with it the tramway which formed the road upon which coals and stone are conveyed from the Severn to the defendants' railway terminus at Gloucester. The defendants are laying down rails by the side of the tramway, which would take away the business of the tramway, the profits of which are large; and an injunction was sought to restrain the defendants from so doing, upon the principle that where two persons have an interest in a property, one of them has no right so to use his interest as to benefit himself at the expense of the joint property, and, consequently at the other party's expense. Here the profits of the tramway when the plaintiffs come to purchase will have been altogether lost.

Bethel, Bacon, and Rolt, for the defendants.—The object is to put rails upon the tramway, and to carry goods by means of waggons drawn by horses, not by locomotive engines, all kinds of goods from the Severn to the Birmingham and Gloucester railway: at present only coals and stones are carried. The Vice-Chancellor said the Court would take care that the plaintiffs should not have to pay more for the purchase in consequence of this alteration. (Massington v. Thwaites, 2 Russell, 458; Twort v. Twort, 16 Vesey, 128.) The rails do not injure or interfere with the tramway, which might readily be restored to its previous state.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—You could take up the rails in a few days, and restore the railway to the condition it was in before. That shews the alleged injury is not irremediable mischief.

Rolt.—They now claim to prevent the diversion of the traffic.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Do you mean to say that if I sell a brewery I am at liberty to set up another immediately contiguous, and draw away the customers? Whether you don't buy the tramway with all its incidents?

Rolt.—That depends on circumstances. The profit of the tramway will not, in fact, be injured.

Bethel.—There is a new source of profit springing up which never existed before.

Stuart.—The object is to benefit their railway at the expense of the tramway. A person has no right to sacrifice a joint property for the benefit of a property in which he has a sole interest.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Company are the actual owners of the property, and there are no restrictions upon the manner in which they are to use it.

Stuart.—But the plaintiffs have also rights in the tramway.

JUDGMENT.

Wednesday, May 1.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—An injunction was moved for to restrain the defendants from laying down rails on the tramway in question. The facts, so far as they are necessary to be stated, are extremely simple. The Great Western Railway Company, by an Act of Parliament, have a right to re-purchase an undivided moiety in a branch railway, which is the property of the Birmingham and Gloucester Railway, in June 1845, on certain specified terms. One condition is, that the works should be completed; another condition is, that if they purchase, they should also take the tramway. The purchase-money is to be 17,000*l*. and they are also to buy an undivided moiety of the tramway. That agreement has been ratified by Act of Parliament. Under such circumstances, the defendants, the Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Company, have no right to make such alterations, either in the railway or the tramway, as would prevent them from performing their contract. The questions for consideration are, whether the works they propose are in their nature such as to prevent the performance of the contract, and whether they would lead to a dilapidation of the tramroad. The tramroad leads from the Gloucester terminus to the Severn, and at present the traffic consists of goods brought by water to Gloucester, which are conveyed some on trucks, others on waggons along the tramroad, to the station at Gloucester. The defendants desire to facilitate this communication, and propose to lay down other rails of a wider gauge, and a different form, by which carriages will be loaded at once at the water, and then go on to the railway, without shifting the goods. This will increase the profits of the railway. The question is, are they entitled to do so? They may use their property in any way so that it be not inconsistent with their ability to perform their contract. What, then, is their position? Here is a mile of railway which it is stated may be laid down in a week or taken up in a week, and the tramroad restored to its original condition. Are they not entitled to improve their property? How is this to prevent them from performing their contract? If the condition to deliver the tramroad to the purchaser be required, and if it is sufficient to take up the rails to restore it to its former state, there is nothing to prevent them from performing their contract. The property may be restored if necessary, and if not, they can deliver it in its actual state. They do not propose to do any thing inconsistent with their ability to complete the arrangement. They ought not now to be compelled to take up the rails; it is not necessary to consider whether any damages should be made good at the time. It appears to me that there is nothing proposed to be done for the enjoyment of their own property most beneficially which is inconsistent with their being in a condition to perform their contract. It is said they will not be in a condition to perform their contract, because the trade will have been diverted and may not return; but there is nothing in that argument. It is said, also, to be cheaper; but why is not facility to be given by other works? and if they are bound to change the tramroad back to its former state by the terms of their contract, if not, there is no reason. It was not pressed in argument, and there is no force in it. Another argument was much pressed, that the plaintiffs were bound to purchase the tramway at 17,000*l*. and to pay interest at 5*l*. per cent.; but they had also a further interest in the profits. But supposing there should be a diminution, when the purchase is to be completed, the amount of deductions may be matter of calculation. The difficulty of that calculation is not a sufficient reason for preventing parties from using their own way in the interval.

Motion refused with costs.

ANDREWS v. WALTON.

Practice—Indulgence to pauper suitors—Repeated applications—Production of papers.

The plaintiff in person moved for the production of certain papers, and to discharge an attachment against him for contempt as irregular. The questions raised by him were, whether two attachments issued against him at the same time into different counties were not therefore invalid; and next, that he, having been unconditionally discharged by the defendant from custody upon one of these attachments, was afterwards arrested on a new attachment and while in the registrar's-office, where he had gone upon the business of the suit was not improperly in custody. The papers were alleged to be lost or withheld in the Master's office.

Macqueen, for the defendant, said these questions had been repeatedly adjudicated upon, first by the Vice-Chancellor, then by Lord Brougham, Lord Lyndhurst, and the Lords Commissioners successively, and on each occasion the application had been refused with costs. The plaintiff in reply urged the importance of obtaining a production of the papers in order to his success in an appeal to the House of Lords now pending.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I am afraid I must leave you to the House of Lords; but I will read the printed case on both sides, and I will request the Master to make a report of what has been done with the papers.

Re DYCE SOMBRE, a Lunatic.

The hearing of this petition by Mr. Sombre for a supersedeas of the commission has occupied the whole time of the Court for the last five or six sittings. When judgment is delivered, we shall report so much of it as will be of interest to the lawyer.

The case made by the petitioner's counsel, and which appears to be borne out by their evidence, is, that Mr. Sombre is perfectly sane, and entirely competent to manage himself and his affairs with propriety and shrewdness, but that he entertains unfounded suspicions of his wife's fidelity; and that these suspicions arise from his Oriental education and habits, his want of knowledge of the customs of European society, and his inability to comprehend the freedom enjoyed by females in such society. Upon this topic he certainly entertains opinions and delusions admittedly absurd according to European notions. On the other hand, the lady's friends assert that Mr. Sombre's delusions are so gross that they indicate an unsound mind, and that the peculiar mode in which his insanity manifested may be perhaps connected with his Indian associations, but that the delusions are of such character as to be incompatible with a sane mind.

In answer to this the petitioner's counsel proved that all the peculiarities now sought to be made evidences of an unsound mind existed, and formed the subject of much discussion between Mr. Sombre and the lady and her family, before the marriage; that she married him with a full knowledge that his notions of female propriety differed widely from those entertained in English society, and she seems to have trusted much to her personal influence over him to induce him to modify or forego such notions. It is certain that all his delusions are connected more or less immediately with his opinions as to his wife's conduct.

The Lord Chancellor, having himself examined Mr. Sombre, will decide on the petition.

There is no case on record where delusions upon one point alone have been coexistent with such complete capacity for the ordinary management of his own person and property by a person alleged to be a lunatic as are stated to exist in this case. It is in this point of view only that the case becomes important to the Profession.

Re Chambers, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Costs of next of kin attending inquiry without an order will not be allowed as of course.

Willcock, in support of a petition of the next of kin of the lunatic for an allowance of his costs incurred in attending the execution of the commission, but without having previously obtained an order for that purpose, no petition for such order having ever been presented.

Blunt, for the committee, did not oppose the petition, but was instructed to state the fact that the next of kin had attended without an order.

The Lord Chancellor.—It is not proper that the next of kin should attend without an order, and having so attended, he cannot be allowed his costs unless he afterwards make out a good cause for having done so. He must shew a special case for his attendance. Application refused.

Smith v. Oakes.

Marriage settlement — Construction of the words "joint and natural lives"—Survivorship—Alleged imposition.

Upon an intended marriage between T. O. and E. A. C. a sum of money was directed to be invested in the purchase of certain stock, and that the same should stand in the names of trustees upon the trusts (among others) following :—for the use and behoof of T. O. and E. A. C. during their joint and natural lives, and in case the said E. A. C. should happen to survive the said T. O. her said intended husband, then that she should be entitled to receive the interest arising on such funds, or the rents or other produce of the same yearly and every year during the term of her natural life in full of her jointure, and in lieu, bar, and satisfaction of her dower and thirds at common law. And upon further trust to the issue of the said intended marriage, and to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, the portion of each child to be paid and payable when such child shall attain his or her age of twenty-one years, or be married, and the produce or portions of any child or children dying before, he, she, or they shall have respectively attained the said age of twenty-one years, or be married, shall be equally divided amongst the survivors; and if all the children of such marriage except one shall happen to die, then and in such case such child shall, on his or her attaining the said age of twenty-one years, or being married, receive the whole of the produce of the fund. And in case there should be no issue of the marriage, or being issue, they should all die before their age of twenty-one years or days of marriage, then and in such case the said T. O. to have power to sell, bequeath, or otherwise dispose of the produce of the said principal sum, as being in such event his sole and absolute property.

Held, that the words "joint and natural" must be taken with reference to the other parts of the settlement, and the general scope of settlor, that, therefore, the Court could not exclude the words "natural lives," but must endeavour to give them a meaning. T. O. survived E. A. C.: Held, that the power given to T. O. to dispose of the property as his own in the case of there being no issue of the marriage plainly indicated that his interest was not to cease immediately upon E. A. C.'s decease. And that, therefore, "natural lives," being superadded to "joint," must be taken as signifying the natural lives of both, and not merely during their joint lives.

Held, also, that the clause in favour of the only surviving child in case it should attain the age of twenty-one years, or be married, would, if taken literally, disable the Court from hearing the question raised until it should be seen who was the survivor of the children of the marriage.

Shortly before the 10th June, 1786, a marriage was agreed on between Thos. Oakes, then resident in the East Indies, and senior merchant in the East-India Company, at their presidency in Fort St. George, and paymaster of Palamcottah, and Elizabeth Ann Cosby, spinster, daughter of Col. Sir Henry Augustus Montague Cosby, both resident in the East Indies, and in consideration of the marriage and of 6,400 star pagodas, the marriage portion of Elizabeth Ann Cosby, a sum of 25,000 star pagodas was agreed to be settled as a provision or jointure for her in the event of her surviving her intended husband, and as a provision for the children of the marriage. In pursuance of this agreement, Sir Henry A. M. Cosby on or about the 10th June, 1786, paid the sum of 6,400 star pagodas to Thomas Oakes, and the latter about the same time paid the sum of 25,000 star pagodas to Jas. H. Casamaijor, John Chamier, and Josias Du Pré Porcher (resident in the East Indies), on behalf of themselves and of Thomas Parry and John Bland (both resident in England), and that thereupon an indenture of settlement, dated the 10th June, 1786, was made between the above parties residing in India, and the same was shortly after executed by Parry and Bland in England, whereby it was witnessed that the said T. Oakes had that day paid into the hands of Jas. H. Casamaijor, J. Chamier, and Josias Du Pré Porcher, the sum of 25,000 star pagodas, the receipt whereof on their own part and on the part of T. Parry and J. Bland, the other trustees in England, they thereby acknowledged and thereby declared that the two several sums of 6,400 star pagodas and 25,000 star pagodas were paid upon the trusts and for such intents and purposes, and subject to such provisoes, powers, limitations, and agreements, among certain others, following, viz. that the trustees in India should as soon as convenient remit to the trustees in England the sum of 25,000 star pagodas by bills of exchange, who were to invest the net produce thereof in the public or government funds, or East India stock or on mortgage of freehold, copyhold, or leasehold estates, with the consent of Thos. Oakes, and in default thereof, that then the English trustees should invest the produce of such remittance as the whole number or the major part of them should direct or appoint, in trust for the said Thos. Oakes and Eliz. Ann Cosby during their joint and natural lives, and for the life of Eliz. Ann Cosby, if she should survive her intended husband, the same to be in full of her jointure, and in lieu, bar, and satisfaction of her dower and thirds at common law: and upon further trust to the use of the issue of the said intended marriage, to be equally divided between them on their respectively attaining the age of twenty one years or marriage; and the portion or portions of any child or children dying before he or they shall have respectively attained the said age of twenty-one years, or be married, shall be divided equally among the survivors; and if all the children of such marriage except one shall happen to die, then and in such case such child shall, on his or her attaining the said age of twenty one years, or being married, receive the whole of the produce of the said sum of 25,000 star pagodas. And if there should be no issue of the said marriage, or being issue, they should all die before their age of twenty-one years, or day of marriage, then and in such case the said Thomas Oakes shall have power to dispose of the produce of the said principal sum of 25,000 star pagodas, as being, in such event, his sole and absolute property.

The marriage took place accordingly, and the sum of 25,000 star pagodas was invested in the purchase of 11,886*l.* 1s. 7d. Bank 4 per Cent. Annuities in the joint names of Thomas Parry and James Henry Casamaijor, upon the trusts declared in the indenture of settlement.

The dividends arising from the Bank Annuities were duly paid to Thomas Oakes during the joint lives of himself and wife, who died in 1798, leaving her husband, Thomas Oakes, her surviving.

There were only four children issue of the marriage, viz. the defendant Thomas Alexander Oakes, the eldest son; Henry Robert Oakes, Richard Montague Oakes, and Caroline Eliza Oakes.

James H. Casamaijor died in 1815, leaving Thomas Parry, his co-trustee of the fund, surviving, who also died the year following, having appointed Daniel Richard Warrington, Richard Twining, and his son, Richard Parry, the executors of his will, who proved the same in the proper Ecclesiastical Court. Richard Parry died shortly afterwards, leaving Daniel Richard Warrington and Richard Twining surviving.

The dividends arising from the 11,886*l.* 1s. 7d. continued to be paid to Thomas Oakes after his wife's decease, who laid out considerable sums for the maintenance and advancement of his children in the world, who all attained their respective ages of twenty-one years before the year 1823.

In May 1823, Henry Robert Oakes being about to sail for India, applied to Daniel Richard Warrington and Richard Twining to transfer to him one-fourth of the stock, and a like application was made to them by Richard M. Oakes, whereupon, and in consideration of which they gave the father, T. Oakes, a release of all demands of dividends which had been paid to him from the death of his wife, and signed a release also to the trustees, Warrington and Twining,—the release of R. M. Oakes bearing date the 25th June following,—and directed the trustees to pay his father the dividends upon his share during the life of his father; the share of R. M. Oakes was then transferred into his own name.

In the same year T. Oakes and the trustees applied to T. A. Oakes and Caroline Oakes to deal with their two fourth shares in precisely the same manner as their brother Richard M. Oakes had done in favour of their father, T. Oakes, which they agreed to do upon consideration that the amount of their respective two fourth shares and the dividends from their mother's death should be considered as a debt upon the estate of T. Oakes to be paid on his decease.

Under these circumstances, about the beginning of the year 1824, a deed-poll was, with the privity and approbation of T. Oakes and the trustees, prepared for T. A. Oakes and his sister, Caroline Eliza Oakes, to execute, which was accordingly done by them on the 13th Feb. in that year; this instrument reciting that doubts had been entertained with respect to the life-interest of T. Oakes, the father, in the fund, and the title of T. A. Oakes and Caroline Eliza Oakes in the dividends from the mother's death, and to obviate all doubts as to the illegality of the payment so made to him, so far as it related to the trustees, they, the said T. A. Oakes and Caroline Eliza Oakes had agreed to enter into such release to the said trustees, and were desirous that they should permit the said T. Oakes to receive the dividends of their two equal fourth parts or shares of the said sum of 11,886*l.* 1s. 7d. Bank Annuities. It was witnessed,—for the considerations before mentioned, they, the said T. A. Oakes and Caroline E. Oakes, released the trustees from all claims and demands in respect of the dividends which had theretofore become due and payable, and been received by the said T. Oakes, in respect of their respective fourth parts or shares of the said Bank Annuities, which were then, or which might thereafter, during the life of the said T. Oakes, become due and payable and be received by the said T. Oakes, in respect of the said respective fourth parts or shares in the said Bank Annuities. And it was provided that nothing therein contained should extend to release the estate and effects of the said T. Oakes, after his decease, from the repayment of the dividends which should be received by him since the death of their mother, but that the same should be considered to have been received by him for the use of the said T. A. Oakes and Caroline Oakes, and should be taken to be a debt due and owing to them from the estate of the said Thomas Oakes, as aforesaid.

The above-mentioned Bank 4 per Cent. Annuities were, about the 6th of April, 1824, converted into Bank 3½ per Cent. Reduced Annuities.

Richard Twining died in 1824, and, in pursuance of the above agreement, Warrington, who survived him, transferred into the name of R. M. Oakes the sum of 2,971*l.* 10s. 4d. Bank 3½ Reduced Annuities, which reduced the 8,914*l.* 11s. 3d. to the sum of 5,943*l.* 0s. 11d.

Upon the marriage of T. A. Oakes with Clara Sophia Muntz, the plaintiff Smith, and Richard Strachey, one of the defendants, being the trustees, the sum of 2,971*l.* 10s. 4d. Bank Annuities was settled as a debt due from the estate of T. Oakes. There were issue of this marriage five children, defendants hereto.

Thomas Oakes married a second time in the year 1800 with Maria Lucy, now his widow; he had issue by this marriage five children, defendants hereto.

T. Oakes made his will, dated June 1, 1834, and having provided for his widow and children, he executed a codicil in Dec. 1834, and directed that if T. A. Oakes or Caroline E. Oakes should make any adverse claim against his estate, that then the benefit given them by his will should cease.

T. Oakes died in December 1834.

About the 30th June, 1838, Warrington transferred T. A. Oakes' share in the annuities into the names of Smith and Strachey, the trustees of his marriage settlement, and Caroline E. Oakes' share into her name. Caroline E. Oakes elected to take the benefit provided for her by the will and codicil, and to release the estate of her father.

Before the month of February 1827, T. Oakes, the father, caused his solicitor to prepare a deed purporting to be a general release by T. A. Oakes to the executors of T. Parry, deceased, and to trustees of the settlement of 10th June, 1786, also to the said T. Oakes. This instrument was delivered to T. A. Oakes in February 1827. This he refused to execute, alleging that it was never contemplated that the money should revert to T. Oakes, but that both principal and interest should be allotted to the benefit of the children of the first marriage, and that whatever occurred in respect of his share under the settlement originated in misunderstanding, and that when he signed the former release to the trustees, he was wholly ignorant what arrangement had been made between the said T. Oakes and them upon the subject.

The original bill was filed by Smith and Strachey, as trustees of the marriage settlement of T. A. Oakes, against the widow and executors of his father's will, and the representatives of his father's marriage settlement, praying an account of principal and interest from the death of Elizabeth A. Oakes until the decease of T. Oakes, and that if the executors should not admit assets, that then the will and codicil of T. Oakes might be established, and the trusts thereof be carried into execution.

Bethel and Bush, for the plaintiff, claimed a debt in equity against the father's estate, and the whole affair shewed that the father must have been cognizant of the rights of the various parties, and of his own interests under the marriage settlement; that he endeavoured to obtain a discharge from his children of their claim against him; that by his own acts he constituted himself a trustee for his children, so that whenever he received the money he renewed his agreement, and that, therefore, the plaintiff was a creditor. It was, moreover, con[illegible]ed, that if the father were only a constructive trustee, the Statute of Limitations would not run; because it was not claimed upon the pleadings.

Cases cited by plaintiffs: Harrison v. Borwell (10 Sim. 362); Stocken v. Stocken (4 Sim.); Kekwich v. Langston (11 Sim. 291); Thompson v. Guffin (1 Cr. & Ph. 317).

Pownall for the co-trustees of T. A. Oakes' settlement, and the executors under his will.

Stuart and Chandless, for the other defendants, contended that it was clearly the intention of the settlement that the husband should take a life interest. Coupling the recital with the operative part, the intention was not carried out, if the father's life estate is to be cut down. The words "during the joint natural life," as joint tenants, is not like leaving to one during the joint lives of two persons. There is a difference between the acknowledgment of a claim and a right. That as to the plaintiff's saying defendants do not in their answer claim the Statute of Limitations, the cases of Hovenden v. Lord Annesley (2 Sch. & Lef. 638) and Hoare v. Peck (6 Sim. 51) go to shew that if the bill states a case where the statute would be a bar, you may demur. [The Vice-Chancellor.—There is a great difference between taking the objection by demurrer and at bar; if the bill be informal, the plaintiff may amend.] If we had taken all the evidence as true that has been stated on the bill, it would have been open to a demurrer. T. A. Oakes's acts would neither strengthen nor overturn the trustees' title. And there is less excuse for a trustee than for T. A. Oakes. But what was he trustee of? A claim of twenty-nine years old, and which he was not to enforce till the father's death. The words "joint and natural," we contend, give the husband a life interest under the settlement. The question of construction is important. When T. Oakes transferred the money to the trustees, all he could give up was an equitable estate. Sir John Leach made an observation upon the rights of children of this kind, viz.—"If you want to know and ascertain what are the respective interests of parent and child, you must not merely look to what is given to the parent, but what is given to the children, and when." Every thing in our case which is not given away results to the father. Now, what is given to him is given in express terms. The husband and wife have both a life interest, i. e. under the terms of the settlement it means the joint and natural life of each; therefore, if both could not take, neither of them could take, because if you give to two, each must take, and, of course, the survivor must take. Now, if a limitation be made to two simply during their joint lives, it must be only during their joint lives; but the words of the first and last part of the settlement give a life interest in the survivor. As to the lapse of time, the evidence shews that the father, so far from acquiescing in the claims of his children, resisted them, and unless there be a valid acknowledgment on the part of the father or his agent, there is nothing to do away with the lapse of time. Now, the son came of age in 1811; and if he had a right to the dividends then, as from the death of his mother, he might have filed a bill in 1814 against the trustees; but in 1839 the remedy is sought, after a lapse of twenty-five years, for an account of an arrear of interest from 1797 by those claiming through him. The supposed interests of the children were never acknowledged by the father as a right, but merely as a claim. Now, making a claim, and nothing more, will not prevent the operation of the statute, although an agreement would. The difficulty lies in confounding a claim with a right.

Cases cited for the defendant: Pettiwell v. Prescot (7 Ves. 543); Dormer v. Fortescue (3 Atk. 129); Pearce v. Newlyn (3 Madd. 186); Beckford v. Wade (17 Ves. 97); Byrne v. Frere (2 Molloy, 176, Irish Rep.).

Shadwell, for the other parties.

Bethel, in reply.

The Vice-Chancellor.—I have examined the settlement of 1786 very minutely, and what occurred to me at the first blush was, that the instrument was obviously composed by a person having some knowledge of legal phrases, but who was incompetent to give them their proper application. If the words of the settlement are to be taken as they stand, according to their strict and literal meaning, I am not in a position to hear this question; for, after a very short limitation in favour of the children, and the direction that the shares shall be paid at 21 years or marriage, goes on with this proviso—"And if all the children of such marriage except one shall happen to die, then in such case such child shall, on his or her attaining the said age of 21 years or being married, receive the whole of the produce of the said sum of 25,000 star pagodas." This clause is inserted as an unqualified provision, and anticipates an event which must happen at one time, unless we can conceive of their dying together. Now, it is quite impossible to give effect to this provision, if it is to be construed literally, because we must watch the event, to see which is the surviving child. According to the plain and literal phraseology, therefore, it is so much nonsense compared with the true intention of the parties to the deed. The principal words for interpretation are those which relate to the power given to the English trustees to invest the produce of the property to be sent to them from India "in the Government funds, &c. with the consent and approbation of T. Oakes." Then, in default of his giving such instructions, that the English trustees should invest the produce of the said remittance in such a manner as the whole number of the trustees, or the majority of them, should direct and appoint, so that no time is limited to the English trustees. Then follows this passage:—"That the interest, rent, or other yearly produce arising therefrom, or to grow due thereon, is to be paid for the use and behoof of the said T. Oakes and Elizabeth Ann Cosby during their joint and natural lives." Now, although it is stated in the preamble that the 25,000 pagodas were intended to make a settlement for the wife, yet there was nothing to exclude the husband from enjoying whatever is not given to the wife and children. Such a provision is constantly occurring in marriage settlements. Now, what words exclude the maker of the settlement himself? There is no portion assigned to any one of the children for maintenance or education; the father would take the dividends from the wife's decease freed from this duty, so far as the property was concerned. Again, do the words "joint and natural lives" of necessity imply only during joint lives? Let every word speak for itself. If it was intended by the settlor that he should only have the interest in a joint life estate, he would have said so; but he says joint and natural lives; he uses the word "joint," and then the additional one "natural." It cannot be supposed, therefore, that the superadded words were intended to mean any thing short of joint and during the natural lives of each. This gives an easy, fair, and reasonable construction. The only thing the parties ought to have done long ago was to have taken the opinion of the Court, but they go on in a very strange manner, so as to render it incapable of being settled by reason of the son's letter. I think the father was all along in the right, when he asserted that he was entitled to the dividends; and as to the deed poll, I do not think it affects the matter, for it is my opinion that the father knew nothing about it at the time it was executed, although he was made acquainted with it afterwards. The children's covenant could not bind the father. It is a family suit, and the only point to be decided is upon the simple construction.

The bill dismissed without costs.

ROLLS COURT.

Wednesday, July 3.

Nixon v. Pugh.

A guardian ad litem to infants appointed without taking out a commission, upon the usual affidavits.

Stephenson applied for an order to appoint a guardian ad litem in this cause, to infants residing within the jurisdiction, without a commission. He referred to Drant v. Vause (2 You. & C. N. C. C. 524), in which case Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce made a similar order, but directed the sanction of the Lord Chancellor to be obtained, which was accordingly done.

The Master of the Rolls.—If the Lord Chancellor thinks fit to alter the practice, it is of course competent to him to do so. I shall make the order, but I shall first speak to his lordship on the subject.

Hopkinson v. Powis.

Motion by a receiver under the Court to commit a party for contempt, on the ground of an encroachment on the lands, and a refusal to deliver up the part encroached on, refused, the party absolutely denying the allegation of encroachment.

Rogers moved for an order to commit Joseph Canham for a contempt of Court, on the ground of having taken possession of a piece of land at the end of Sand-street, Woolwich, alleged to be part of the estate of Mr. Bowater, deceased. Joseph Harrington, the receiver in the cause under this Court, was in possession since 1830, and at his instance the present motion was made. So long ago as 1809, the commissioners for improving the town of Woolwich had purchased a piece of land of Mr. Bowater, and in 1842 sold a portion thereof in lots, of which, lot 18 was purchased by and conveyed to Mr. Canham. He took possession of this and, as it was alleged, of a small piece belonging to the Bowater estate, and upon being applied to, refused to give it up; hence the present motion. Mr. Canham absolutely denied that he had taken possession of any land but lot 18, sold to him by the commissioners, or that he had encroached, as alleged; and the map of the ground, &c. rather favoured that view of the case. The commissioners were not included in the motion.

Shadwell urged that Mr. Canham, having no interest in the matters in question in the suit, and denying the fact of encroachment, ought to be dismissed with costs.

The Master of the Rolls.—The commissioners, having bought the property in 1809, sold, in 1842, to Canham all he holds, as he says, but only a part, as is said by the other side. But, on looking to the map, there can be no reasonable doubt that all Canham holds he obtained under the conveyance, whether there be an encroachment or not; he is not, therefore, guilty of any contempt of this Court. The receiver is no doubt to be protected, and his possession is not to be disturbed; but, the sale taking place in 1842, is it reasonable to come here now, and that, too, against Mr. Canham and not against the commissioners? I think not. Let the motion be dismissed with costs; but the parties interested may have an inquiry as to the encroachments, and as to the means to be employed in restoring possession.

Reed v. O'Brien.

Motion to take a bill pro confesso, for want of an answer.

A plaintiff cannot be compelled to receive as an answer a sealed packet sent by post to the Record and Writ Office from a foreign country, and purporting to be the answer of the defendant taken there by commission, but time will be allowed the defendant to put in a fresh answer, though the time for doing so has expired.

This was a suit instituted against Mr. Patrick O'Brien, now Count de Lacey, to recover several sums, and, inter alia, 60,000 roubles, alleged to be left by the late General Count de Lacey, deceased, for the benefit of his relatives. The matter now came before the Court on two applications; one by the plaintiff to take the bill pro confesso, the time for answering having expired, and the other, that a sealed paper, supposed to contain the answer of Mr. O'Brien, and alleged to have been sent by post to the Record and Writ Office from Grodno, in Russia, where he now is, should be opened, and if found not to contain the answer of Mr. O'B., that a new commission should issue. A commission had been obtained by consent of both parties, and the answer was directed to be sent by an agent, and it was alleged that the plaintiff had desired, if one could not be got, that it should be sent by post. The packet arrived at the office the same day on which Mr. Le Blanc, defendant's solicitor, received a letter from Grodno, to say the answer was taken and had been sent by post. The plaintiff refused to receive it or consider it an answer, and insisted on his motion.

Teed and Bacon, for the defendant.

Turner and James Parker, for the plaintiff.

The Master of the Rolls said he would order the packet to be opened, but could not oblige the plaintiff to accept the answer of Mr O'Brien which was found contained therein. He ordered it to be given to defendant's solicitor. As to the motion to take the bill pro confesso, it would not be just to grant it; two months' time must be allowed to answer. The costs to be reserved, it not appearing as yet which party was in fault.

Saturday, July 6.

Ellwand v. M'Donnell.

A defendant, who was a member of a company at the filing of the bill against him, but ceased to be so before putting in his answer, cannot be compelled to produce the company's documents, nor the documents respecting a former suit which he in one answer admits to be in his solicitor's custody, but in a subsequent one alleges to be lost.

This was a motion excepting to the Master's report that the defendant's answer was insufficient. The defendant was the agent in England of the Patriotic Assurance Company of Ireland, established in 1826. Mr. Ellwand, the plaintiff's father, insured with the company goods on board the Anne from Liverpool to Buenos Ayres, and defendant signed the policy for 500*l*. The Anne was captured by the Brazilian government, and the goods seized and condemned. Mr. Ellwand brought an action for a total loss, which was compromised by an offer from the company of sixty per cent. and costs, with benefit of salvage and compensation. The Brazilian government made compensation, and paid the several sums due thereon to the English chargé d'affaires, who transferred a portion thereof to the company's agent. Mr. Ellwand died, leaving the plaintiff his executor, who filed a bill against the defendant, and had compensation allowed for the goods. The defendant was a member of the company at the time, and the act establishing the company authorized the secretary or any member to be sued. Before putting in his answer, however, defendant ceased to be a member. The bill sought a discovery of the documents, &c. of the company, and also of certain documents respecting a previous suit of Brooks v. M'Donnell. The defendant said he could not get at the papers of the company, not being a member; and, though he at first admitted the other documents were in the custody of his solicitor, yet he afterwards said he could not produce them, for, after a diligent search, they could nowhere be found. This answer the Master reported insufficient, and exceptions were taken to the report.

Kindersley, Turner, and Hetherington, for the defendant, against the report.

Heathfield, for the plaintiff, for the report.

The Master of the Rolls.—The defendant may have acted improperly in withdrawing from the company, but that will appear at the hearing. I cannot, however, compel a man to produce the company's documents, over which he has no power, nor yet the other papers, which are lost. I must therefore allow the exceptions.

Nixon v. Pugh.

Practice—Appointment of guardian ad litem, without a commission.

Stephenson applied again this morning, in this case, and, there being infants both out of and within the jurisdiction, consented to take an order to appoint a guardian ad litem, in the former case, and in the latter in the usual way.

The Master of the Rolls thought this the better way of proceeding, as being in accordance with the old practice; though, with the sanction of the Lord Chancellor, he would have no objection to make an order such as that in Drant v. Vause (2 You. & C. N.C. C. 524).

Archer v. Hudson.

Principal and surety—Alteration of security—Discharge of surety.

A promissory note given to a bank without consideration by a surety (who has just attained twenty-one), as a security for a floating balance of account, in favour of one who has stood in loco parentis to the surety, is void in equity.

And if, instead of retaining the note as a security, the bank give credit in a loan account to the principal, to the amount of the note, the surety is discharged.

Mrs. Archer, one of the plaintiffs, was put under the care of her uncle, Mr. Daniell, by the trustees of her father's will, who paid him a yearly sum for her maintenance, &c. During her minority, she was entirely under the influence and control of her uncle and aunt. In November, 1837, Mrs. A. attained twenty-one; and on the 1st of January, 1838, she joined her uncle in a promissory note to Mr. Hauxwell, the manager of the Thirsk Bank, a branch of the York Joint-stock Bank, for the sum of 500*l*. The note was without consideration, and signed at Mr. Daniell's, in the presence of him and Hauxwell only. The latter, who was intimate at Daniell's, and was well acquainted with Mrs. A.'s (then Miss Kendray) position, explained, that the note was intended as a security for a floating balance of account in favour of her uncle; but the note itself did not evidence the contract. An account, already opened, was accordingly continued with Daniell, and conducted in the usual way. On the 13th of November, 1841, Mrs. Archer was married to her present husband, the other plaintiff, and there being then some misapprehension (as appeared by a correspondence between Hauxwell and Wilkinson, the manager at York), as to the effect of the marriage on Mrs. Archer's liability, it was agreed by them to convert the security into a loan, and make an entry in the books to that effect, dated on a day prior to that of the marriage, which was accordingly done. The sum of 500*l*. was entered in a loan account to the credit of Daniell and Mrs. Archer, and the drawing account continued. At this time, the latter account was overdrawn, only to a small amount; but immediately after the change it rose to a very large sum. In May, 1843, Daniell became insolvent, and the bank then brought an action against Mr. and Mrs. Archer in the name of Hudson, then officer, to recover the 500*l*. on the promissory note, alleging it was a guarantee for the floating balance, and that the account was then overdrawn to the amount of 500*l*. The plaintiffs then filed their bill to set aside the note; and the grounds insisted upon were, that the transaction was void ab initio, as Daniell was in loco parentis to Mrs. Archer; that even if it were not void, the subsequent dealings with it by the bank were such as to discharge the surety; and failing that, that the original debt was discharged by subsequent payments into the bank.

Kindersley and Roll, for the plaintiffs.

Turner and Elmsley, for the bank, cited Pease v. Hurst (10 B. & Cr. 126); Bonser v. Cox (4 Beav. 279).

Glasse, for Daniell, the bankrupt.

The Master of the Rolls had no doubt whatever that Daniel stood in loco parentis to Mrs. A.; and that being so, the presumption of this Court is that she was under his influence and did not act from her own free and unfettered judgment. The circumstances of the case did not take it out of the rule [his lordship stated the facts at length]. The security, therefore, cannot stand on the first ground, and, if it were necessary to decide that point, neither could it on the second. It must, therefore, be given up to be cancelled. The defendants must pay the costs of the suit. Daniell, who was in fault, not to have any costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Saturday, July 20.

Flinn v. Jenkins.

Will—Construction.

A testat[illegible] the whole of his property, not named in his [illegible] his wife, after her paying certain legacies, for the benefit of his two sons and their children. He then states that one of his sons owed him 2,000l., the interest of which he was to pay to the testator's wife for her life, and the testator directed the residue of his remaining property (excepting certain articles of furniture, &c. which were to be at his wife's own disposal) to be equally divided between his sons for their lives, and then to be equally divided between their children when of age.—Held, that the wife took a life interest in the residue, and that the children of the testator's sons took per stirpes and not per capita.

Robert Flinn, the testator in this cause, made his will in the following terms:—"I, Robert Flinn, do will the whole property belonging to me not named in this my last will to my wife, Sarah Flinn, after her paying the following legacies; that is to say, the house No. 3, Stacey-street, I give to my son Robert Henry Flinn; the house No. 2, Stacey-street, I give to my son Henry Flinn, for their lives, and then to be equally divided among their children. My son Henry Flinn is indebted to me money lent, 2,000*l*., the interest of which he is to pay to my wife, Sarah Flinn, as long as she lives; the residue of my remaining property in the following manner (except the household furniture, plate, wearing apparel, trinkets, &c. to be at her own disposal), and the remaining property to be equally divided between my two sons for their lives, and then to be equally divided among their children when of age. I appoint my son R. H. Flinn, and my son H. Flinn, executors, my wife Sarah Flinn, executrix.—Dated this 22nd day of May, 1830." The questions which arose upon this will were, 1st, whether the wife took an absolute or a life interest in the residue; and, 2ndly, whether the children of the sons were to take per stirpes or per capita. No child of either son died in the father's lifetime.

Spurrier, for the plaintiffs, who were children of Henry Flinn.

Metcalfe, for an infant defendant, a child of Henry Flinn.

Russell, for the executors of the widow, submitted that she took an interest for life in the residue.

Malins, for the children of R. H. Flinn.

The Vice-Chancellor.—It appears to me that the construction in favour of the widow taking an interest for life is aided by the mention of the sum of 2,000*l*. It seems to have struck the testator to be prudent to mention that one of his sons owed him money, and, therefore, he introduces this by way of note. This certainly aids what, however, appears to me to be the fair inference from the whole will, that the widow was to take a life interest. As to the children, it appears a plain gift to them per stirpes, and I rather think, as to the residue, that the shares are not vested until majority, but it is unnecessary to decide that now.

Reade v. Frelre.

Mortgagor and mortgagee—Title-deeds—Costs.

A sum of money, which formed a portion of the subject of a suit, was advanced upon mortgage security. The mortgagor had no notice of the existence of the suit, and by a subsequent order made in the suit, the title deeds of the mortgaged property were, with other documents, deposited in the Master's office. The money was afterwards paid off, but the mortgagees refused to apply for the necessary order to take the deeds out of Court, and the mortgagor accordingly applied by petition for that purpose. Held, that the costs of the petition were to be borne by the mortgagees.

An advance was made by three persons of the sum of 200*l*. upon a mortgage security; the money formed part of a testator's estate, then the subject of a suit, and the mortgagees were the three executors. The mortgagor had no notice of the suit, nor was he at the time of the mortgage aware that the money was advanced by the mortgagees as executors. By an order subsequently made in the cause, all the papers, including the title-deeds of the mortgaged property, connected with the testator's estate, were deposited in the Master's office. The mortgagor afterwards gave notice of his intention to pay off the mortgage-money, which was accordingly done, but the mortgagees refused to obtain an order for the delivery of the deeds out of the Master's office to the mortgagor. The mortgagor then presented a petition for the purpose of obtaining his deeds, and also sought that the costs should be paid by the mortgagees.

Prior, for the mortgagor.

Harwood, for the three mortgagees, contended that the costs of this petition should properly be borne by the mortgagor, citing Wetherall v. Collins (3 Madd. 255), and Burden v. Oldaker (reported ante, vol. 3, p. 517).

Lovat, for parties beneficially interested in the testator's estate, submitted that the costs, if not borne by the mortgagor, should be paid by the three executors personally.

The Vice-Chancellor.—This case is distinguishable from Wetherall v. Collins and Burden v. Oldaker. This is the case of a mortgage made to three persons not mentioned as executors, or in any way particularly described. The mortgage was made without notice of the decree, or of the existence of any suit. I do not refer to that constructive notice all that would be inferred from a lis pendens; but there was no real or substantial notice of the suit. After the mortgage, it is thought right by the mortgagees, or by other persons who were unknown to the mortgagor, that the deeds should be placed in a particular place of deposit, from which an order of the Court is necessary to remove them. The mortgagor then gives notice of his intention to pay, and pays the money, but finds that he cannot have his deeds, as it appears they have been deposited in court. He then asks the mortgagees to take the necessary steps to obtain the deeds. They refuse; and the mortgagor then comes here himself, and it is said that he must bear the costs. Circumstanced as this case is, consistent altogether with Wetherall v. Collins and Burden v. Oldaker, I consider that the mortgagor should have his costs without prejudice, as between the parties to the suit, how these costs should be ultimately borne.

ADMIRALTY COURT.

Monday, June 3.

The Graces.

Salvage—A conversation between the master of a steam vessel about to afford assistance, and the master of a brig about to receive it, may constitute a binding agreement between the two, though the one does not in express terms consent to the proposal made by the other, if the agreement is understood and acted upon by both. Here that understanding was not sufficiently proved.

Where a steam-vessel receives a special summons, either by signal or otherwise, to come out from the place in which she is lying to render assistance, the distance from that place will be included in the amount of her remuneration.

An action by the owners of the steam-vessel Pilot against the brig Graces for compensation for salvage-services rendered to the brig.

It appeared the Graces, on the 5th of December last, met with a sudden squall, by which she lost her foretop-mast and part of her fore-mast. A change of wind compelled her to alter her course, which was towards Shields, and to bear up and stand to the south. She reached Huntcliffe Foot, twelve miles to the south of the river Tees, and then came to an anchor, when she hoisted a union-jack at the maintop-gallant mast-head, as a signal for a steamer. This signal being seen by a person named Potts, he went to Middlesborough, where he gave information of the circumstance to the master of the steamer Pilot. The latter at once put to sea, and steered for Huntcliffe Foot. When the steam-vessel reached the Graces, the latter passed a tow-rope to her, and in the course of four hours they, together, had got some distance up the Tees. Next day the steamer towed the brig to Shields. For this service the present claim is made, and the action entered in the sum of 350*l*.

These bare facts are admitted on both sides; but there are certain important circumstances upon which the greatest dispute has arisen. On behalf of the brig it has been set up, as an answer to the claim, that an agreement was entered into between the masters of the respective vessels as to the price to be paid for the assistance of the steam-vessel, and in support of this, the evidence of the master of the Graces is relied upon. He states in his deposition, that when the steamer reached his vessel, the following conversation took place between himself and a person standing on the paddle box of the steamer. The latter asked "where he wished the vessel to be taken to." To which he replied, "To Hartlepool;" and inquired, "what would be the charge?" adding, "that as his vessel was small, he hoped she would be taken cheap." The person belonging to the steamer said, "Say what you can afford to give me." To which he answered, "3*l*." Whereupon the other at once cried out, "Give us your rope." Upon the faith of this conversation, the master of the Graces declares the rope was given, and the assistance of the Pilot accepted. The witness goes on to depose that when they arrived in Tees, he remonstrated with the master of the steam-vessel for not having fulfilled his agreement by taking him to Hartlepool; that he answered, "he could get some coals and tow him the next day;" that on the following day he made a further agreement to have the vessel towed to Shields for 10*l*. and when they reached that place he offered him 13*l*. and asked for a receipt; that the latter refused to receive 3*l*. for the former part of the service, and denied the alleged agreement. This evidence is met by counter-evidence on the part of the steamer. The affidavits of her master and crew deny generally that any a[illegible]ment was made in the first instance, and indeed assert that those on board the steamer were unable to hear any words coming from the other vessel.

Addams and Bayford, for the Pilot.

Dodson, Sir J. Q.A. and H. Nicholl, for the Graces.

Dr. LUSHINGTON gave judgment.—This case is not without the usual accompaniment of conflicting evidence. There are two questions to which the attention of the Court must be especially directed: first, whether there was any valid and binding agreement entered into between the parties; and, secondly, if there were no such agreement, whether the 3*l*. which was tendered is an adequate reward for the service. The vessel, of 197 tons burthen, was bound from London to the port of Seaham. On the 5th of December, off the Yorkshire coast, she met with a sudden squall, whereby she lost part of her foremast. She remedied that accident as far as she could, and, with the wind blowing from the quarter from which it then blew, she attempted to reach, not Seaham, the original port of destination, but Shields, where her owners resided, and where she intended to refit. The wind however changed, and, according to her own statement, as she was unable to reach Shields, it became necessary to take another course. She accordingly wore round, and steered southwards. She reached Huntcliffe Foot, and, as she says, cast anchor in such a position that a signal for a steamer might be seen in the river Tees. Whilst so situated she was seen by a pilot named Potts, who, supposing her to require assistance, went to Middlesborough, a distance of eight miles, for the purpose of giving information to some steamer in the Tees. The signal was hoisted by the brig as early as eight o'clock in the morning, and no steamer arrived at Huntcliffe Foot until three in the afternoon, the distance being eighteen miles. Now, if this vessel had been lying in the position described by herself, viz. such a one that any signal hoisted on board her would be perceived by vessels in the Tees, I am not able to discover any satisfactory reason why some steamer did not descry the signal, and at once proceed to render the service. However, it appears no vessel does proceed to render assistance until the Pilot, a steamer of sixty horse-power, in consequence of the intimation received from Potts, not in consequence of perceiving the signal, leaves the port of Middlesborough and proceeds to Huntcliffe Foot, where the Graces was riding at anchor. What was the state and condition of this vessel? It is admitted that she had lost a part of her foremast, and on the one side it is represented she was in a disabled state; on the other, that she was by no means so, but quite capable of reaching the port of Whitby, for which at the time the wind was favourable. I apprehend that she cannot be properly described as having been in a state of immediate danger, or as having been quite disabled; but, on the other hand, I conceive that, in case of foul weather, not improbable in the depth of winter, she would have been exposed to greater risk than if she had not met with the accident; and, therefore, I think she is not to be considered in the same light as a perfect and complete vessel. The steamer having got alongside the brig, a conversation is alleged to have taken place which is said to constitute an agreement between the parties; and I entirely agree to the position laid down, that if a conversation does take place between two parties, and, in pursuance of that conversation, an act is allowed to be done, which would, in fact, be the commencement of the contract agreed upon, neither party has an opportunity of departing from such contract. For instance, assuming in the present case the one party to say, "I will give you 3*l*. to take me to Hartlepool;" and the other party, hearing the offer, to cry out at once, "Give me your rope," without any thing more, I think, under those circumstances, there would be a binding contract. What I must look to, however, is this, whether it is proved that the parties distinctly understood each other, and acted upon the understanding. But the proof of the contract is on the party setting it up, for he calls upon the Court to depart from its ordinary rules; and for that reason, also, the proof ought to be perfectly clear and satisfactory. It is stated that the master of the brig, with no less than seven of his crew, speaks to a very detailed conversation; and that something to that effect did occur there is every reason to believe; but I confess my conviction of what did occur is not much strengthened by the fact of seven persons swearing to a conversation of this description, and swearing to it in the very same terms. Now, giving the master of the Graces credit for speaking the truth, something more must be done to constitute a valid and binding agreement between the two parties. It must be proved that the master of the steamer heard the conversation. He might have heard a part, and not the whole. In the act on petition, there is a direct contradiction that the conversation did occur, and, though the affidavits do not so directly negative it, I cannot say that, when the master of the steamer swears that no such agreement took place, he merely meant to swear that there was no such agreement according to his notion of the effect of the conversation. So I must look to the probabilities of the case; and nothing can be more improbable than that a master of a steamer of 60-horse power, having come out eighteen miles for the purpose of rendering assistance to a vessel represented to him to be in distress, would have accepted the sum of 3*l*. for that and for conveying a vessel in distress eleven miles. The conduct, too, of the master of the Graces in making another contract with the master of the Pilot, confirms me in thinking that there was no binding agreement in the first instance, for if he had thought that he had been tricked, he would not have entered into a fresh agreement with the same person. I am under the necessity, therefore, of pronouncing, that this was no valid agreement, attributing to neither party perjury, but thinking that the mistake may be accounted for from the state of the sea, and the noise and confusion at the time. The only question that remains is, whether 3*l*. was an adequate remuneration. It is said that I am not to take into consideration that the steamer had come from Middlesborough; but to that position I cannot agree. Where a vessel comes out in consequence of a special summons, she is not like a steamer plying on the Thames, but ought to be paid for the distance she has to go. I must consider, therefore, this service as towage for thirty, not for twelve miles; and I shall award 15*l*. with costs. I must say one word more. I cannot understand upon what principle it is, that in cases of this petty description, actions should be entered at sums so utterly disproportioned to the service. I think such a course most vexatious, and I hope it will not be repeated.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Monday, July 22.

(Before Mr. Commissioner GOULBOURN.)

Re STEVENS.

Amending—Action pending petition.

The insolvent and a friend gave a promissory note to Mr. Buchanan, insolvent's solicitor, payable by instalments of ten shillings per week, in consideration of conducting him through the court. This was done previous to the filing of the petition on the 14th of June. The instalments subsequently failed to be paid, and an action was brought by an indorsee against both parties.

The insolvent now applied, on coming up on the interim order, to be allowed to insert the note in the schedule.

Buchanan opposed the amendment, on the ground that the debt was not a debt due at the filing of the petition.

Mr. Commissioner GOULBOURN was at first inclined to think that he had no power to interfere, especially as the note did not express that the work on account of which it was given was done before the filing of the petition; but ultimately he viewed the debt as incurred before proceedings were taken in court, and declared the insolvent entitled to insert it as desired.

Re WILLIAM PARKER.

Imperfect description—Re-advertising affidavits.

The insolvent was a coal merchant at Yarmouth. He had inserted his private residence in his petition and schedule, but it appeared that he carried on his business on board certain craft on the water.

Sturgeon objected that he ought to have stated where he carried on his business, by inserting the name of the craft.

Mr. Commissioner GOULBOURN said that the insolvent's case was a peculiar one. He thought the best description had been given that the circumstances admitted of.

Sturgeon said that he had an affidavit that certain creditors at Yarmouth were not named in the schedule.

Mr. Commissioner GOULBOURN observed that he had no power to admit affidavits under the new Insolvent Act.

It now transpiring that the place of business was a mile from the residence,

Mr. Commissioner GOULBOURN determined that the petition and schedule should be amended by the insertion of a description, as near as possible, of the former place, and that an advertisement of the amendment should be inserted in a Norwich paper.

Interim order adjourned.

Re CHANDLER.

Payment of costs of petition out of estate—Attendance by power of attorney.

Horry, in opposition to the final order, drew the attention of his Honour to an item in the balance-sheet of a payment of 5*l*. to the insolvent's attorney on account of the proceedings in this court. He mentioned a case before Sir Charles Williams, on the 13th May, where the sum of 14*l*. 11*s*. had been entered in a similar manner, when that learned Commissioner expressed considerable difficulty in allowing such an entry to pass, as he considered that, in point of fact, the payment was now out of the creditors' money, but subsequently allowed it to remain, there being no opposition. There was no provision, as in the Insolvent Act, to allow the costs of the petition out of the estate.

Mr. Commissioner GOULBOURN was disposed to suffer the entry to remain. An insolvent must incur expenses in taking the benefit of the Act, and it was better that the disposition of the money should be thus shewn, than that it should be concealed.

On the question of appointing one of the opposing creditors assignee, it appeared that neither was present, and the Act required the appointment to be made at the time of granting the final order.

Mr. Commissioner GOULBOURN said that if the person who appeared on their behalf (a solicitor's clerk) had a power of attorney to appear, he would consider that sufficient. He had ruled in the country that attendance by a person holding a power of attorney on behalf of a creditor was an attendance within the Act, as in cases of bankruptcy; but he did not know how the point had been decided in London.

Sturgeon said that he had on one occasion, before Mr. Commissioner Holroyd, expressly made an objection to attendance by power of attorney, requiring the personal presence of the creditor, and that his objection had been allowed.

Horry then applied to postpone the final order, to give the creditor an opportunity of appearing.

Sturgeon objected, but

Mr. Commissioner GOULBOURN said that he should adjourn the final order, as the insolvent's conduct in the box had not been such as to entitle him to any favour from the Court, unless he would consent to the attendance of the creditor to-morrow, and that the Court might then enter his name on the proceedings nunc pro tunc, so that it might appear that he had been appointed assignee on the granting of the final order.

Sturgeon then consented, and the final order was granted on this condition.

SUBDIVISION COURT.

(Before Commissioners FONBLANQUE, GOULBOURN, and HOLROYD.)

Thursday, July 18.

Re DAVIS and VIGERS.

Auctioneer's bills—Public and private sale.

Mr. Vigers, of the firm of Davis and Vigers, auctioneers, had been employed to dispose of a bankrupt's estate by auction. On the day of sale the estate was bought in by the assignees at the sum of 1,100*l*. A few days after, Mr. Vigers effected a private sale of the property, with the concurrence of the assignees, for 1,300*l*. For these services he claimed the sum of 30*l*. including the auction and the private sale, but Mr. Richardson, the taxing officer of the Court of Bankruptcy, refused to allow more than 23*l*. although the trade assignee approved of the higher charge as fair and reasonable. Against his taxation Mr. Vigers appealed.

The sums allowed by Mr. Richardson were thus made up, viz. 10*l*. 18*s*. for expenses, 2*l*. 2*s*. for trouble on account of the auction, and 10*l*. per centage on the amount realized by the private sale, the whole making 23*l*.

Mr. Vigers now applied to be allowed his charges as upon a sale by auction. He stated that Mr. Richardson had a scale which usually governed the charges of auctioneers; but in the present instance he had taken the estate as sold by private treaty only, without any further reference to the auction than an allowance which was quite inadequate to the occasion. He (Mr. V.) had had all the trouble of a public sale, while the 2*l*. 2*s*. and 10*l*. 18*s*. had been expended for bills, men, and other necessary expenses. If the estate had been disposed of on account of other parties than bankrupts, he would have obtained the higher charge; indeed, he should have obtained more. Besides, in this particular case, the private negotiations was consequent upon the auction, as the purchasers were among the bidders. The estate had, therefore, actually benefited by it.

The COURT deliberated for a considerable time upon the point, whether the estate should be taken as sold by public or private sale, and whether charges on both might be allowed under the circumstances. At length,

Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE.—The estate does not suffer because the property was sold after the auction. It appears to me, that if a sale by private contract be consequent on a sale by auction, it should be taken as if it had been sold by auction. The auctioneer might go further, and charge for subsequent trouble; but doing away with that, he ought to be put in the same situation as if he had sold the property in his pulpit. It is clear, in this very case, the estate must have been benefited, because more has been realized than the assignees thought it was worth. I do not see how the auctioneer ought to suffer for that. The general principle is, where an act is supplemental to another act, it shall be taken to be part of the same act, with all the consequences. We are of opinion that the sum charged in this case is not too much, and ought to be paid; but we do not feel prepared to decide the general principle on which these charges should be made in future, until we have had an opportunity of consulting with our brother Commissioners of the other subdivision.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Serjt. Stephen.)

Friday, July 19.

Re J. F. Davis. (See 3 Law T. 264.)

Practice on appeal against adjudication—Evidence.

In this case, the Commissioner adjudicated on the 28th ult. and on the 2nd inst. the time for shewing cause against the adjudication under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 23, was extended until the 8th inst. On that day,

Smith appeared for the bankrupt, opened his case, and tendered a number of affidavits in support thereof.

Palmer objected to the reception of affidavits. The personal attendance of witnesses was always required to depose to the acts of bankruptcy, and à fortiori, the witnesses who disprove should attend.

His Honour.—I shall not receive the affidavit of any witness, unless some special cause be shewn for his non-attendance.

Smith then called witnesses, who were examined and cross-examined, every question and answer being taken down.

Smith then tendered the bankrupt as a witness.

His Honour doubted whether the testimony of the bankrupt himself could be taken (Sayer v. Garnett, 7 Bing. 103; 4 M. & P. 734); the bankrupt is not an admissible witness to impeach his own commission.

Palmer and Homes, for the creditors, would not object or consent to the admissibility of the bankrupt's evidence.

The case was then adjourned to the 9th inst. when Smith again tendered the bankrupt as a witness, and addressed the Court at length on his admissibility, citing Ex parte Bellwood (2 Dea. & Ch. 37); Ex parte Whalley (2 Mont. & Ayr. 722).

His Honour.—I have not rejected the evidence of the bankrupt; but I remark, that even making you a present of all the evidence which you state that the bankrupt can give, I do not think that the act of bankruptcy of absconding himself will be answered. There are five acts of bankruptcy deposed to: if any one is good, the fiat must be prosecuted; therefore, let us consider each charge seriatim, and dispose of one first, before entering on another.

It was then arranged that the bankrupt's case as to each act of bankruptcy should be considered separately, and that the bankrupt's evidence should for the present be taken de bene esse. The examination of witnesses was then continued, and the further hearing was adjourned to the 15th instant. On that day, the examination of witnesses was continued, and the hearing further adjourned to this day.

His Honour now said, I have made up my mind to admit the evidence of the bankrupt. There is nothing in the new Act as to any particular line of evidence to be adopted by the bankrupt in his opposing an adjudication; it is not said that the same practice as in courts of law before a jury should be followed, not even the same practice as in courts of law; it appears to be left entirely to the discretion of the Court.

Smith then concluded the evidence for the appeal and submitted that counsel for the fiat should address the Court, after which he (Smith) would be entitled to the reply.

Palmer stated that he should not call any witnesses.

His Honour.—Then the rule is, that the bankrupt should not have the reply if the other party call no witnesses; but as I did not understand that Mr. Smith had fully opened his case, I think he should be allowed now to address the Court.

Palmer (consenting that Smith should have the reply) then addressed the Court at length on the evidence.

Smith replied, and

His Honour gave judgment, confirming the adjudication. Adjudication confirmed.

Smith and Stone, for the bankrupt.

Palmer and Homes, for the creditors.

PREROGATIVE COURT.

White v. Repton.

A soldier, stationed with his regiment in barracks at New Brunswick, but not engaged in any expedition or special duty, is not within the intent and meaning of the 11th section of 1 Vict. c. 26, which exempts the operation of that Act from "soldiers in actual military service."

No distinction is to be drawn between service at home and in the British colonies.

This was a suit respecting the validity of the will of the Hon. J. H. Pery, who died at St. John's, New Brunswick, on the 6th August, 1842.

The deceased, at the time of his death, held a commission in her Majesty's army. He was captain of the 30th regiment of foot-guards, and was stationed in barracks at St. John's, New Brunswick. He made a will, which was attested by one witness only, and which, consequently, under the provisions of the New Will Act, would be invalid; but the question was raised, whether the deceased was not a soldier in "actual military service," and therefore within the exemption of the 11th section. The will was propounded in an allegation which was now offered for admission.

Haggard opposed the admissibility of the allegation. The deceased did not come within the exemption of the 11th section. He was not in "actual military service." He was merely quartered in barracks; he was out upon no expedition; he was engaged in no particular service; he was not in a hostile country, nor in any danger. This case was not distinguishable from Drummond v. Parish (3 Cur. 522). There the Court concluded its very learned judgment in these words: "Being of opinion from the result of the investigation of the authorities, that the principle of exemption contained in the 11th section of the Act was adopted from the Roman law, I think it was adopted with the limitations to which I have adverted, and that by the insertion of the words 'actual military service,' the privilege, as respects the British soldier, is confined to those who are on an expedition." Phipps's case (2 Cur. 368) was decided upon peculiar grounds. Though probate was there allowed to pass, it was solely because it was prayed for by the party prejudiced. Shearman v. Pyke (Hil. Term 1724), as it was reported in a MS. note of Dr. Andrews, confirmed the principle laid down in Drummond v. Parish. The case was this: James Wakeford was enlisted as a soldier in the service of the East-India Company, and went with Governor Pyke to St. Helena; he was employed in his service as cook, and he gave him wages besides his pay. In 1719, the governor left St. Helena to proceed to Bencoolen, but at Batavia they were informed that the factory at Bencoolen was cut off by the natives. They sailed from Batavia to Moco Moro and thence to Madras, and from thence he proceeded to Bencoolen to re-establish the factory. About October 1720, they returned to Moco Moro. In January 1721, James Wakeford, being ill of an ague and fever, and flux, whereof he died in the hospital at Moco Moro, being asked by J. Potter and M. Sams to make his will, replied, "I give all I have to my master, and I will give nothing from him, and I'll make no other will; he may dispose of it as he pleases." On the 22nd of January, two days after his death, the witnesses signed a schedule of the contents of the will, and made oath thereof at Moco Moro: Potter died on the passage. This will is propounded by Governor Pyke, as a nuncupative will, and opposed by Shearman, one of the next of kin. The Court, in pronouncing sentence, said, "It is agreed the will cannot be good, unless within the privilege. A mariner on shore is not within the statute. Those who are enlisted in the service of the Company have the same privilege as those in the service of the Crown; and though he acted as cook, it does not take away the privilege of soldier. He was not only a soldier, but was upon an expedition." And the will was accordingly pronounced for. On the authority of this and of the other cases mentioned, the allegation must be rejected.

R. Phillimore, on the same side. The exemption allowed by the 11th section was clearly borrowed from the Roman law, and the writers upon that law confined the privilege to soldiers upon an expedition. The ordinary service or discipline during peace was never held sufficient. (1 Godolphin, Orphan Legacy, c. 5, p. 16.) "Let it not here escape our observation, that these privileges belong only to such soldiers as are in expedition or actual service of war, and not to such as lie safely and securely in some castle, garrison, or other like place of defence." (Swinburne on Testaments, Part I. sec. xiv. p. 63.) "Concerning the first sort" (viz. milites armati—the other two sorts being milites literarii, and milites cœlestes), "either they be such as lie safely in some castle or place of defence, or besieged by the enemy, only in readiness to be employed in case of invasion or rebellion; and then they do not enjoy these military privileges; or else they be such as are in expedition or actual service of wars, and such are privileged, at least during the time of their expedition, whether they be employed by land or by sea, or whether they be horsemen or footmen." (Heineccius, De Milit. Test. lib. ii. tit. ii. s. 56.) "Deinde ex eadem privilegii causa patet quando eo privilegio uti possint homines. Glossa distinguit, sint ne milites in acie constituti, an in castris, an in præsidiis? Primo casu nullis testibus opus esse, ait, secundo, duobus, tertio omnes solemnitates observandas. Milites enim, sive in expeditione sint, sive in castris, possunt hoc privilegio uti. In præsidiis autem et hybernis merito jure ordinario testantur, quia tunc extra periculum sunt." (Gaill. Prac. Obs. lib. ii. obs. 118, p. 563.) "Itaque, ut ad propositum revertar, ad otiosos milites hoc privilegium non pertinet, sed ad eos qui sunt in castris, et in præsenti periculo hostium; utrobique adversus præscriptionem succurritur militibus in expeditione degentibus, non otiosis et domi existentibus. Atque ita in terminis, quod limitaneos et stationarios milites, concludit Zasius, jure communi testari debere, cum sint extra periculum belli et peritiores consulere, pluresque testes adhibere possint." That danger was a necessary element in giving a title to the privilege, was shewn by the analogy drawn between the military service and the plague. When the plague prevailed, the same privilege was conferred. (Gaill. Obs. 118, p. 536.) "Præterea et illud hic memoria obiter tenendum quod ad imitationem militiæ humanæ, testamentum tempore pestis coram duobus vel tribus testibus conditum, valeat: nam tempus belli et pestis æquiparantur, cum tunc censeatur esse bellum inter Deum et homines." The following passages and authorities were also relied upon against the validity of the will propounded in the present allegation. "Quidam stationarius et limitaneus miles testamentum condidit, præsentibus tantum duobus testibus; hæredes ab intestato ob defectum solemnitatis impugnabant illud, quod videlicet legitimus testium numerus non esset adhibitus et ideo testamentum non valeret. Quæsitum fuit de duobus: primo, an milites nostri temporis gaudeant privilegio testandi jure militari. Secundo, an testamentum jure militari (sicut allegabatur) conditum, subsisteret? Quod ad primam quæstionem attinet, conclusum, militaria privilegia adhuc hodie sarta tectaque consistere; licet enim ordo et solemnitas assumendi milites in desuetudinem abierit, tamen quoad privilegia militaria et solemnitates testandi, nihil est immutatum. * * Quod ad secundam quæstionem attinet, decisum, hujusmodi militis testamentum ob defectum solemnitatis juris communis non valere, et per consequens ejus hæreditatem hæredibus ab intestato venientibus adjudicari debere, prout eis adjudicata fuit: nam licet milites nostri temporis, quod solemnitates testamentorum, ut dictum est, juris prerogativa habeant, tamen illud privilegium certis finibus circumscriptum est et non semper, nequeubique militibus competit sed tunc demum, quando sunt in expeditionis necessitate, discrimine belli: extra vero necessitatem expeditionis, quoad solemnitates testamentorum jure communi uti debent. Imperitia juris et simplicitas, causa quidem impulsiva est privilegiorum militarium. Arma enim magis quam jura milites scire debent, sed causa finalis est ipsa expeditionis necessitas; cessante, igitur, causâ finali, hoc est, expeditione, cessat quoque effectus, videlicet privilegium testandi jure militari." (Gaill. Prac. Obs. lib. ii. obs. 118, p. 534-5.)

"Quamvis enim et olim milites testarentur in procinctu, illa tamen testandi ratio ab usu recesserat * *. Postea militibus, etiam in procinctu haud constitutis, non tam ob eorum imperitiam quam ob imminens periculum, liberam testandi facultatem dedit Julius Cæsar, sed ad tempus; deinde Titus, post Domitianus, ac denique Nerva plenissimam indulgentiam in milites contulerunt, quam et Trajanus secutus est. Idque privilegium in eo consistit quod milites legibus omnibus, ad testamenti factionem pertinentibus, solverentur et quoque modo testatorum voluntas rata esset. Inde ergo prono alveo fluunt axiomata: 1. Milites imminente periculo his privilegiis gaudent. 2. Iidem omnibus solemnitatibus, tum externis, tum internis soluti sunt." (Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. xxix. tit. 1, De Testamento Militis, p. 30.)

Militi, quamdiu in militiâ est, testamentum quoque modo facere permittitur: extra militiam vero, communi jure ac legibus tenetur * * *. Miles autem usitate quidem et populariter dicitur, qui in numerus relatus militari sacramento tenetur. In hac autem testamentorum causâ propriè is miles dicitur qui in numeros relatus in expeditione versatur. In expeditione, autem, est non modo qui in castris est, verum etiam qui in hybernis aut stativis. (Hotomanus, lib. xi. p. 168; Mynsinger, Resp. Jur. 46, s. 8, p. 415; Denisart, Test. Mil. vol. iv. p. 716; Pothier, vol. v. p. 485.)

Sir J. Dodson, Q. A. and Twiss, contra.—The deceased, in this case, had been sent abroad with his regiment, and might be said to be in arms with his fellow-soldiers on the day of his death. In Drummond v. Parish, it had been held that liability to be sent abroad was not sufficient to bring the case of General Drummond within the meaning of the 11th section; but here the deceased had been actually sent abroad, and was serving his country in foreign parts. He was with his regiment at the time of the execution of the will, and attached his military title to his signature. He was in a distant country which was in a most disturbed state.

Addams.—How do we know that?

Sir J. Dodson.—It is a matter of public notoriety.

By the Court.—The point is, the deceased was in barracks, and not in actual warfare. You must make out a distinction between a soldier in barracks at Woolwich (General Drummond's case) and a soldier in barracks at New Brunswick.

Sir J. Dodson.—The distinction is, the one is at home, the other is abroad. The former cannot come within the phrase "in expeditione," which we so often meet with in text-books. The latter surely does. In the Institutes, the privilege is thus laid down:—"Supra dicta diligens observatio in ordinandis testamentis, militibus propter nimiam imperitiam eorum, constitutionibus principalibus remissa est. Nam quamvis hi neque legitimum numerum testium adhibuerint, neque aliam testamentorum solemnitatem observaverint, recte nihilo minus testantur—videlicet cum in expeditionibus occupati sunt—quod merito nostra constitutio introduxit." The Codex of Justinian (lib. vi. tit. 21, "De Testamento Militis," sec. xv.) also makes express use of the words "in expeditione." It says, "Milites in expeditione degentes, si uxores, aut filios, aut amicos, aut commilitones suos, postremo cujuslibet generis homines amplecti voluerint supremæ voluntatis affectu, quomodo possint ac velint, testentur." So, if the deceased was out upon an expedition, he is brought within the privilege. What, then, is an "expeditio?" Calvin in his Lexicon Juridicum, describes it "proprie perfectio cum expeditis militibus," and he explains who were "expediti milites." "Expediti milites vel in expeditionibus existentes dicuntur quicunque sunt in ipso exercitu aut castris, id est, eo loci quo Reipub. causa est belli apparatus, seu in statione illi sunt, seu in hybernis, seu aliubi pro finibus imperii tuendis; imo quocunque in loco sint militiæ causâ ut si Romæ sint ad defensionem urbis collocati ac depositi. Falsum ergo, stationarios ac limenarchas non recte testaturos jure militari, quia non sunt in expeditionibus." Other authorities explain what was meant by the term "milites in expeditione." Julius Clarus (lib. iii. tit. Testa. Quæst. xv.) says, "In expeditione autem milites occupari et degere dicuntur, non solum, cum sunt in procinctu, in acie, in hostico, id est, in ipso armorum strepitu et summo vitæ discrimine; verum etiam cum sunt in castris sive (quod idem est) in fossatis, in stativis, in hybernis, in custodiis, in præsidiis. (Alioqui nihil distaret paganus a militi.) Præterea, hic addendum; milites limitaneos, qui nimirum in hostium finitimis locis, ad repentinas illorum incursiones, intenti sunt et præsidiarios sive stationarios, qui ad provinciæ alicujus quietem aluntur, privilegiis militum merito quoque gaudere, ita ut jure militari, omissis juris solemnibus, testari possint." (Cujacius, lib. 19, Quæst. Papin. vol. 1, part 2, p. 525.) The distinction between service at home and abroad is universally recognized. (Bocerus, de Bello, p. 211; Enenkelius, de Priv. Milit. p. 127; Puffendorf, Ob. Jur. Univ. vol. 3, p. 499.) And there are several statutes, following the practice of the War-office, which distinguish between soldiers in active service abroad and in exercise, or in barracks or in ordinary home service. 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 7, talks of "rebellions whereby occasion shall be to draw out such soldiers into actual service." Also, 1 Geo. 4, c. 19, sec. 115, and 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 93, s. 5.

By the COURT.—Does the present Wills Act extend to New Brunswick?

Sir J. Dodson.—That point has never yet been decided.

Haggard and R. Phillimore were not heard in reply.

Sir H. J. FUST.—The single question which I have to decide in this case is, whether there is any clear and intelligible distinction between the case of the deceased in the present suit and the case of General Drummond. The only difference I can see, and I believe the only difference insisted upon by the counsel who have supported the validity of this paper, is, that the one was in a colony, and that the other was at home at the time of its execution. I cannot think that this difference creates any legal distinction, or that Captain Pery was on that account any more within the exemption of the 11th section than was General Drummond. I must reject this allegation.

Allegation rejected.

Wednesday, July 10.

DURNELL v. CORFIELD.

Where a will is executed by an old man of weakened capacity in favour of his medical attendant, there must be the clearest proof, not only of the factum of the instrument, but of the testator's knowledge of its contents.

Where a will is pronounced invalid, merely on the ground of deficit probatio, the party propounding it is not condemned in the costs.

This was a suit respecting the validity of a codicil to the will of Mr. Joseph Lawrence, who died on the 1st December, 1843.

The deceased left behind him three testamentary papers, viz. a will executed in November 1840, another will executed in September 1841, and a codicil dated November 21, 1843, nine days only prior to his death. The will of 1841 revoked that of 1840, and the codicil of 1843 purported to revive the will of 1840. The effect of the codicil was to give the bulk of his property, about 1,000*l.* to Mr. John Hiram Durnell, the medical attendant of the deceased (on condition that he should take care of his only sister during her life), and to appoint him executor and trustee, though the wording of the document implied an intention that it should operate during the life of the deceased. The deceased, at the time of his death, had reached the age of eighty years. His sister, who had two illegitimate children, resided with him. The property amounted to about 1,200*l.* personalty.

The validity of the codicil was opposed, on the ground that the testator, at his advanced age, was not of full disposing capacity; that the evidence was not sufficient to establish the execution of the codicil, and that there was no proof of a knowledge of contents by the testator himself at the time of its execution.

Bayford opposed the validity of the paper.

Addams, contrà.

Dr. LUSHINGTON (sitting for Sir H. JENNER FUST) pronounced judgment. Having stated the facts, he proceeded to say that the testator in the cause was evidently a man of weakened and impaired capacity, and the rule universally acted upon in those courts under such circumstances was to require the clearest proof, not only of the factum of the instrument, but that there was a complete knowledge of contents by the testator; and this rule applied with greater force where an infirm old man had executed a paper in favour of his medical attendant. Medical men necessarily exercised considerable influence over the minds of their patients, and where a man of eighty years of age was represented to have altered the disposition of his property only nine days before his death, peculiar caution was necessary. What was the evidence of the execution? [The COURT read a considerable portion of the evidence on the point.] This evidence did not satisfy the requirements of law that there had been a clear and full knowledge by the testator of the contents of the paper he was executing. Saying this, however, the Court did not in any way mean to impeach the character of Mr. Durnell. That gentleman had been long acquainted with the deceased, and was stated to be any thing but a needy man. His conduct throughout the transaction was liable to no imputation whatever, but the Court was not judicially satisfied that the deceased knew the contents of the paper, and there being no evidence commensurate with the exigency of the case, the only alternative left was to pronounce against the validity of the codicil. This decision had, however, been arrived at merely on the ground of deficit probatio, and as the Court imputed no sort of fraud to the party propounding it, it would not condemn him in costs.

QUEEN'S BENCH.

TRINITY TERM, 1844.

Saturday, May 25.

REG. v. O'CONNELL and OTHERS.

Amendment of postea—Time.

Conspiracy. The defendants' counsel had, at the time of trial, consented to the separation of the jury. Held, that they were precluded thereby from objecting to the mode in which their separation was entered on the postea. Held, also, that an application to amend the postea must be made within the first four days of the next Term after the trial.

Whiteside, Q. C. with whom was Close, moved that the postea in this case be amended by inserting thereon the facts of the jury being allowed, every day at the adjournment of the Court, to separate and return to their homes, exactly as the facts occurred, and also, that the trial extended after the expiration of the Term, was continued in the vacation, and further, by inserting thereon the finding of the jury precisely in the terms it appeared by the issue-paper to have been found by them. He admitted that the separation of the jury was entered upon the postea; but contended it was not as fully stated thereon as it ought, or as the facts of the case warranted, and the finding, he contended, was so entered that the jury appeared to have found the defendants guilty of the intent, which in reality he insisted they had omitted in their finding. It was admitted, that the object of the application was to facilitate the defendants in obtaining the decision of a court of ultimate resort.

Smith, A. G. opposed the motion.—The jury had been allowed to separate with the express consent of the traversers' counsel, and no advantage could now be taken of that circumstance, and as to the other objections, this postea was one of the documents upon which the motion for a new trial was made by the defendants last Easter Term. Its form was not then objected to, and it was now too late to make this application; the alteration ought to be introduced would actually cause error upon the record. (Rex v. Woolf, Kinnear, and Others, 1 Chit. Rep. 401; R. v. Pinney, Gurney's Rep.; R. v. Carlisle, 2 Barn. & Ad. 971.)

Whiteside, Q. C.—In Rex v. Kinnear, the Court declared, that in a criminal case counsel for the defence ought not to be asked to consent to any thing.

PERRIN, J.—I am aware of that, and in the case of The King v. Lock, the same thing is mentioned; but in this case there was a voluntary compact entered into by both parties.

The COURT were all of opinion that the motion must be refused, on the grounds that the traversers' counsel having consented to the separation of the jury, they could not afterwards take any advantage of that fact; and as to the other objections, they were all untenable now, as a motion to amend the postea should have been made within the first four days of last Term.

Motion refused.

Conspiracy—Indictment—Caption—Where Quaker is on the grand jury—Duplicity—Charge of conspiring to bring about changes in the laws and constitution by intimidation, &c.—Generality—Uncertainty—Judgment.

Where a Quaker is upon the grand jury in the Queen's Bench, it is enough to state in the caption that the indictment has been found "upon the oath and affirmation of twelve good and lawful men, &c." without stating the names of the grand jurors, or who were sworn, or who affirmed, or shewing that any of them was by his religious opinions entitled to be affirmed.

It is no objection in arrest of judgment that an indictment for conspiracy charges in the same count several offences ejusdem generis, growing out of the same transaction.

Semble, that an objection on the ground of duplicity ought to be made before verdict. Though an indictment be in other respects vague, general, and uncertain, yet if any material portion of any count upon which the jury have convicted be good, judgment will not be arrested.

The Court having on a previous day refused to grant a new trial in this case (see 3 Law T. 264).

Macdonough, Q. C. and Sir Coleman O'Loghlen now moved in arrest of judgment on the following grounds:—1st, that the caption stated that the indictment was found "upon the oath and affirmation of twelve good and lawful men, &c. then and there sworn and affirmed," without stating who were sworn and who affirmed, or that the religious opinions of any of the grand jurors were such as required any of them to be affirmed. It was objected, 2ndly, that the first count was bad for duplicity (see the indictment 2 Law T. 378), that it charged five different conspiracies. The finding of the jury (see 2 Law T. 503) shewed that there were at least three conspiracies charged in it, of which, one included all the parties, one included all but the Rev. Mr. Tierney, and one included Mr. O'Connell, Mr. Duffy, and Mr. Barrett alone, and that the four following counts were open to a similar objection. 3rdly, it was contended, that the indictment was bad for uncertainty, that it was too vague and general, and that no criminal offence was disclosed on the face of it. It was argued that, to raise and create discontent and disaffection amongst the Queen's subjects, to excite them to hatred and contempt of the Government and constitution as by law established, and to unlawful and seditious opposition to said Government, did not (as it was charged in the indictment) amount to an indictable offence, and, therefore, a conspiracy to commit it was not indictable, and that, even if it did disclose an offence, it did so in so vague and uncertain and general a manner, that no judgment could be pronounced upon it, it not stating against whom, or to whom, or what, the discontent or disaffection was to be excited. And that, to excite to hatred and contempt of the Government and constitution as by law established, did not necessarily amount to a crime, as the constitution of the realm was a government by King, Lords, and Commons; whereas, the constitution of the realm as by law established, meant the present formation of that government, and that, even if those words imported the constitution de jure, and not merely the constitution de facto, still that the offence should have been charged to have been committed with an intent to seduce the Queen's subjects from their allegiance, or with an intent to excite an insurrection or other breach of the peace, or to do so in such manner, or on such occasion, as would necessarily produce that effect; and that the insertion of the words "unlawful and seditious" by the pleader did not render that illegal which would otherwise be legal; and that as the question of whether an act was lawful or not was one for the Court, and not for the jury, the facts which rendered the opposition unlawful should have been spread on the record. It was also objected that the charge of conspiring to excite discontent and disaffection amongst divers of her Majesty's servants in the army was too general; that it did not state that the discontent and disaffection were to be excited against the Queen, or who the "divers persons" to be so excited were, or that their names were to the jurors unknown. It was further objected, that the charge of conspiring "to cause and procure, and to aid in causing and procuring, divers of the Queen's subjects, unlawfully, seditiously, and maliciously to meet and to assemble, &c. for the unlawful and seditious purpose of obtaining, by means of the intimidation to be thereby caused, and by the exhibition and demonstration of great physical force at such meetings, changes in the laws and constitution of this realm as by law established," disclosed no indictable offence, the jury having acquitted the traversers as far as concerned the words unlawfully and maliciously and seditiously (see 2 Law T. 503); and further, that the offence was not charged with sufficient certainty and precision. It was also contended that conspiring "to bring into hatred and disrepute the courts by law established, &c. and to diminish the confidence of her Majesty's subjects in Ireland in the administration of the law therein, with intent to induce her Majesty's subjects to withdraw the adjudication of their differences with and claims upon each other from the cognizance of the said courts by law established, and to submit the same to other tribunals, to be constituted and contrived for that purpose," was not indictable; that the intent laid was not necessarily illegal; and that the objections of vagueness and generality were applicable to this portion of the indictment also. The ninth count, which charged a conspiracy to usurp the prerogative of the Crown, in the establishment of courts of justice, was, it was contended, untenable; but if the prerogative of the Crown was usurped, as charged, the remedy was by a quo warranto information. The eleventh count, it was contended, disclosed no indictable offence, and also was repugnant on the face of it, as it charged a conspiracy to effect changes in the law by intimidation, but did not charge any design to intimidate the Queen; whereas, if a change in the laws was to be effected by intimidation, it could only be by intimidating the Queen, Lords, and Commons; and it was also contended that what was to be the tenor or purport of the speeches to be spoken and writings to be published, by the means of which it was charged that the traversers intended to intimidate the Legislature, should have been set out, in order that the Court might see whether they were unlawful and seditious or not.(a)

On behalf of the defendants the following authority was relied on upon the first ground of objection: Rex v. Dan (1 M. C. C. 427). And upon the question of duplicity, 2 Gabb. Cr. Smith, A. G. and Greene, S. G. for the Crown, upon the question as to the validity of the caption, contended that Rex v. Dan was not in point, as there the bill was stated to have been found "upon the oath or affirmation, &c." which was clearly bad, and the form adopted in the present instance was precisely the one directed by Baron Alderson to be used in such cases. (Anon. 9 C. & P. 78.) The following cases were also cited for the Crown upon this point: Faulkner's case (1 Saund. 248 A. note (1); Rex v. Marsh (6 Adol. & El. 236); Aylett v. The King (3 Bro. P. C. 529); R. v. Davies (1 C. & P. 470); and an American case was also cited, in which, in an indictment for combination found at Philadelphia in 1806, the form observed was "the jurors aforesaid being sworn and affirmed." Upon the question of duplicity the following cases were relied on for the Crown: Rex v. Heneby (Batty, 519-20); R. v. Purchase (Car. & Marsh. 620, per Patteson, J.); Rex v. Fuller (2 Leech, 799, per Tenterden, C. L. pp. 56-7, 7th edit. and cases there cited; R. v. Jones (2 Camph. 131); and upon third class of objections the following cases were cited in support of the verdict: R. v. Cope and Others (1 Str. 144); R. v. Walker (6 T. R. 419); R. v. Tailors of Cambridge (8 Mod. 12); R. v. Turner (13 E. 228); R. v. Mawbey (8 E. 364); R. v. De Beranger (3 M. & S. 67); Parker v. Clive (4 Bur. 2472); R. v. Ellis (6 B. & C. 145); R. v. Gill (2 B. & Ald. 204); R. v. Peck (9 Adol. & El. 692); R. v. Parker (3 Q. Pennefather, C. J.—We are all of opinion that there are no grounds for arresting the judgment of the Court. Two grounds for this application have been put forward which are essentially different, and altogether independent of one another, the one resting on the objections to the caption of the indictment, the other upon objections to the indictment itself. With regard to the first objection, I hardly think it was very seriously put, or being strongly pressed, by the learned counsel who made this application; however, in that respect, I may have been mistaken as to their intentions; however, I have no doubt but that, upon the grounds which have been relied on, as they stand, there is not the slightest foundation for these objections. The first objection to the caption is, that it does not state upon the face of it the names of the persons who acted as grand jurors in finding the bill of indictment, nor who was sworn and who affirmed; and the second is, that it does not appear what were the religious opinions of those persons, whether they were such as required them to be sworn, or to be affirmed. The answer to these objections appears to be—Universal practice, both in England and Ireland. Therefore, until I find a case in which that practice has been set at naught and put aside, where I am not convinced that there is any thing like a rational ground for the application upon the merits, I will not be one of those who would be disposed, upon a technical ground, to violate all precedent. The fact of the practice is ascertained from various cases; the Attorney and Solicitor General have both of them referred to cases and reports of practice, some of them of the highest nature, the most authentic and imperative nature, having the sanction of the House of Lords, and various of them being the deliberate rules laid down by eminent judges of the present day, and one and all concur in its being sufficient that the caption of an indictment should state upon the face of it just what the caption does in the present case, namely, that they are sworn and affirmed; that is the language of the captions—that is the language which practice has invariably required, and it would only lead to confusion, and an inquiry which could answer no good object, to have a further investigation on the subject; the jurors having been admitted on the grand jury, whether they were sworn or were affirmed in presence of and by the act of the Court; therefore there are no solid grounds for that objection. Now, with regard to the objections arising on the face of the indictment itself, I was certainly a good deal struck by the opinions and sentiments referred to by the Solicitor-General, of some of the ablest judges and best men that ever adorned the Bench of England. I put at the head of them the opinion of Lord Chief Baron Hale, who, if he had his equal he never had his superior, and that opinion is adopted by other very eminent judges too, whose judgment was strengthened by experience and long judicial practice; they are the opinions of Lord Kenyon, Lord Ellenborough, and Lord Mansfield. Now, what is the concurrent opinion of all those great men? Not that technical objections which go not to the advancing of justice, but may go a great way to impede it, are to be encouraged, but that they should be discouraged. The greatest crimes, says Lord Hale, had gone unpunished, in consequence of the length to which courts had gone in entertaining technical objections. He says (2 Hale's P. C. p. 193), "The truth is, that it is grown to be a blemish and inconvenience in the law, and the administration thereof; more offenders escape by the over-easy ear given to exceptions in indictments, than by their own innocence; and many times gross murders, burglaries, robberies, and other heinous and crying offences, escape by these unseemly niceties." This was the language of, perhaps, the best judge that ever lived, the opinion of a man of sense and feeling; an opinion which has been further confirmed —I will not say confirmed, for it needs no confirmation—but concurred in by Lord Kenyon, in 1 East, 314 (Rex v. Suddis), Lord Ellenborough, in 5 East, 260 (R. v. Stevens and Agnew), and Lord Mansfield, in 1 Leach, 383. The opinion of several other learned judges is the same; and I am not ashamed of enrolling myself amongst those persons who have so treated and condemned yielding to these niceties in criminal law. Let me not be misundersto[od]. There is no person who, if there existed any objection bearing upon the justice of the case, nay, more, if there were any thing omitted which, with a due reverence to established forms, ought to be observed, would be more ready than I am, and shall be, to see that not only the shadow of justice must be respected, but also that regular forms are adhered to which are wise and necessary to be preserved in the administration of justice. The present indictment is for a conspiracy; it charges, in the first count, that the traversers, who may be considered as now reduced to seven, unlawfully and maliciously did combine, conspire, and confederate and agree, &c. to raise and create discontent and disaffection among the liege subjects of our lady the Queen, and to excite such subjects to hatred and contempt of the government and constitution of this realm, as by law established, &c. &c. I cannot understand how (as Sir Coleman O'Loghlen says it does) the words "as by law established" can make any difference in the way the charge in the indictment is to be construed; I cannot see what difference it could make, or that the constitution "as by law established" is to be considered the less secure on that account. I have heard a great many arguments upon this subject, but I confess I do not concur in them. [His lordship here read a considerable portion of the indictments.] It is said that the charge of unlawfully and seditiously intending to do certain acts "by means of intimidation" (see 2 Law T. 378), has no legal meaning; but I do not think it requires any very great astuteness to give it a meaning, by the substitution of the word fear. These passages are all in the preliminary part of the indictment, and I think the indictment might be good if they were all left out. They might all be rejected as surplusage, and yet the indictment would remain good; but certainly it cannot be contended that the indictment is weakened by these introductory passages, intended to shew the meaning of the other parts of what follows. The agreement to do an unlawful act is the offence charged, and, notwithstanding all I have heard, I cannot find any very solid distinction between a confederacy and a conspiracy to effect the object charged. [After reading the charges contained in the counts down to the fourth]:—I have always been of opinion that whatever is by law established, properly speaking, cannot be overthrown or broken down without a violation of the law, and I would further say, that whatever is so done, and thereby constitutes a violation of the law, is a criminal offence. Now, on the one hand, it is said that this indictment, which is divided into no fewer than eleven counts, contains upon no part of the face of it an indictable offence. On the other hand, it is also said that the indictment is liable to a technical objection for duplicity; that the first five counts contain double matter; that more than one offence is contained in one and the same count; but, in the first place, this objection cannot in my opinion prevail, according to the traversers' own position, for the objection is made only to the first five counts, and was not urged to the six last. The period also at which this application has been made is another reason which influences the Court in its decision. An objection on the ground of duplicity should, if tenable at all, have been made at a previous stage of the proceedings; it is brought forward now, after the jury have returned their verdict, when there remains nothing unexplained which required explanation, and besides, there is no reason for saying that the traversers have been confused by any want of clearness in the indictment. All the authorities on the subject concur in stating that an objection on the ground of duplicity should be made at such a stage of the proceedings; as to obviate inconvenience, and confusion. There was a mode of proceeding to which the traversers might have resorted if they had any ground for doing so; they might have applied to the Court to quash the indictment for want of simplicity and unity. But if they did not think proper to do so, what inference can be drawn from the fact but that they had nothing to complain of; and having lain by during the entire of the proceedings, it is now too late to make an application like the present. Another reason influencing the mind of the Court is, that, they cannot subscribe to the proposition that, in offences of the nature charged in this indictment, it is matter properly called double, if two offences are charged in the same count, for they are offences ejusdem generis, springing and growing out of the same transaction, all of the same degree and amount in point of guilt, for they are all misdemeanors, and no more. Therefore, adhering to the view taken by my venerated predecessor in this court, in the case of Rex v. Forbes (p. 345), (a) I think there is no reason for introducing the doctrine of duplicity, for there is no danger arising from duplicity in such cases. I therefore now come to the consideration, Is there on the face of the indictment sufficient matter to be considered an offence in point of law, and of which the law can take hold? I confess I, in common, I believe, with others, felt some surprise when I heard it said that there was no offence in point of law set forth in any one count in the indictment. I need not say that a judgment would not be arrested even if one or more of the counts were insufficient, provided any one remained untouched, and not properly subject to objection. It would be sufficient to support the judgment if one count remained untouched, unassailable - nay more, if any material matter or part of a count was so, it would be sufficient to sustain the judgment. I need not refer to any authority in support of that proposition, but the Solicitor-General has cited a case from 2 Burr. 986, in which that doctrine is laid down. The question raised as to the first count, upon the objection that they do not disclose any criminal charges amounting to criminal matter, refers also to all the others; but in the judgment of the Court there is sufficient matter in the indictment which cannot be disputed, and on which the jury have found a verdict establishing the guilt of the traversers. The first count charges them with having conspired unlawfully and seditiously to create discontent and disaffection between different classes of her Majesty's subjects, and to excite them to hatred and contempt of the government and constitution as by law established. This is not stated to be the act of one individual, but the act of two or more of the seven conspirators, who had one and all united for one common design, namely, to excite the subjects of the Queen to hatred and contempt of the government and of the constitution. That, I think, is an offence subject to indictment; yet, am I to be told– is the Court to be told – that those who enter into such plots and conspiracies are guilty of no offence, but that, on the contrary, it is perfectly legal and perfectly constitutional for those persons to do so, not only in their proper individual persons, but also to band and associate, and conspire together for the purpose of exciting many thousands of the Queen's subjects against the government of her Majesty and against the constitution as by law established? I confess I feel great difficulty in arguing such a proposition, or even in alluding at all to a subject so plainly repugnant to common sense. The jury have come to a verdict sustained by law, and the Court is not in this case, in my opinion, called upon to arrest the judgment which the law enjoins. Another count charges the traversers with conspiring to create discontent and disaffection amongst divers of her Majesty's subjects, more especially amongst those serving in the army Now, in proportion as a certain body of the Queen's subjects are honoured with a trust, so is the greater care to be taken that it is not to be tampered with; more especially as that body, being the one in particular charged with the important duty of preserving the obedience of the subject when seriously endangered, it is criminal in the extreme to seduce its members, and render it utterly useless in that capacity. The next count goes on to charge the parties with conspiring together to bring into disrepute the tribunals for the administration of the law. It has been said, that the prerogative of the Queen in the establishment of courts of law, and in appointing judges to preside in them, is to be infringed and set aside at the will of any conspirator who may wish to effect such a purpose. Indeed, it has been said by some in the course of this argument, in effect, though not perhaps in terms, that this ancient prerogative is an idle tale of other days, which there exists no reason for supporting now. For my part, I never can concede that ties so precious should be broken. It is a portion of the Queen's prerogative as much as any other I know of; the violation of it may not amount to high treason, but I never before heard that persons conspiring to deprive the Queen of that, her absolute right, were not guilty of sedition. The next thing to which I shall advert, one which above all goes far to expose the iniquity of the conspiracy which has been proved,—in boldness, in audacity, it exceeded every other part of the conspiracy,—is, the count which charged the traversers with collecting vast numbers of persons together for the purpose of obtaining, by the intimidation thereof, and by the demonstration of physical force, changes and alterations in the government and constitution as by law established. For fifteen or twenty days during the progress of the trial we heard a great deal of the right of public opinion, and the full and free discussion of political subjects, and that it should not be interfered with. We all admit that the public, without fear, without any exhibition of force, have a right to express their opinion on political subjects; but if the Legislature is to be overawed by the proceedings of conspirators, by immense masses collected together at their desire for the purpose of procuring changes and alterations in the law, how is that free discussion? How can the British constitution stand? Is the Legislature of the country to be placed in the position of legislators who are sworn, according to their consciences, to pass laws for the benefit of the country at large, and yet are to be influenced by the bidding of certain disaffected conspirators? Are we to be told that they are to act under the command, the fear, of thousands of persons who are to be assembled for some purpose of which they are to take notice? The Court is yet to learn that the conspiring to effect such an object as that is no legal offence, but perfectly constitutional! So far from being of opinion that no offence is spread on the face of this indictment, I think that by it several offences, of a grave, serious, and dangerous character, are charged against the traversers, and in my opinion there is quite enough remaining to sustain the indictment. Even if on one or two of the counts there might be a difficulty (arising more, perhaps, from the ingenuity of the learned counsel than the merits of the case), that would not prevent the operation of either of the other counts; but, supposing there is a difficulty respecting any one or all of the counts objected to, still we might pass those counts by, and take ad libitum any of the six remaining unimpeached counts, on every one of which, also, the jury have convicted, and I do not see any reason why the judgment on them should be arrested. [His lordship then referring to the objections raised to the eleventh count, said], It has been objected, that there is a want of certainty, of particularity, in the indictment, because it does not set forth in words and figures the number of the persons who attended the meetings, and the speeches that were made, but I cannot conceive that that was necessary: I think, to call on the Crown to do this is contrary to common sense. For all these reasons, I am of opinion, that no sufficient grounds have been laid before us to warrant the Court in saying that in this case judgment should be arrested.

(a) The eleventh count, it should be observed, charged a conspiracy and combination, "by means of unlawful and seditious and inflammatory speeches and addresses, to be made and delivered," and by means of publishing and causing to be published divers unlawful, &c. writings and compositions to intimidate the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons of the Parliament of the United Kingdom, &c. and thereby to bring about changes and alterations in the laws and constitution of the realm as by law established."

(b) This case is not reported; it was cited to shew that an indictment for a conspiracy to effect a purpose not indictable per se may be maintained. It was an indictment for conspiracy to seduce the daughter of the prisoner Hunter; the case was tried at the Commission Court, Green-street, during the past year; the prisoners were found guilty, and sentenced to imprisonment.

BURTON, CRAMPTON, and PERRIN, JJ. expressed their concurrence in the rule pronounced by the Lord Chief Justice. Motion refused.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

AGAIN the record is of Bills mutilated or destroyed. The fate of the Debtors and Creditors Bill is commented upon in another place. The Charity Trusts Bill has been read a second time, but is to stand over until next session, as is fitting with a measure of so much importance. The Railways Bill has been compromised by the abandonment of three-fourths of the provisions that made it valuable to the public, together with a few that were undoubtedly obnoxious. The session is fast hastening to an end, and certainly it is the most unsatisfactory of the many fruitless ones which have disappointed the country for some few years past, and which palsy all parties alike.

Bills in Progress.

LECTURERS AND PARISH CLERKS.

A Bill has been recently passed by the House of Lords, and brought down to the Lower Chamber, entitled "An Act for better regulating the Offices of Lecturers and Parish Clerks." It has been, we believe, already read a first time in the House of Commons. The preamble recites the fact that there are now in divers parishes, &c. certain lecturers or preachers elected to deliver or preach lectures or sermons only, without the obligation of performing other clerical or ministerial duties, and declares that it is "expedient" that, in many cases, such lecturers should be required to perform other clerical duties, and act, if necessary, as assistant-curates in such parishes, &c. We need hardly state that the enactments are in strict accordance with the requirements of the preamble. Lecturers or preachers (so called) may be required by the bishop of the diocese to perform such other clerical or ministerial duties as the bishop, acting in conjunction with the incumbent of the parish, may think fit, under pain of suspension or removal. An appeal may be made to the archbishop of the province within fourteen days. This enactment, however, is not to affect or be deemed applicable to any lecturer appointed prior to the passing of this Act, unless such lecturer shall consent to be bound thereby. Power is given to the rectors or incumbents of parishes by the second clause to fill up vacancies occurring in the office of church or parish clerk, by the appointment of persons in the holy orders of deacon or priest of the united church of England and Ireland, such persons to act as assistant-curates if required. The appointments of assistant-clergy under this Act are not to exempt incumbents (now liable) from the duty of providing curates. Power is given to archdeacons and other ordinaries to remove such parish clerks, not in holy orders, as may be guilty of misbehaviour or neglect of duty.

FARM BUILDINGS BILL.

The Government have just introduced a short Bill, to amend the law as to burning farm buildings. It is prepared and brought in by Sir James Graham and the Solicitor-General (Sir Frederick Thesiger), and contains four clauses only. They enact that whoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to any hovel, shed, or fold, or to any farm building, or any building or erection used in farming land (whether the same shall then be in the possession of the offender, or in that of any other person, with intent thereby to defraud any person, shall be guilty of felony, and on conviction shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for the term of the natural life of such offender, or for any term not less than fifteen years, or to be imprisoned for a term not exceeding three years. Persons setting fire to any hay, straw, wood, or other vegetable produce, in any farmhouse or farm building, or to any implement of husbandry therein, with intent to injure or to defraud thereby, will be deemed equally guilty of firing the said farmhouse or farm building. This Act is to be deemed a part of the 7 Wm. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 89, the provisions of which it merely proposes to extend.

THE GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS BILL.

The main features of the arrangement between the Government and the railway deputation in reference to the Railways Bill are briefly as follow:—The revision of the tolls of such railways hereafter to be constructed as may return a larger interest than ten per cent. per annum is not to take place until twenty-one years from the passing of the Bills under which the respective companies may be incorporated, and not at the end of fifteen years, as originally fixed. A further period of twenty-one years must elapse before a second revision can be effected. The Act is not to apply in any way to existing companies, except in reference to third-class passengers, for whose accommodation the companies agree to run one train daily, at fares not exceeding a penny a mile, the Government binding itself wholly to exempt from taxation the receipts accruing from such cheap trains. There are other concessions of minor importance.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

FEES TO MAGISTRATES' CLERKS.

FRIDAY, July 19.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE inquired what were the intentions of Government as to any general measure on the subject of clerks' fees. He feared that it would not be possible to introduce such a measure this session, but he hoped for one in the next. In the report of the commissioners on the disturbances in South Wales, this subject had been mentioned as the next in importance to that of the existence of unlawful and unnecessary tollgates. The latter had been made the subject of a measure, and he hoped that the former would also not be lost sight of. — Lord WHARNCLIFFE said the Government had not lost sight of the subject. He hoped to be able next session to introduce a Bill having reference to the fees, not only of magistrates' clerks, but also of clerks of the peace and of assize.—The Duke of RICHMOND was glad that the Government proposed to introduce such a measure next year, though they must not expect to be able to pass it easily. He thought the unequal fees in different districts ought to be made the subject of regulation, and that the fees of the clerks of the peace should be abolished, and a salary given instead.

COUNTY CORONERS BILL.

MONDAY, July 22.—This Bill went through committee.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.

The LORD CHANCELLOR rose to move the second reading of this Bill. He said that there were an immense number of charities, embracing a great amount of property, in this country which were without any superintending administration or judicial control, and the object of this Bill was to provide a proper tribunal to meet that evil. (Hear, hear.) Unless they provided some tribunal with authority over those charities, it would be impossible to regulate those charities consistently with the amount of income, as compared with the necessary expenses of management. (Hear, hear, hear.) The Bill had a limited application, only applying to charities in which a certain amount of property was concerned, and thus applying merely to such cases as absolutely required this tribunal. He proposed that commissioners should be appointed by the Secretary of State, with a power to superintend these charities, and prevent abuses in their distribution; but he was ready, if any noble lord proposed a better mode than that of meeting the evil, to adopt it, and renounce his own. (Hear, hear.) Their lordships would admit that it was extremely desirable that some mode should be adopted of investigating the accounts of those charities, and obtaining returns, and he intended to propose a power to effect that. He proposed that an inspector should be appointed to examine into the condition of the charities which would be affected by this Bill, and to make a report to the commissioners, who would, whenever it was necessary, lay any particular case before the Attorney-General. It was very desirable that the friends of such charities as those to which the Bill applied should be looked after, for in many cases the property had altogether been lost from want of such a controlling jurisdiction. It often happened that property vanished altogether, in consequence of the non-appointment of trustees after the death of the former trustees, and he proposed to give a power of appointing new trustees, where it was necessary for the interests of a charity to do so. A power of that kind was now exercised by the Court of Chancery, but it was one of a very expensive nature, and therefore could not be applied with advantage to charities in which only a small amount of property was involved. The appointment by the Court of Chancery was made by application to the Chancellor, who then referred it to the Master, and the Master examined witnesses, and made his report to the Lord Chancellor, and the Chancellor finally gave his decision; but as all the parties concerned, or who thought they were concerned, had a right to be heard, it was an expensive proceeding, costing no less than 60*l.* or 70*l.* Now he proposed a mode of obviating that by this Bill. It might, perhaps, not be the best mode which could be adopted, but when the Bill went into committee he should be glad to adopt any suggestion with a view to obtaining a better mode. He wished to have it read a second time, in order that they might adopt any alterations which could have the effect of improving it. The noble and learned lord then proposed that the Bill be read a second time.—The Bishop of LONDON said the country was indebted to the noble and learned lord for taking up the subject, for there was no doubt that many of the smaller charities of the country had suffered greatly from the effect of the present mode in which they were regulated, and that much of the good which would otherwise arise from them was thus lost. He fully concurred in the principles laid down by the noble lord; and, indeed, he concurred in the principles of the Bill, but he nevertheless would intreat the noble and learned lord not to press it through committee during the present session. The object of the Bill was to prevent a continuance of evils which now exist, and it was, therefore, a good one, yet he feared that great evil would arise, and much injustice would be done, by an Act which was intended to prevent it, if they did not properly consider and deliberate upon its provisions before they agreed to it. The Bill, though limited to charities with particular incomes, yet included nearly all the educational charities of the country. The bishops were visitors of those educational charities; for where they were not officially or legally the visitors, bishops or other ecclesiastics were bound by their duty to do so, and he thought that no provision ought to be agreed to which would interfere with the influence which the church had over charities which were established for educational or church purposes.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said he had considered the question to which the right reverend prelate referred, and it was his intention to introduce a clause for the purpose of preserving that control where there was a legal right to exercise it.—Lord WROTTESLEY was anxious to see the Bill pass into a law, and he hoped that if it were not agreed to during this session, it would be introduced at an early period next session. There were some important omissions in the Bill as it now stood. There was no power given, as he understood it, for the appointment of new trustees in cases of real estate, nor was there any authority given to the commissioners to vary the directions of the founders of charities in cases where they were found impracticable, or unsuited to the present position and character of society. He thanked the noble and learned lord for bringing forward the Bill.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said that the 26th clause gave a power to appoint trustees as well with regard to real estate as personal estate. There was also a provision with respect to cases in which the intentions of the founder were not carried into effect under certain circumstances. In cases where the income of charities was beyond the limit proposed by the Bill, the subject could be brought before the Court of Chancery.—Lord CAMPBELL said they were all indebted to his noble friend near him for the information which he had given them upon this subject. He (Lord Campbell) felt strongly the importance of legislation on this subject, and he believed that the Bill of his noble and learned friend, with alterations and amendments, would be a great improvement as regarded the branch of charities to which it was to be applied. He concurred with the right reverend prelate in requesting the noble and learned lord not to press the Bill this session.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said he wished the Bill to be read a second time, and allowed to go through committee, in order to see what amendments might be suggested from any quarter. The Bill was read a second time. The LORD CHANCELLOR then stated that it was not his intention to take any further steps with respect to the Bill this session.

COUNTY CORONERS BILL.

THURSDAY, July 25.—The Marquis of NORMANBY said he had a petition to present from a coroner in the west of England, for the restoration of that clause in the Bill, which had been struck out, for giving a higher rate of remuneration to coroners for travelling expenses. The noble marquis said, on coming down to the house, about two minutes past five, he found that the Bill had been read a third time.—The Earl of SHAFTSBURY said that the Bill had been read a third time, but the noble marquis might put a question for the restoration of the clause, on the motion "that the Bill do pass." A conversation then ensued between the noble marquis, Lord Redesdale, and the Marquis of Salisbury, on the subject, which was terminated by the Marquis of Normanby moving that the clause in question be restored to the Bill. The House then divided, when there appeared for the motion of the Marquis of Normanby—

The amendment for the restoration of the clause was consequently lost, and the Bill was accordingly passed.

GAMING TRANSACTIONS.

The Marquis of NORMANBY rose, and, in the absence of his noble friend (the Duke of Richmond), moved the third reading of the Actions for Gaming Discontinuance Bill.—The Earl of RADNOR opposed the motion.—The Marquis of NORMANBY defended the Bill.—Earl STRADBROKE also supported it, and, after a few words from the Earl of RADNOR and Lord FOLEY, the Bill was read a third time and passed.

SUDBURY DISFRANCHISEMENT BILL.

This Bill was read a third time and passed.

The House then adjourned at eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS BILL.

MONDAY, July 22.—This Bill was read a third time, and, a clause having been added, was passed.

CHURCH ENDOWMENT BILL.

The report on this Bill was reported, and the amendments agreed to.

CLERK OF THE CROWN CHANCERY BILL.

On the motion of the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, this Bill went through committee.

MARRIAGES BILL.

On the motion of the JUDGE-ADVOCATE, this Bill went through committee.

JOINT-STOCK BANKS' REGULATION BILL.

TUESDAY, July 23.—On the motion of the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, the House went into committee on this Bill. Clauses 2 to 8 inclusive were agreed to with some verbal amendments. On clause 9, relative to powers of suing and being sued by their own officer, Sir W. CLAY said, that yesterday the committee had adopted the principle that the liability of shareholders should be unlimited. They ought to take care that this liability should not be illusory, but bonâ fide and substantial. By the 7th Geo. 4, which this Bill was to replace, a great many difficulties lay in the way of obtaining judgment against a shareholder in a joint-stock company, unless the official person who sued or was sued should be connected with the shareholders by a scire facius, which was tantamount to a separate action in each case.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL concurred in the view taken of this case by his hon. friend the hon. baronet, and said that care would be taken to remove the difficulties as far as practicable. The other clauses of the Bill were then gone through, and some amendments relating to minor details being added, the House resumed, and the report was ordered to be then received, and the Bill as amended to be printed, and the amendments to be reconsidered in committee on the 25th inst.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' REGISTRATION AND REGULATION BILL.

On the motion of Mr. GLADSTONE, this Bill was ordered to be recommitted. The House having gone into committee, Mr. GLADSTONE said, that the re-commitment of the Bill was rendered necessary by a point of form. Having consulted his right hon. and learned friend the Attorney-General for Ireland, he was now about to move that the provisions of the Bill be extended to that country.—Captain JONES suggested some delay, in the absence of several members who took an interest in the measure.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said, that the suggested delay was not necessary The clause for extending the provisions to Ireland was then put. Mr. GLADSTONE said, that it was the intention of the Government to have an office for registering Irish companies in Dublin, so that parties need not be at the expense and delay of sending from Ireland to London. The amendments and clauses were gone through without discussion. The House having resumed, the amendments were agreed to and the Bill was ordered to be read a third time on Thursday, at twelve o'clock, if then engrossed.

APPEAL IN CRIMINAL CASES.

WEDNESDAY, July 24.—Sir J. GRAHAM said, on moving the order of the day for the second reading of this Bill, he wished to make an earnest appeal to his hon. and learned friend the member for Cambridge for the postponement of the measure. On a former occasion, when the subject was under the notice of the House, he (Sir J. Graham), on the part of the Government, had to express some doubt as to the principle of the Bill. In a bill of that kind the principle was every thing. It was a great question for the Legislature to determine whether they should for the first time in the history of jurisprudence introduce in criminal cases, such as felony, and crimes of a higher description, an appeal to a higher tribunal. He had stated on a former occasion that he entertained grave doubts as to the expediency of introducing so great a change in the law. The House was now called upon to assent to the second reading of this Bill. They could not do so without at the same time affirming the principle of the measure. His hon. and learned friend asked the Government to approach the discussion of the Bill without their having the able assistance of his hon. and learned friend the Attorney-General, who was unavoidably absent from the House, and also without the Government having had sufficient time to consider maturely the provisions of the Bill. He promised his hon. and learned friend that he and his colleagues would give during the recess their most anxious consideration to the subject. If his hon. and learned friend persevered with the Bill, he (Sir J. Graham) should vote against its second reading, but in doing so the House must not consider that he pledged the Government against the principle of the measure. Should the House affirm the principle of the Bill, it would be the duty of the Legislature to proceed at once in carrying the law into effect. It would be impossible for the House, at this period of the session, to carry such a Bill through all its stages. If the Bill was not passed, great inconvenience would arise from the House affirming its principle. He regretted that he should be driven to the necessity of opposing the second reading of the Bill. He (Sir J. Graham) hoped that his hon. friend would exercise a wise discretion, and not press them to a division on the second reading of the Bill. He made this appeal on public grounds. —Mr. KELLY said he had felt earnestly desirous that this Bill should pass into a law this session of Parliament. He had previously stated, and he still believed, that a measure of the kind, in the present state of the administration of the law of the land was imperatively called for. He was not, however, insensible to the considerations urged by his right hon. friend against the second reading of the Bill. Considering the absence of her Majesty's Attorney-General, and of many members of the legal profession, hon. members of that House, as well as the absence of the judges, with whom, no doubt, the Government would like to confer on a matter of so much importance—considering, as well, the late period of the session, and the state of public business, he at once acceded to the suggestion of the right hon. baronet, and begged to postpone his Bill until next session. He trusted before then the subject would be well considered by her Majesty's Government, and that they (the Government) would be fully prepared to carry into effect a Bill to establish an appeal in criminal cases.

The Bill was according withdrawn.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE (MIDDLESEX) BILL.

THURSDAY, July 25.—Sir J. GRAHAM moved that the Criminal Justice (Middlesex) Bill be committed.—Mr. MACKINNON opposed the motion, and contended that the Bill was contrary to the established principle of the administration of the law in the counties of England, and that it conferred on the Secretary of State the right to appoint a chairman, with a paid salary of 1,200*l.* a year (he believed that was the intended salary), instead of allowing the magistrates to elect their own chairman, who filled the office heretofore gratuitously. This was one of the objectionable fruits of the too prevalent desire to effect centralization in every department possible. There was a great danger that the experiment having been tried with success in Westminster, the system of centralization would be carried further, and the jurisdiction of the magistrates be swamped in other counties by the appointment of a paid chairman of sessions.—Mr. W. WILLIAMS saw no reason that the chairman of these sessions should have a large salary in preference to the chairman of other sessions. He believed this Bill might be traced to a project the right hon. baronet entertained of altering the whole system of the prisons in this county. Unless it could be shewn that application had been made to the city for more extended means of trying criminals than were now afforded, and that the city authorities had refused to make that increase of means, he thought the Government were not justified in introducing a Bill like this; the country was already sufficiently burdened, and he was sorry that a sense of public duty compelled him to oppose this measure. The London Sessions lasted, on the average, not longer than four or five days, and often they did not occupy more than two days.—On the question that the Speaker do leave the chair, Mr. WAKLEY said the two hon. gentlemen who had preceded him had not stated any facts to shew why the House should not go into committee on this Bill. The bridewell at Westminster was nearly empty, because the magistrates of Westminster were the only magistrates who had the power to commit prisoners to that gaol. And who bore the expense? Not the city of Westminster, but the whole county of Middlesex. Then there was the House of Correction, where there were sometimes as many as 1,200 convicted prisoners confined, with immense dormitories; but, from the numbers, classification of the prisoners was next to impossible. Again, there was the New Prison, which would scarcely accommodate properly one-half of the prisoners who were committed for trial—there was there no classification—no arrangement of the prisoners which could be satisfactory to persons who were acquainted with what prison discipline ought to be. With regard to any separation, a chalk line was drawn, and the prisoners were told they were not to pass over that line, or, if they did, they would be subject to punishment. Ought such a system, he asked, to continue? He would say, whoever might have the appointment in question, let him be properly paid and receive a salary. At present, the cost of a trial in the Central Criminal Court was 2*l.* 10*s.*; whereas at the sessions it was 1*l.*; so that, besides the advantage under this Bill of saving time and having quick gaol deliveries, there would be a saving of three-fifths on the costs of the trials. In the last year there were upwards of 1,000 committals to Newgate for thefts under 20*s.* down to 2*d.* and in every case the costs were 2*l.* 10*s.* At the Easter Sessions the number of appeals was 93; at the last sessions they numbered 87,—many of them involving nice points of law. And the wonder was, that the chairmen of the sessions attended as often as they did, seeing that they were not paid. He was authorized by the member for Rochester, who had great experience in these matters, to say that the measure had his cordial support.—Mr. BROTHERTON presumed that the measure would be a great improvement in the administration of justice; but he saw that the Bill enacted that the chairman of quarter sessions should be paid out of the public purse. Now, the hon. member for Finsbury had shewn that there would be a great saving effected in respect to the costs of prosecutions, and he thought that was a reason why the chairman should be paid out of the county rates, as was done in the provinces.—Sir J. GRAHAM thought he could shew good reasons why the chairman of quarter sessions should be paid out of the public purse. The necessity for this Bill had long been admitted, and the only question in dispute was that of the right of appointment given, which he thought should rest in the Government. He had every possible respect for the unpaid magistracy of this country, who rendered most important services to the public, and the hon. member for Lymington must excuse him if he said he had done them great injustice. The hon. gentleman had said that he objected to the Bill, but that, from a personal regard he entertained for a certain party, he would vote for it. The hon. member for Finsbury had stated a variety of facts which shewed clearly that the state of the gaols was not creditable to the city of London, as in the case of Newgate. This measure took the most immediate and the cheapest remedy for the evil, by providing in the best possible manner for the speedy and frequent administration of justice. The Middlesex magistrates committed either to the Central Criminal Court or the Middlesex quarter sessions. The present system was replete with absurd regulations. Metropolitan magistrates only could commit to Newgate; and so in respect to other gaols the same anomalies existed. This Bill remedied these evils. It gave no new powers to the metropolitan magistrates, except that in cases where the offences were not of a very heinous nature they would have the power to commit to the Middlesex sessions. The crowded state of Newgate would cease, and a great saving would be effected to the county. He agreed with the hon. member for Finsbury, that the time had come when the evening sittings of the Central Criminal Court should be abolished; for they were any thing but conducive to the credit of the parties concerned or the fair administration of justice. Considering the part which he had taken in this transaction—the object which he had in view, and the support which the measure had generally received from the magistracy of the county of Middlesex and of the City of London—he hoped they might be permitted to go into committee to discuss the details of the Bill. —The House then went into committee.—Mr. WILLIAMS wished to make an observation in answer to the statement of the hon. member for Finsbury. That statement was made in the preamble of a Bill which had been introduced in 1831, to effect every object of this Bill, and, amongst other things, to give a salary to the chairman of the Middlesex Sessions. That Bill went before a committee of the House, and the House rejected the Bill on the ground that the preamble had not been proved, viz. that by the appointment of new officers a saving would be effected in the rates of the county of Middlesex.—Clauses up to 6 were agreed to. On clause 7 being proposed, which provides for the payment of the salary of the chairman—Mr. BROTHERTON moved to leave out the words "out of the consolidated fund of Great Britain and Ireland," for the purpose of introducing the words, "the county rate."—Sir J. GRAHAM said if the motion of the hon gentleman were agreed to it would defeat the Bill. They could not touch the county rates except by a private Bill. If the hon. gentleman succeeded, the Bill ceased to be a public one, and must be at once withdrawn.—The committee then divided, when there appeared—

The clause was then agreed to. The remaining clauses were also agreed to, and the Bill was ordered to be reported on Friday.

THE NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.

The Select Committee appointed to inquire into the present state of the building of the new Houses of Parliament, and to report thereon to the House, have, pursuant to the order of the House, examined the matters to them referred, and have agreed to the following report:—

Your Committee have examined Mr. Barry as to the progress already made in the buildings of the new Houses of Parliament, and have endeavoured to ascertain from him the probable time that will elapse before the whole of the works can be completed, and the period at which the two Houses may be occupied for the transaction of public business.

He has stated to them, that, were it urgently required, the Houses, and a certain number of committee-rooms, and other offices, might be prepared for occupation at the commencement of the year 1846; but your Committee do not feel themselves justified in affirming that such occupation could take place without inconvenience to the members, or impediment to the further progress and satisfactory completion of the building; and they think it right to observe, that the general arrangements for ventilation cannot be completed till the commencement of the year 1847.

Your Committee have examined the Speaker, the Clerk of the House, and the Sergeant-at-Arms, as to various alterations which have been lately proposed in the interior arrangements of the House of Commons, and of some portions of the building immediately adjoining, and have to report that Mr. Barry will be able to adopt several valuable suggestions which the experience of the officers of the House has enabled them to offer, without any increase of the expenditure already authorized.

Your Committee have examined various parties as to the course hitherto adopted by Mr. Barry, with reference to alterations of the interior arrangements shewn in the plan approved by committees of both Houses in 1836. They impute no blame to Mr. Barry for that course, and have every reason to believe that all the alterations hitherto made have conduced to the convenience and general effect of the building; but looking to the misapprehension that appears to have prevailed as to these proceedings hitherto, they are prepared to recommend that in future Mr. Barry should make a half-yearly report of the progress of the works to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests; and should also submit to that board any alterations which may hereafter be deemed advisable, and accompany such report with plans of the alterations proposed.

Your Committee further recommend, that as several alterations, entailing more or less expense, have recently been sanctioned by the Government, the Chief Commissioner of Woods shall, at the commencement of the next session of Parliament, lay upon the table of the House of Commons a statement of the total estimated cost of the building, according to the latest plan approved.

Your Committee also suggest that a plan, prepared by Mr. Barry under their direction, and exhibiting the present state of the building, and the alterations adopted up to the present time, shall be signed by the Chief Commissioner of Woods, and deposited in the libraries of both Houses.

July 4, 1844.

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

COUNTY RATES.—An abstract of some accounts, presented on the 15th of April, 1844, shewing the total valuation of each county, and also the amount of county-rate levied in 1842 in England and Wales, &c., was ordered by the House of Commons to be printed on Monday evening last, and is now before us. Commencing with England alone, we find that the gross total acreage of all the counties in that portion of the united kingdom amounts to 32,284,770; the gross total number of inhabited houses in the year 1841, to 2,755,710; the average number of houses to an acre, 1 in 12; the population, according to the census taken in the year 1841, to 11,995,138; the average number of acres to each person, to 2; the gross total valuation, to the sum of 48,169,588*l.* (the dates of valuation extending from 1739 up to the present time); the gross total amount of county-rates, levied in the year 1842, to the sum of 666,976*l.*, being an average proportion of the county-rate to the valuation of 3½d. in the pound sterling. The average amount of the county-rate per acre was 4¾d., and, per head, 10¾d. In Wales, the following are the grand totals:—viz. acreage, 4,752,000; number of inhabited houses in 1841, 188,229; the average number of houses to an acre, 1 in 25; the population, according to the census taken in 1841, 911,603; the average number of acres to each person, [illegible]; the total valuation, 2,443,510*l.*; the amount of county-rate levied in the year 1842, 36,549*l.*, being a proportion of the county-rate to the valuation of 3½d. in the pound sterling; the average amount of the county-rate per acre, 1¾d.; and per head, 9½d. Thus the gross totals for both England and Wales will stand as follows, viz.:—Acreage, 37,036,770; number of inhabited houses in 1841, 2,943,939; average number of houses to an acre, 1 in 12; the population in the year 1841, 15 [illegible]06,741; the average number of acres to each person, 2¼; the total amount of valuation, 50,613,099*l.*; the total amount of county-rates in the year 1842, 703,526*l.*; the proportion of the county-rate to the valuation, 3½d. in the pound sterling; the amount of the county-rate per acre, 4½d.; and per head, 10½d. The amount of the acreage and valuation in each of the English counties respectively is stated as follows—viz. Bedford, 296,320 acres, 139,584*l.*; Berks, 481,280 acres, 652,916*l.*; Bucks, 472,320 acres, 636,027*l.*; Cambridgeshire (including the Ise of Ely), 584,480 acres, 691,190*l.*; Chester, 673,280 acres, 1,031,168*l.*; Cornwall, 856,770 acres (no total valuation given); Cumberland, 974,720 acres, 712,690*l.*; Derby, 657,920 acres, 912,374*l.*; Devon, 1,654,400 acres, 808,808*l.*; Dorset, 643,840 acres, 723,251*l.*; Durham, 702,800 acres, 905,644*l.*; Essex, 981,120 acres, 93[illegible],882*l.*; Glocester, 805,120 acres, 1,383,328*l.*; Hereford, 552,320 acres, 627,137*l.*; Hertford, 403,200 acres, 624,687*l.*; Huntingdon, 238,080 acres, 279,570*l.*; Kent, 996,480 acres, 1,747,946*l.*; Lancaster, 1,130,240 acres, 6,192,067*l.*; Lincoln, 1,671,040 acres, 1,815,413*l.*; Middlesex, 180,480 acres, 6,047,886*l.*; Monmouth, 317,440 acres, 453,751*l.*; Norfolk, 1,295,360 acres, 1,778,482*l.*; Northampton, 650,240 acres, 920,229*l.*; Northumberland, 1,197,440 acres, 982,809*l.*; Nottingham, 535,680 acres, 687,580*l.*; Oxford, 483,840 acres, 641,959*l.*; Rutland, 95,360 acres (no valuation given); Salop, 859,520 acres, 1,002,210*l.*; Somerset, 1,052,800 acres (no valuation given); Southampton, 1,040,000 acres, 1,077,297*l.*; Stafford, 757,760 acres, 1,484,090*l.*; Suffolk, 969,600 acres, 1,049,292*l.*; Surrey, 485,760 acres, 2,219,811*l.*; Sussex, 938,240 acres, 870,364*l.*; Warwick, 574,080 acres, 1,069,421*l.*; Westmoreland, 487,680 acres, 256,303*l.*; Wiltshire, 874,880 acres, 1,165,789*l.*; Worcester, 462,720 acres, 912,863*l.*; and Yorkshire (inclusive of all the ridings) 3,735,040 acres, 3,383,435*l.*

POSTMASTERS-GENERAL.—Mr. R. Wallace, M.P. for Greenock, moved recently for a return of the names, rank, and date of appointment of the Postmasters-General, from the earliest period up to the present time. We find that the following noblemen and gentlemen are included amongst the list of Postmasters-General in England appointed between the year 1678 (in the reign of Charles II.) and the year 1841—viz. Sir R. Cotton, Sir John Evelyn, Lord Cornwallis, Lord Lovel (afterwards the Earl of Leicester), the Earl of Besborough, 1759; Hon. R. Hampden, 1765; the Earl of Egmont, 1763; Lord Grantham, 1766; Lord Hillsborough, 1766; Earl of Candwick, 1768; Lord Hyde, 1768; Lord Le Despencer, 1768; Viscount Barrington, 1782; the Earl of Tankerville, 1783; Lord Foley, 1784; the Earl of Clarendon, 1786; the Earl of Westmoreland, 1790; the Earl of Chesterfield, 1794; Lord Auckland, 1799; Lord Gower, 1801; Lord C. Spencer, 1804; the Duke of Montrose, 1806; the Earl of Buckinghamshire, 1806; Lord Carysfort, 1897; the Earl of Chichester, 1814; the Earl of Clancarty, 1816; the Marquis of Salisbury, 1823; Lord F. Montagu, 1827; the Duke of Manchester, 1827; the Duke of Richmond, 1830; the Marquis of Conyngham, [illegible]834; Lord Maryborough, 1834-35; the Marquis of Conyngham again, 1835; the Earl of Lichfield, 1835; and the present noble Postmaster-General, Viscount Lowther, who was sworn in on the 11th of September, 1841.

GOLD COIN AND BULLION — BANK OF ENGLAND.—Some interesting returns on the above subject have been recently moved for by Sir W. Clay, bart. and Mr. G. F. Muntz, the members for the Tower Hamlets and Birmingham. They are now printed. It appears that during the first five months of the present year, the amounts of gold coin and gold bullion held by the Bank of England were, respectively, as follows:—January 6, 6,574,000*l.* and 6,848,000*l.*; February 3, 6,239,000*l.* and 7,613,000*l.*; March 2, 6,309,000*l.* and 8,029,000*l.*; March 30, 6,790,000*l.* and 7,608,000*l.*; April 27, 6,190,000*l.* and 7,638,000*l.*; and May 25, 6,173,000*l.* and 7,764,000*l.* In 1843, the amount of gold coin fluctuated between 4,120,000*l.* and 5,621,000*l.* and the quantity of gold bullion between 5,247,000*l.* and 6,048,000*l.* Of the gold bullion sent by the Bank of England to the Mint to be coined since the passing of the Act 4 & 5 Victoria, cap. 50, the weight was 71,718lb. and the value 3,351,049*l.* whilst the average length of time which elapsed between the sending of the bullion to the Mint and its return in coin was 30 days. The total quantity of bullion in the coffers of the Bank on the 4th of November last, amounted to 12,036,000*l.* of which 5,992,000*l.* was in gold bullion, 4,244,000*l.* in cold coin, 1,737,000*l.* in silver bullion, and 63,000*l.* in silver coin. The total number of Bank-notes in circulation on the 1st of November, 1843 (dated prior to the 1st of November, 1839), amounted to 72,266, and the value represented thereby to 908,855*l.* Of these 72,266 notes, 39,065 were for 5*l.* each, 23,356 for 10*l.* each, 5,552 for 20*l.* each, 676 for 30*l.* each, 420 for 40*l.* each, 2,015 for 50*l.* each, 871 for 100*l.* each, 67 for 200*l.* each, 12 for 300*l.* each, 210 for 500*l.* each, and 22 for 1,000*l.* each. No Bonus has ever been divided to the proprietors of the Bank of England for bank-notes lost or destroyed. Between the 4th of March, 1843, and the 5th of January, 1844, a total amount of 695,578*l.* was excluded from the returns of notes in circulation (as lost or destroyed), of which the sum of 426,321*l.* was represented by notes of 5*l.* and upwards, and 269,257*l.* by notes of 1*l.* and 2*l.* The total amount of notes which the directors estimate as loss from the establishment of the Bank in the year 1694 to the 5th of January, 1844, is 507,279*l.* All the notes comprised in this total have been outstanding for more than thirty years. The additional sum of 188,299*l.* which makes up the total of 695,578*l.* mentioned above as excluded from the returns, has been outstanding for more than 15 years, and is, therefore, considered to be out of circulation; but the Bank is, of course, liable to pay every note that has been issued.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE assizes now in progress throughout the country are remarkable for a general deficiency of legal business. Certainly actions at law have not increased with the population. Whether the people are poorer or wiser, or the law itself more settled, and consequently more easily applied to facts, is a problem not without interest. Undoubtedly men are not so fond of going to law as they used to be, and they prefer arbitration by friends to a settlement by lawyers. But the attorney's best practice does not consist in suits, and what he has lost in their decrease, he has gained tenfold in the increase of other and more agreeable branches of his business, unavoidably consequent upon a complication of affairs produced by the mercantile and speculative habits of the age.

THE PRISONS OF MIDDLESEX.

The following is the report of the prison inspectors, made at the last meeting of Middlesex magistrates:—

"London, May 25, 1844.

"SIR,—We beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 13th March last, transmitting to us, by direction of Secretary Sir James Graham, a correspondence with the Chairman of the Quarter Sessions for the county of Middlesex, relative to providing for the separate confinement of untried prisoners at the Clerkenwell Prison and the Westminster Bridewell, in consequence of a Bill which it is intended to introduce into Parliament for the more frequent trial of offenders in this county; and desiring that we would confer with a deputation of magistrates on the subject, and afterwards report to Sir James Graham on the extent of accommodation which can be afforded.

"In return, we beg to state that, agreeably to Sir James Graham's desire, we have communicated with the deputation of magistrates appointed to confer with us upon this subject.

"It is due to the visiting justices of the Clerkenwell and Westminster prisons to state that every arrangement which the nature of the buildings will admit has been made to prevent, as much as possible, the serious evils which now prevail in these gaols from the association of untried prisoners. No remedial measure, however, can be adopted in either of the prisons, owing to the defective plans on which they have been constructed.

"We are of opinion that the prison at Clerkenwell cannot be made available for the separate confinement of the number of prisoners likely to be committed to it, in pursuance of the legitimate measure now in contemplation, without extensive alterations and additions; and, having given our best consideration to the subject, with a due regard to the future as well as the present interests of the county, we consider that it would be far preferable that the magistrates should erect a new gaol at Clerkenwell, rather than have recourse to alterations and additions which, while they would be attended with considerable expense, would but partially effect the desired object.

"Having carefully inspected the common gaol of Westminster Bridewell, we are of opinion that arrangements for the separate confinement of the untried can only be made by dividing the present day-rooms and sleeping-rooms into cells of proper dimensions, and by throwing two of the present ordinary cells (which are too small for the separate confinement of a prisoner by day) into one. By these means the requisite number of cells may doubtless be obtained. It is, however, but right to state that, from the unfavourable nature of the plan of this prison, the adaptation of the several rooms and cells to separate confinement will be attended with difficulty, and that when the alterations shall be completed, the common gaol of this prison will still be in many respects faulty, and very inferior in efficiency to gaols erected expressly for carrying into effect the separate system.

"Under these circumstances, we are induced to recommend that the idea of adapting the Westminster Bridewell to the separate confinement of the untried, be abandoned; that no untried prisoner, or prisoner committed in default of bail, be sent to this prison; that all prisoners of these descriptions belonging to the county of Middlesex and the city of Westminster, be committed to the gaol proposed to be erected in Clerkenwell; and that, consequently, the Westminster Bridewell be henceforth used exclusively as a house of correction for convicted prisoners.

"It appears from the inclosed return, furnished to us by the chairman of the sessions, that under the proposed system for the more frequent holding of sessions, the average number of persons committed for trial, for re-examination, and for want of bail, for whom it will be necessary to provide separate cells, will amount to about two hundred. In forming, however, an estimate of numbers, for the erection of a prison, provision should be made for the greatest number who may probably be confined therein, and the plans should be such as to admit of the prison being enlarged at a future time, should the numbers committed prove greater than those originally estimated.

"With reference to the extent of accommodation which it is desirable to provide in the gaol proposed to be erected, we feel that this is a point on which the magistrates are more competent than ourselves to form a judgment. We would wish to submit to the magistrates the inclosed plan (admitting of extension) for 250 prisoners, which may serve as a guide to their architect when instructed to prepare a more elaborate design.

"With reference to the plan now submitted, we beg to remark, that as the object in view is to provide separate cells for prisoners, whose average terms of confinement previous to trial will not, as we are informed, exceed a week, nor a month in the case of prisoners committed for want of bail, we have felt ourselves justified in reducing the size of the cells from the ordinary standard to eleven feet by seven, and nine feet high. If, however, there be a probability of prisoners being confined in these cells, or any number of them, for periods longer than a month at a time, we beg to recommend that the dimensions of such cells be of the ordinary standard, viz. thirteen feet by seven feet, and nine feet high.

"We further beg to observe, in relation to any plan of building which the magistrates may adopt for the separate confinement of prisoners, that for the prevention of intercourse, it is indispensable that the windows of the cells should be closed, and the partition-walls of the cells such as to render impracticable oral communication from cell to cell, except by means which, by attracting the attention of the officers, would insure detection; that the cells should be ventilated, warmed, supplied with water, and provided with water-closets, as at Pentonville prison; and that the yards should be so divided as to allow of each prisoner taking exercise alone.

"We are well aware that a measure of a nature so extensive as the erection of a gaol in the county of Middlesex ought not to be proposed on insufficient grounds, nor without mature consideration. The vice and depravity, however, arising from the association to which the untried are exposed in the Clerkenwell and Westminster gaols, are deeply injurious, not only to the individual who is the subject of the imprisonment, but to the best interests of society at large. Remedial measures are imperatively called for; and although they will, doubtless, involve a considerable outlay, we are persuaded that the expenditure will be profitably incurred, inasmuch as it will materially contribute to the protection of property and the prevention of crime, and thus directly promote, in an economical, as well as in a moral point of view, the public welfare.

"That the adoption of the separate system of prison discipline is calculated to produce these beneficial effects, may be inferred from the active measures now in course of operation for the introduction of that system throughout the country. Within the last few years every county gaol which has undergone any essential enlargement has been adapted to individual separation, and in no instance has a prison been built but on this principle of construction. Prisons for separate confinement have been built at Pentonville, Perth, Bath, Reading, Usk, Hereford, Parkhust, Peterborough, and Scarborough; while the erection of new prisons has been determined on, or is in progress, at Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds, Wakefield, Aylesbury, Bedford, Bridgewater, Ely, Lincoln, Northampton, Springfield, Tiverton, and Wisbech. Extensive alteration, and additions for the enforcement of the system have been made, or are making, at the prisons at Shrewsbury, Knutsford, Morpeth, Preston, Hereford, Worcester, Shepton Mallett, Walsingham, Stafford, Gloucester, Northleach, Lawford's Gate, Leicester, Durham, Swansea, Swaffham, Nottingham, and Portsmouth.

"The number of cells already built, or about to be constructed for, or adapted to, separate confinement in this country, amounts to upwards of 8,000; and we feel justified in stating our conviction that the day is not distant when the individual separation of prisoners will be the established system of prison discipline throughout England. Under these circumstances, we venture to express a hope that the proceedings which the magistrates of Middlesex may adopt on the present occasion, may be of an enlarged and liberal character, in accordance with the enlightened views of prison construction which now so generally prevail, and commensurate with the vast and growing interests of the metropolitan county.—We are, &c. (Signed)

THE WILLS FORGERIES.

The Lord Mayor called the attention of the Court of Aldermen to the conduct of John and Daniel Forrester, the officers who had for many years distinguished themselves by extraordinary activity, zeal, integrity, and talent, in cases of great public and commercial importance connected with crime, and who had lately succeeded in detecting and exposing a conspiracy conducted with singular judgment and ability. His lordship alluded to the will forgery cases, in which these two very remarkable men had displayed such sagacity and vigilance as excited the surprise of the able solicitors to the Bank, who conducted these extraordinary prosecutions. (Cries of "Hear, hear.") He was of opinion that the Court, every member of which was well acquainted with the merits of these two excellent and indefatigable officers, was bound in justice to them to consider their claims in committee, and report the result to the Court. (Cheers.)

Sir P. Laurie said, he had had much experience of the two Forresters, and was proud of having specially recommended them upon every occasion on which the exercise of ingenuity and of silent power was necessary, in tracing a case from the first motion up to conviction. (Hear, hear.) He had before the Parliamentary Committee spoken of the necessity of keeping these two officers, and Roe, the Guildhall officer, independent of the authority of the police, and every thing which had occurred since confirmed him in the opinion he then expressed. He could, in fact, use no language which could too strongly express his feeling upon the subject, and he was much gratified, as a magistrate, to do justice to men who combined with a perfect knowledge of their business, the highest degree of humanity, and an humble and respectful bearing towards all with whom they came in contact. (Hear, hear.)

Sir J. Pirie, and Aldermen T. Wood, Copeland, Brown and Humphery, also bore testimony to the very great merits of John and Daniel Forrester; and,

The Court unanimously agreed to refer the matter to a committee.

PARLIAMENTARY BILLS.

The following is the substance of the report upon the Criminal Justice (Middlesex) Bill, the Corporate Officers Bill, and the Charitable Trusts Bill.—

"That the Bill for the better Administration of Criminal Justice in Middlesex is to enable her Majesty to appoint an assistant judge to preside at the sessions of the peace for the county of Middlesex, for the trial of felonies and misdemeanors, &c. This Bill will relieve the Central Criminal Court in a considerable degree, and will, therefore, diminish the period of the sitting of the Central Criminal Court as well as the expenses of the same. That your committee do, therefore, approve of the said Bill, and have directed the Remembrancer to promote the insertion in the Bill of a power for the judges of the Central Criminal Court to commit offenders to the House of Correction, in Cold-bath-fields, as the common gaol of London and Middlesex, in execution of their judgment.

"That the Bill to Facilitate Admission to Corporate Offices is to extend the provisions of an Act of the 1st and 2nd year of the reign of her present Majesty, entitled 'An Act for the Relief of Quakers, Moravians and Separatists, elected to municipal offices,' to persons of other religious denominations, and provides that the form of the declaration contained in the said Acts may be taken by persons of other religious denominations. That the effect of this Bill will be to render persons of all religious denominations whatever eligible for corporate offices, and your committee have deemed it advisable to report the same without offering any opinion upon this important subject.

"That with respect to the Charitable Trusts Bill they have directed the Remembrancer to procure the exemption of the charities under the control of the corporation of London from the operation of the Bill, and have directed notices to be given to the several companies that a measure of this stringent nature is now under the consideration of Parliament."

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY LORDS LIEUTENANT.—Lancashire.—J. Clarke, jun. esq. to be Deputy Lieutenant. Radnorshire.—The Hon. R. E. Plunkett to be Deputy Lieutenant.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

No subject of special moment calls for notice here. The very valuable summary below of the decisions of the Terms lately closed will direct the reader's attention to the most recent authorities on every subject. It will be observed that the Report of the YORKSHIRE LAW SOCIETY, published last week, notices the great utility to the Profession of the Quarter Sessions in counties and boroughs being advertised in the LAW TIMES. Those of our friends who think so too will, perhaps, do as the Yorkshire Society did, memorialize their own county magistrates and town councils on the subject, stating its importance to the Profession, and doubtless the application would be equally successful, for in Yorkshire orders to announce the sessions in these columns were immediately given by the magistracy.

REVIEW OF THE CASES DECIDED IN ALL THE COURTS OF COMMON LAW,

During Easter and Trinity Terms and Vacations, 1844.

EXECUTION.

Partnership effects.—Our review of Hilary Term was published before the report of Johnson v. Evans (2 Law T. 459) had appeared, but we deem that case too important to be omitted, and, therefore, insert it out of its proper place. Under a writ of fi. fa. against one of two partners, the sheriff had taken possession of the partnership effects, and whilst he was in possession a writ against the two partners jointly was delivered to him. He did not enter under this second writ, or even deliver it to the officer in possession. The partner against whom the first writ had issued became bankrupt, and after the fiat, the sheriff sold the whole of the property, both several and joint, of both partners, to satisfy the two writs. The question was, whether he had any right to sell the partnership property under the second writ. It was held that he had not; and the reasons deserve to be stated at some length. It is true that the sheriff, under a writ against one partner may seize the whole of the partnership property, but he only sells a moiety, and the purchaser becomes tenant in common with the solvent partner. The goods of the solvent partner are necessarily seized, but the property in them is unchanged. The decisions, therefore, which shew that a sheriff being once in possession need not again seize under any subsequent writs against the same defendant do not apply to the case of a partnership, and he is bound, therefore, to bring the execution against the partnership within the protection of the statute by a seizure independently of that already made under the first writ. For, said Tindal, C. J.—

"We think the statute meant by the words execution served and levied by seizure on the goods, a real and substantial seizure for the purpose of satisfying the execution by actual sale, and a seizure of the whole, for the purpose of selling a moiety only, never can be a levying by a seizure out of the other moiety, for it never was or could be intended in this case to be a seizing or levying, unless the sheriff had seized under the second writ delivered to him, which in this case he never did, there not being any actual seizure of that one moiety by the second officer, nor any delivery of the warrant to the first officer, who was already in possession."

Sale.—A sheriff's sale under an execution is, primâ facie, considered to be for ready money and immediate delivery, and the sheriff, therefore, is not justified, after he has sold as much as will apparently satisfy the writ, in going on to sell more, on the speculation that it is possible that the actual delivery of such goods as are already sold may be prevented by loss or accident. (Aldred v. Constable, 3 Law T. 299.)

Variance.—A writ of execution under a rule for judgment must correspond in the body of the writ with the judgment rule, or the variance will be fatal, and cannot be amended, although the indorsement may be correct. (Brooks v. Hodgson, 3 Law T. 162.)

EXECUTOR.

Right to sue for breaches of covenant.—In Raymond v. Fitch (2 Cr. M. & R. 588), all the authorities upon the right of the personal representative to sue upon covenants entered into with the deceased were considered, and the principle established by that case, together with the recent one of Ricketts v. Lloyd (3 Law T. 78; 13 L. J. 195, Ex.), is, that he may sue upon all covenants broken in the lifetime of the deceased, with or without special damages, except such as run with the land, and therefore enure to the heir in whose life the substantial damage takes place subsequent to the death of the ancestor. In the principal case, the executor sued upon a covenant to pay in case the tenant neglected to repair the premises.

Liability on false plea.—The books are somewhat obscure upon the right mode of entering judgment against an executor who has pleaded a plea false within his own knowledge, and it has been said that he will be in consequence liable for the whole amount sued for, without reference to the assets in his hands. (See 2 Chitty's Archb. 880; and Williams on Executors.) Harvey v. Burgess (3 Law T. 54, 74) is, therefore, to be noticed, in which the Court of Queen's Bench, after taking time to consider, decided, that an executor de son tort, who had pleaded ne unques executor, was only liable for the amount of assets in his hands.

INDICTMENT, COMPROMISE OF.

All the cases upon the subject were examined in Keir v. Leeman (3 Law T. 299), and the law appears to be, that where the offence is of such a nature that the injured party may sue at law and recover damages in an action brought in respect of it, there the indictment may be compromised, for in such case the injury is frequently more of a private than of a public nature. But if the offence is entirely of a public nature, so that no other than a criminal proceeding can be had upon it, a compromise cannot be come to, for no agreement can be valid which has the effect of stifling a public prosecution, for the rights of the public cannot be sacrificed to private advantage.

INSURANCE.

From Philips v. Irving (3 Law T. 55; 13 L. J. 145, C.P.), we learn the construction that the Courts will put upon a policy of insurance on what is called a "seeking" ship. The Court of Common Pleas there held, that it is no deviation for such a ship to wait in port for a cargo such a time as, under all the circumstances existing at the port where she happens to be, may be reasonable to enable her to obtain a remunerating freight. The time will, therefore, vary, according to the facts in each case, and in the principal case a delay from June 3 to January 10 was held to be reasonable.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Covenant to pay taxes.—The decision in Payne v. Burridge (3 Law T. 78; 13 L.J. 190 Ex.), although arising only upon a local Act, will be a guide in many other similar cases. The tenant covenanted to pay a certain rent, free from all parliamentary, parochial, and other rates, assessments, deductions, or abatements, and also to pay all taxes, rates, duties, levies, assessments, and payments whatsoever, which then were, or during the said term might be, rated, levied, assessed, or imposed upon or payable in respect of the house occupied by him. It was held, that this included a payment under a local Act, although the words of the Act authorized the tenant to pay the charges and deduct them from the rent, and that therefore the tenant was not entitled to deduct them from his landlord's rent, and that there would be no difference whether the Act passed before or after the demise.

Estoppel.—The judgment in Webb v. Austin (3 Law T. 282) contains much instruction on this subject, and contradicts what, from the marginal note, might be supposed to have been decided in Whitton v. Peacock (2 B. N. C. 411). The question was, whether a mortgagor could, with the concurrence of the mortgagee, make out a good title to a term which had been underlet by the mortgagor after the mortgage, the underlessee having entered into the same covenants as those in the original lease. It was objected that by the mortgage the termor had parted with all his legal interest in the term, and that the purchaser from him would be unable to enforce the covenants against the underlessee. The Court of Common Pleas held, however, that the lease would operate by way of estoppel, both in favour of the lessor and of his assignee, and that consequently a good title in every respect would be made by the concurrence of the mortgagor and mortgagee. The case of Gouldsworth v. Knights (11 M. & W. 337) was referred to, and in the judgment there delivered by Parke, B. he says of Whitton v. Peacock—

"The marginal note is very inaccurate. The point decided was this:—A copyholder devised his estate to another, without surrendering to the use of his will. The devisee of the devisee, who, of course, had no estate at all, either legal or equitable, demised part of the copyhold by deed, and the lessee covenanted to pay rent and assigned the lease. The heir-at-law of the devisor afterwards surrendered to the use of the second devisee, who afterwards demised another part of the copyhold to the same lessee, and instead of granting a fresh lease to the lessor of the part before demised, took a covenant from him to perform the covenants in that lease. The lessor afterwards surrendered the copyhold to another, and the question was, whether the surrenderee could maintain an action on these covenants against the assignee of the lessee. The Court held, most properly, that no such action would lie. No reasons are given, but there is clearly a satisfactory one, for the reversion by estoppel on the first lease was not a copyhold transferable by surrender and admittance."

Eviction — Payment. — There cannot be an eviction to justify the non-payment of rent after the rent has become due under the demise to the party who afterwards sues; and to substantiate a plea of payment made under compulsion, it must be shewn that the payment was made to some person expressly appointed, as in law implied to be the special agent of the plaintiff, as to a mortgagee, in Pope v. Biggs (9 B & C. 245), or to discharge a distinct incumbrance upon the land as a ground-rent, in Sapsford v. Fletcher (4 T. Rep. 511); therefore, in debt for rent, a plea as to parcel, &c., that before the premises were demised to the defendant by the plaintiff, the plaintiff had conveyed all her interest therein to A; that plaintiff, up to the time of the demise, was in possession of the premises; that after the commencement of the suit A gave notice to the defendant and demanded payment of such portion of the rent reserved as might, on a just apportionment, be found due, and threatened the defendant, in case of non-payment, to eject him and put the law in force; that the sum of 40*l.* 10s. was the sum due on a just apportionment, &c., wherefore the defendant paid the same to A was held bad as a plea of eviction, and also bad as a plea of payment. (Boodle v. Cambell, 3 Law T. 102, 13 L. J. 112, C.P.)

Reversion.—Where an underlease has been made for a longer term than that which the lessor possesses, if the underlessee lets for a less term, and the tenancy of the original lessor continues and lasts over the term granted by him, the underlessee will have a reversion, which he can assign; and the assignee will be able to sue upon the covenants in the second underlease. But the proper description of the plaintiff's title will not be an absolute tenancy for the less term, but a tenancy, subject to be divested by the determination of the tenancy for the longer term. (Oxley v. James, 3 Law T. 222.) Here a tenant from year to year made a lease for thirty-four years, and the lessee underlet for twelve years, and then assigned his reversion, and the assignee was held to be entitled to sue upon a covenant to repair.

Surrender by operation of law.—We shall only notice briefly the very important case of Lyon v. Reed (3 Law T. 302), referring our readers to the verbatim judgment there given, and the full report of the case which will be published in the Real Property Cases. The principle of the decision is to be found in the meaning of a surrender by operation of law. This term is applied to cases where the owner of a particular estate has been a party to some act, the validity of which he is by law afterwards estopped from disputing, and which would not be valid if his particular estate had continued to exist. It has nothing to do with intention. An agreement consequently to an act done by the reversioner will not amount to a surrender in law. In accordance, indeed, with the cases of Stone v. Whiting (2 Stark. 236) and Thomas v. Cooke (2 B. & Ald. 119), it may be held, although in a Court of Error these decisions might, perhaps, be overruled, that where the estates dealt with are corporeal and in possession, and of which demises may therefore be made by parol or writing, and where there is an open and notorious shifting of the actual possession, there may be a surrender in law by mere agreement; but with respect to reversions and incorporeal hereditaments, which pass only by deed, the Court of Exchequer in the principal case decided that the ancient rules of the common law must be adhered to; and distinguished the case of Walker v. Richardson (2 M. & W. 882), which had been strongly relied upon in the argument as contrary to their view.

Right of tenant to throw up premises for non-repair.—Surplice v. Farnsworth (3 Law T. 181) must be mentioned in connection with the cases of Sutton v. Temple and Hart v. Windsor (2 Law T. 447, and 12 M. & W. 52, 68). As, according to those cases, there is no implied contract on the part of the lessor of a house taken for habitation, or land for occupation, that the house or land is in a reasonably fit state for habitation or occupation; so this case decides, what upon some of the older cases was open to doubt, that a tenant is not entitled to throw up the premises taken, however unfit for habitation they may become, from want of repairs which the landlord ought properly to have done, or which he has expressly contracted to do. (See Arden v. Pullen, 10 M. & W. 321.) Smith v. Marrable (11 M. & W. 5) is still a stumbling-block to us, and we cannot think that it would be safe to rely upon it after these cases. In Hart v. Windsor, Parke, B. said—"We are under no necessity of deciding in the present case whether that of Smith v. Marrable be law or not. It cannot be supported on the grounds on which I rested my judgment."

MORTMAIN, STATUTE OF.

Strict attention should be paid to the forms required by the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, to render conveyances for charitable purposes valid, as will be seen by the judgment in Doe dem. Barbour v. Munro (3 Law T. 77). A party had, by lease and release, conveyed lands to trustees upon the trusts to be declared in a deed of the following day. The declaration of trust was duly executed, attested, and enrolled, according to the statute, but the conveyance was not; and it was held that the conveyance was therefore void.

PARTNERSHIP.

Slander.—If one partner be slandered in the way of his trade, so that the special damage accrues to the firm, and not to him individually, the whole firm must sue, or a plea of nonjoinder will be good. (Robinson v. Martin, 3 Law T. 125.) For other cases relating to partnership, see supra, "Contract" and "Execution."

PATENT.

Title.—In Cook v. Pearce (2 Law T. 371, 418) the rule was laid down that a patent would not be bad merely from the title being larger than the specification, and Nickels v. Haslam (3 Law T. 76), in the Common Pleas, is to the same effect. The title was for "improvements in the manufacture of plaited fabrics," and the specification claimed a new mode or process in the manufacture of the fabric.

First Inventor.—The wood pavement patent taken out by Mr. Stead has given rise to an important decision upon this subject. It appeared that although Stead had made the discovery for himself, yet that many years before a letter had been published in a periodical containing a description of a plan very much resembling that afterwards adopted by Stead. The counsel for the defendant insisted that the judge ought to have directed the jury that the communication of the invention to the public, although never acted upon, and never seen or used directly or indirectly by the plaintiff, would of itself prevent him from being considered the "first inventor." The Court of Common Pleas held that, although there was no case to that effect, yet the dicta of Alderson B. in Carpenter v. Smith (9 M. & W. 30), and Lord Lyndhurst in 1 Webster, 708, and the reason of the thing brought them to the conclusion that a prior publication, so as to make the facts a part of the public stock of information, would invalidate a subsequent patent; for the public could not be precluded from the right of using such information as they already possessed at the time of the patent being granted. It will still be a question for the jury to decide whether the knowledge has become a part of the public stock of information. (Stead v. Williams, 3 Law T. 262, at Nisi Prius, 2 Law T. 31.)

PLEADING.

The mere technical points of pleading are hardly within the scope of our design in these reviews. We may observe, however, that it is now settled that de injuriâ may be replied in debt. (Cowper v. Garbutt, 3 Law T. 182; 8 Jur. 541.) Whitehead v. Harrison (3 Law T. 299) also deserves a passing notice, as illustrating the advantage of a speedy report of the decisions. From a report of this case in the last number of Dowling & Lowndes, it would appear that a traverse of the bailment in detinue would be allowed as an issuable plea; but the plea in that case was afterwards demurred to, and decided by the Court of Queen's Bench to be bad. (3 Law T. 299.) In future, therefore, it will not be allowed.

PRACTICE.

Under this head we have, as usual, many cases to insert.

Affidavits—Jurat.—It must be borne in mind that the Court of Queen's Bench strictly uphold the rule of M. T. 37 Geo. 3, prohibiting affidavits being used in that court in the jurat of which there is any interlineation or erasure (Doe dem. Bultriss v. Roe, 3 Law T. 220), although the Court of Exchequer (Wills v. Dawson, 2 D. N. S. 465) admitted an affidavit in which part of the jurat was written on one side of the paper, and below it the words "a commissioner for taking affidavits in this court," were erased, and the remainder of the jurat written on the other side of the paper.

Amendment of declaration.—An amendment of a declaration demurred to a payment of the costs of the demurrer renders any withdrawal of the demurrer by the defendant unnecessary, and he is entitled to two days' time to plead de novo after the amendment, although no terms to that effect are inserted in the order for amendment. (Smith v. Hearn, 3 Law T. 77; 13 L. J. 231, Ex. 8 Jur. 384.)

Arrest—Variance.—If the copy of a ca. sa. issued under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, which is served upon the defendant, differ materially from the original, as if it omit to state the form of action, in which the writ of summons issued, the service of the ca. sa. will be set aside for irregularity and the bail-bond ordered to be cancelled, although the recitals in it correct the error in the copy. (Copley v. Madeiros, 3 Law T. 126; 13 L. J. 448, C. P.) We may observe, that in the argument it was taken for granted that a writ of summons must issue before the ca. sa.; whereas, according the present practice, this is unnecessary. (See Review, 2 Law T. 448.)

Attachment.—Where under a rule upon the sheriff to return a writ, the time expires upon the last day of Term, an attachment may be moved for at the rising of the Court if no return is made at the closing of the office. (Reg. v. Sheriff of Shropshire, 3 Law T. 140.)

Distringas against a Peer.—The case of Cassidy v. Steuart (2 M. & Gr. 437) having decided that a peer cannot be outlawed, the courts have recently allowed a distringas to compel appearance to issue, under circumstances in which a distringas for outlawry would issue against an unprivileged person; but this rule will not be extended at all. In Hay v. Earl of Charleville (3 Law T. 60; 13 L. J. 291, Ex.; 8 Jur. 448), it was held not to apply where an Irish peer who was at his residence in Ireland had taken no notice of copies of the writ of summons left at his residence in England, and also when forwarded in letter to him in Ireland.

Notice of declaration.—Where a notice of declaration cannot be served upon a party on account of his having left his former residence, and it is sought to substitute a service as a preliminary to bring the notice up in the office, under H. T. 2 Wm. 4, 219, the Court should be applied to for leave to substitute such service before it has been made, or the plaintiff will be obliged to do that over again with the leave of the Court, what has been done without it. (See Troughton v. Craven, 3 D. P. C. 436.)

Ejectment—Date of declaration.—It has often been held that the intituling a declaration in ejectment of a term not yet arrived is an immaterial error, and it is so whether the notice be dated or not. (Doe dem. Greene v. Roe, 8 Scott, 585, recognized in Doe dem. v. Roe, 3 Law T. 60; 13 L. J. 202 Q. B.)

Judgment against casual ejector.—A rule for judgment against the casual ejector in a country cause in the Court of Common Pleas is not, as in the Court of Exchequer, absolute in the first instance, but it is to shew cause on a day certain, which, if cause be not shewn, becomes absolute by itself. (Doe dem. King v. Roe, 3 Law T. 126.)

Feigned issue.—The successful party in a feigned issue is not entitled to take the money out of court before judgment is actually signed, if the objection is taken. (King v. Birch, 3 Law T. 159.) In this case the rule was enlarged to give the plaintiff time to sign judgment.

Interpleader.—The Court will not entertain a motion on the last day of Term for an interpleader rule which involves a question of law arising upon an Act of Parliament. (Turner v. Mayor of Kendal, 3 Law T. 222.)

Irregularity.—It is a recognized rule of practice that where a party makes an application for relief he must bring before the Court all the facts within his knowledge; and so where there exists a defect in proceedings which might be taken advantage of upon an attempt to invalidate them upon other grounds, and no notice is taken of it, a subsequent separate application for that purpose will not be allowed. (Anderson v. Harrison, 3 Law T. 186.) In the report, Williams, J. is made to say, time would not bar a prisoner from taking an objection; but on reference to the case of Claridge v. M'Kenzie (2 D. N. S. 898), it will be seen that a prisoner is not entitled to any greater favour than another person.

Judge's order—Time.—A thing directed to be done by a judge's order which does not specify any time, is to be done forthwith. This should be remembered in giving a consent order, and some time inserted. (Flantan v. White, 3 Law T. 40.)

New trial.—In Kirkham v. Master (1 Chit. Rep. 382), it is said that a new trial may be moved for within four days of the return day of the distringas, when returnable on a day certain, exclusive of the return day; but this was shewn to be a misprint in Chapman v. Eley (2 D. N. S. 93), and Bell v. Paxton (3 Law T. 207) confirms that case; and the practice is now clear that all motions for new trials must be made within four days of the return day of the distringas, inclusive of that day. (See also Lindus v. Corbett, 3 Law T. 77.)

Production of documents.—On motion for a new trial, copies of all documents intended to be relied on should be produced; and if they are in the hands of the opposite party, and copies have been refused upon an offer to pay the costs, an application should be made to the Court. (Gome v. Fylor, 3 Law T. 164.)

Rule to discharge.—A rule to discharge a rule for a new trial granted upon payment of costs because they have not been paid, is a rule nisi and not absolute in the first instance. (Atkinson v. Webster, 3 Law T. 205.) In Champion v. Griffiths (1 D. N. S. 319), it was absolute.

Rule for payment of money.—Since a rule of Court for the payment of a sum of money has now the effect of a judgment, it will not be granted unless the Court is perfectly satisfied that the claim so sought to be enforced is free from all doubt. (Holcroft v. Manby, 3 Law T. 282.)

Special case.—A special case has not unfrequently been stated without any order from a judge, the recital of such order being inserted in general terms. This was observed by Alderson, B. in Fosberry v. Goodlake (3 Law T. 164), and in future the rule must be strictly adhered to, and an order in every case obtained.

Staying Proceedings.—From Lloyd v. Kent (5 D. P. C. 125), it might be inferred, that a judge's order to stay proceedings made by consent would be equivalent to an appearance by the defendant; but according to Hawkins v. Hussell (3 Law T. 104), before judgment can be signed upon an order to stay proceedings on payment of debt and costs, and in case of default the plaintiff to be at liberty to sign final judgment, an appearance must be entered. An order of this kind, against the consent of the plaintiff, could not be obtained before declaration. (Reynolds v. Sherwood, 8 D. P. C. 183.) In an action upon a replevin bond, a single judge has jurisdiction to stay proceedings upon payment of the penalty of the bond and costs of the action; for he does not act under the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 23, which only empowers the Court to stay proceedings, but under the general principle of allowing relief. (Branscomb v. Scarbrough, 3 Law T. 159.)

Summons, writ of.—The party actually served is for that reason alone entitled to apply to set aside proceedings, whether he be the intended defendant or not. (Stephens v. Thorn, 3 Law T. 205.) The omission of the name of the court in which the defendant is required to appear is an irregularity, for which the writ will be set aside. (Ibid.)

Testatum writs.—It really seems to us time to abolish the practice of issuing original writs, since the recent cases have reduced it almost to a fiction. In Moss v. James (1 D. & L. 807), a testatum ca. sa. issued before an original one, was held regular, when a ca. sa. was afterwards issued, tested before the testatum ca. sa. but sealed afterwards; and in Cole v. Lavenne (3 Law T. 181), on a motion to set aside a testatum fi. fa. for want of an original fi. fa. to support it, it was held sufficient for the counsel to produce in court a fi. fa. regularly returned.

Verdict, motion to set aside.—Although we should have thought it quite clear, from Doe dem. Duncan v. Edwards (7 D. P. C. 517), that the omission to give notice of having obtained the permission of the Court to move, after the four days allowed for a new trial, would justify the other party in signing judgment, we may mention that it was again held so in Emblin v. Dartnell (3 Law T. 105), where judgment had under these circumstances been signed, and the rule for a new trial was only made absolute on payment of the costs of signing judgment.

PROFERT.

To avoid expense, the several parties to deeds often neglect to take parts which in law they are supposed to do, and it is important to observe the case of Hodgson v. Walker (3 Law T. 164), where this had been omitted, and it was held to be no excuse for not making profert that the deed was in the hands of trustees.

RAILWAY COMPANIES.

An important decision was given in Lees v. The Calder and Hebble Navigation Company (3 Law T. 163), which will be applicable to many of the Acts for the formation of railways, canals, &c. It was there held, that the usual clauses in an Act of this kind which bind the company to replace water-courses, &c. &c. &c. removed or interfered with in the progress of the works, only refer to land taken under the compulsory clauses of the Act, and not to purchases made from willing vendors, in which case special provisos should be inserted in the conveyance.

Liability of railway company.—Wheldale v. Northern and Eastern Railway (3 Law T. 59) shews that the public are without much legal protection where one line is a continuation of that belonging to another company. There the plaintiff had taken his place from a station on the Northern and Eastern Railway for London, but before his arrival at the place of destination, and after he had reached the Eastern Counties Railway, he was detained by one of the servants of the latter company. He sued the first-mentioned company, who had contracted to carry him to London; but it was held, that they were not answerable for the acts of the servant of the Eastern Counties Railway, and it does not seem easy to fix the other company with a liability where they had entered into no contract with the plaintiff. (See Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 M. & W. 109.) So that, in such a case, the only remedy would be against the particular servant; which would, in fact, be a mere waste of money. We know not whether this position of affairs has attracted the notice of the framers of the Bills now passing through Parliament, but it seems to us well worthy of their consideration. If an accident occurred on the second line, against which company should an action for damages be brought?

SHERIFF.

Liability—Special bailiff.—The sheriff, as is well known, is not liable for the negligence of a special bailiff, nor can he be ruled to return a writ which has been intrusted to one. It is important, therefore, to observe what will amount to an appointment of a special bailiff. In Balson v. Meggat (4 D. P. C. 557), a mere request to the sheriff to direct the warrant to a particular officer was held not to be an appointment of a special bailiff; but in Forde v. Leslie (6 Ad. & El. 699), the following letter was held to be so:—

"I inclose you writs in these actions, and shall feel obliged by your granting warrants thereon, directed to A and B. I shall write to B in a day or two."

The last sentence was much relied on as shewing the intention of the plaintiff to make the bailiff his agent. Alderson v. Davenport (3 Law T. 182) deserves, therefore, to be noticed. The plaintiff's attorney wrote to the undersheriff as follows:—

"Dear Sir,—Enclosed you will receive a ca. sa. in each of the above actions, and will thank you to procure and forward warrants in each to Mr. M. T., sheriff's officer, at Northwich, whom I have instructed as to the execution thereof. Your charges I shall be glad to pay as you may direct."

He also wrote to M. T. giving him information as to the best means of arresting the defendant, but this was not considered to amount to a special appointment of M. T. as the sheriff was left at liberty to employ another officer if he pleased.

Liability after supersedeas.—After a supersedeas issued out of the county court, the sheriff is not liable for the acts of his bailiffs, who continue to detain the goods seized, without regard to the supersedeas. It is like the case of a bailiff acting without any authority whatever, or even stronger in favour of the sheriff, for he is acting directly against the sheriff's authority. (Brown v. Copley, 3 Law T. 182; 8 Jur. 377.)

Return.—As nulla bona is a good return where goods seized are not leviable, because claimed for rent or under a prior execution, it seems right enough to hold that a return that a certain sum has been paid for rent should be good, although it does not distinctly state that the rent was due at the time of the seizure. (Reynolds v. Barford, 3 Law T. 162.)

STAMPS.

Mortgage transfers.—The case of Brown v. Pegg (3 Law T. 220) has, we are aware, excited much observation and comment among our readers; but we cannot participate in the terms of condemnation which have been used respecting it. As we understand the report, there is no discrepancy between it and Doe dem. Bartley v. Gray (3 Ad. & El. 89), or Lant v. Pearce (8 Ad. & El. 248); and in this we agree with two of our correspondents (supra, p. 311). The mistake has arisen from not considering the whole of the case of Doe v. Gray. That case only decided that the transfer-duty was not payable where the ad val. duty was payable and no new security added. It had, however, been paid; and Lord Denman, in giving judgment, said—Whether a common deed-stamp was also necessary under either of the Acts was immaterial to inquire; because the 1*l.* 15s. stamp erroneously put on was sufficient to cover that stamp, if necessary. In Doe dem. Barnes v. Rowe (4 B. N. C. 737), indeed, the Court of Common Pleas decided that where there was no new security, a common deed-stamp was unnecessary. But it is to be observed that they grounded their decision expressly upon Doe dem. Bartley v. Gray, which has been shewn not to decide the point. Lant v. Pearce decided clearly that the addition of other land did form a fresh security, and therefore required a deed-stamp; and in Brown v. Pegg conveyance of the fee was certainly a fresh security, and on this ground it could be supported. The effect of a mere covenant to pay the entire sum to the new mortgagee has not been expressly decided. We would refer to Doe dem. Jarman v. Larder (3 B. N. C. 92; 3 Scott, 107), and Wroughton v. Turtle (11 M. & W. 561), as calculated to throw some light upon the question. The inclination of our own opinion clearly is, that if there be no deed-stamp upon the document for any collateral purposes, the covenant to pay the entire sum would require one. This also is the view taken in the last edition of Jarman, by Sweet, vol. 5, 541. We may here appropriately insert the case of Doe dem. Bowman v. Lewis (3 Law T. 58, 13 L. J. 200, Ex.). A mortgage deed for 7,700*l.* which stated that a portion (110*l.*) had been advanced by the plaintiff to pay off a prior mortgagee, who by the deed conveyed to the plaintiff in fee the mortgaged premises, was held not to require a deed-stamp in addition to the ad val. stamp of 12*l.* It also stated that the plaintiff had paid 3,200*l.* to another mortgagee, who, in consideration thereof, conveyed the premises in fee to the plaintiff, and who also, by a separate instrument, assigned a term of 500 years for the further security of the plaintiff. It was held that the assignment stamp only, and no ad val. was necessary on this separate instrument.

Receipt.—A document in the following form was held to require a receipt-stamp:—"Mr. J. having rubbed off the sum of 72*l.* 3s. 9d. from his mortgage debt, being five quarters' rent of his house, I hereby discharge him the same rent to the 24th of June, 1841." (Lucas v. Jones, 3 Law T. 101; 13 L. J. 208, Q. B.; 8 Jur. 122.)

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY.

Attestation.—Practitioners in the country should observe the case of Prior v. Swaine (3 Law T. 79; 13 L. J. 214, Q. B.; 8 Jur. 123), and guard against the error there made. The attesting attorney was brother and London agent of the plaintiff's attorney, whom he charged with the costs connected with the preparation and execution of the warrant, and this was held an insufficient attestation, although he had been chosen by the defendant as his attorney.

Irregularity, waiver of.—Assignees stand in the same position as the bankrupt, and must therefore come early to set aside any irregularity, and where an irregular judgment on a warrant of attorney had been signed on the 6th of December, the defendant became bankrupt on the 18th, and assignees were appointed on the 3rd of January, who became acquainted with the judgment on the 16th, but did not apply until Easter Term, it was held that they were too late. (Bate v. Lawrence, 3 Law T. 103; 13 L. J. 147, C.P.) Indeed the Court were inclined to think that the delay from the 6th to the 18th would have barred the bankrupt, and consequently his assignees. (See Weedon v. Garcia, 2 D.N.S. 64.)

Judgment.—In our review of Hilary Term (2 Law T. 448), we pointed out that, according to the cases then decided, a warrant of attorney authorizing judgment as of a Term, did not authorize a judgment to be entered in vacation. It seems, however, that this rule so far admits of qualification, that under a warrant executed in vacation, and authorizing judgment to be signed as of the preceding Term, or of a subsequent one, judgment may be signed as of the Term first mentioned, as it was clearly within the terms of the contract, but not of any subsequent Term. (Jervis v. South, 3 Law T. 205, and the observations of Tindal, C. J. in Cobbold v. Chitver, 1 D. N. S. 726.)

WILL.

A devise to the use of children in fee then being minors, with a declaration at the will and desire of the testator, that his wife should have the use and occupation, or annual increase thereof, at her pleasure, during the minority of the children, gives to the wife an estate for years, and she can grant a lease thereof, which will pass to her executors and administrators, notwithstanding the insertion of the word "heirs" in the covenants of the lease, and it may be declared on as if the word "heirs" was omitted. (Whittome v. Lamb, 3 Law T. 104; 13 L. J. 205, Ex.)

THE PROPERTY LAWYER.

EXECUTION OF LEASING POWER.

The last part of Meeson & Welsby's Exchequer Reports contains a case of extreme interest to the Real Property Lawyer. It is that of RUTLAND v. DOE dem. WYTHE and OTHERS (Reported 12 Meeson & Welsby, 355).

This case was taken to the House of Lords in error from the Exchequer Chamber, and their lordships submitted a question to the judges, upon which the following important judgment was given.

The facts of the case were briefly these:—

Benoni Mallett, by his will, empowered a devisee for life to grant leases for any number of years, not exceeding twenty-one, "so as upon every such lease there were reserved and made payable during the continuance thereof, the best improved yearly rent that could reasonably be had for the same, without taking any sum or sums of money by way of fine or in respect of such lease or leases, and that in every such lease there should be contained a clause of re-entry for non-payment." In pursuance of this power a lease was made for twenty-one years from the 11th of October, 1833, reserving to the tenant for life and his assigns the yearly rent of 903*l.* by equal half-yearly payments, on the 6th of April and 11th of October, except the last half-year's rent, which was thereby reserved and agreed to be paid on the first day of August next before the determination of the said term, with a proviso for re-entry if rent unpaid for forty-two days next after any of the days whereon the same was reserved.

The question raised upon this was, whether the lease was a valid execution of the power.

It was held by the Lords (Lord Lyndhurst, C. Lord Brougham, and Lord Campbell, Parke, B. Williams, J. Coleridge, J. Maule, J. Rolfe, B and Wightman, J. affirming; Tindal, C. J. Patteson, J. and Coltman, J. dissenting), that the lease was a valid execution of the power, reversing the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber, and affirming that of the Court of Exchequer.

The learned judges delivered their opinions in these words:—

WIGHTMAN, J.—My lords, it appears to me that the lease set out in the special verdict is a good execution of the power of leasing contained in the will of Benoni Mallett. The power enables the devisee for life to grant leases for any number of years not exceeding twenty one, in possession, and not in reversion, remainder, or expectancy, "so as upon every such lease there be reserved and made payable during the continuance thereof the best improved yearly rent that can be had for the same, without taking any sum or sums of money by way of fine or income for or in respect of such lease or leases, and that in every such lease there be contained a clause of re-entry for non-payment of the rent reserved." The lease in question is for twenty-one years, from the 11th of October, 1833, yielding and paying to the tenant for life and his assigns during such part of the term as he shall live, and after his decease to the person entitled to the reversion, the yearly rent of 903*l.* by equal half-yearly payments, on the 6th of April and the 11th of October in every year, by equal portions, except the last half-year's rent, which was thereby reserved and agreed to be paid on the 1st day of August next before the determination of the said term, with a proviso for re-entry if the rent should be unpaid for forty-two days next after any of the days whereon the same was reserved. The jury have found that the rent reserved was the best improved yearly rent that could reasonably be had for the same, and the lease would appear to be in accordance with the terms of the power literally. It is a lease in possession for not more than twenty-one years; there is reserved and made payable, during the continuance of the lease, the best improved yearly rent; no sum of money appears to have been taken by way of fine or income for or in respect of the lease, and there is a clause of re-entry for non-payment of rent. As no point was taken upon the argument with respect to the clause for re-entry, I think it unnecessary to trouble your lordships with any observation with respect to it. But it is said, that the provision in the power, that the best yearly rent be reserved and made payable during the continuance of the lease, is not fulfilled by a yearly rent made payable in each year during the term for the whole of such year, but that the rent must be reserved equally throughout and during the continuance of the whole term and every part of the term, so that up to the last moment of the term rent should be payable by the tenant, and that, at whatever period of the year before its conclusion the remainderman might come into possession, he ought to be entitled to receive rent from the tenant for his subsequent occupation. Whatever arbitrary terms the grantor of the power may impose upon the party executing it, or however absurd or unreasonable they may appear to be, they must be fulfilled; as if it were required that the lease should be witnessed by persons of a particular stature, or written upon paper of a particular colour; but when the party by whom the power is to be executed is not restrained by the express terms of it, there are no conditions to be added by implication, except such as are necessary to give effect to the conditions that are expressed. In the present case, the rent reserved is a yearly rent payable in respect of the whole of each year, and is payable in each year: that fulfils the express conditions of the power. But it is contended, that there is an implied condition, for the benefit of the remainderman, that the rents should not only be made payable during the year, but proportionably during every part of the year, up to the last moment, lest the remainderman should by possibility find himself in possession of the estate at a period when all the rent for the current year has been paid up by the tenant; but do the express conditions of the power indicate that such an implied condition is necessary in order to carry them, or the testator's intentions to be gathered from them, into effect? The testator seems to have had no further regard to the interest of the remainderman, than that the estate should be let at the best yearly rent, and that no fine should be taken for the grant of the term generally, which would have the effect of reducing the yearly rent; but the times for the payment of the rent in each year he has left open to the discretion of the grantee of the power. Has, then, the grantee of the power exercised the discretion left to him, as to the times of payment of the rent in the year, in such a manner as to contravene the express conditions, or the intent of the testator to be gathered from them? The discretion is to be exercised by the grantor at the time he grants the lease for twenty-one years, and if it is to be restrained at all it must be by considerations of what, upon the whole, is most beneficial to both the parties, tenant for life and remainderman, for it is not to be assumed that the grantor had greater regard for the interest of the remainderman than of the tenant for life. There is an obvious advantage and convenience in making the last half-year's rent payable before the end of the term. The remedy by distress is preserved and made available at a period of the year very convenient for the landlord, and effect is given to the clause for re-entry; and if the remainderman came into possession at any period of the term before the 1st of August in the last year, he would derive great advantage from that mode of reservation; but the remainderman might possibly not come into possession until after the 1st of August in the last year, and from that time until the 11th of October there would be an interval during which no rent would be payable by the tenant. Without stopping to inquire whether the remainderman might or might not in such a case have some remedy against the representatives of the tenant for life, to recover his proportion of the last year's rent, it is obvious that the possibility of such a state of things could only be prevented by making the last half-year's rent payable at the end of the term, which would have the effect of depriving the landlord, whether tenant for life or remainderman, of the remedy by distress, a most important circumstance to be taken into consideration in determining the question, whether the reservation of the last half-year's rent in the manner in which it is reserved, is, or is not, most beneficial for both parties, upon a general view of their respective interests. But it is said, that, if once the principle of reserving the rent payable at any time of the year be admitted, it might have been made payable at the beginning of each year. I have already observed upon the extent to which the grantor of the power has thought it necessary by the terms of it to guard the interests of the remainderman, and it appears to me that such a reservation would be within the terms of the power. But it may be, though I am not prepared to say it would be, considered that such a reservation, though within the terms of the power, was in effect a fraud upon it. In the present case no fraud is suggested. It is agreed that the lease is a perfectly fair one; and the only question is, whether it is within the terms of the power. In the course of the argument, two cases were cited and relied upon by the defendant in error, both of which are distinguishable. In Doe v. Giffard (cited in 5 B. & Ald. 371), no rent at all was reserved for half a year of the term; the lease was for twenty-one years, and rent was reserved for twenty years and a half, under a power requiring the best yearly rent to be reserved: the lease, therefore, was clearly not according to the terms of the power. In the case of Doe v. Morse (2 C. & M. 247), (which was most relied upon), the power required that there should be reserved by half-yearly payments the best rent that could be obtained. The lease was to hold from the 4th of January; and the rent was made payable on the 1st of May and 29th of September. This, clearly, was not according to the power, which required the rent to be payable half-yearly. Mr. Baron Bayley, in giving his judgment upon that case says, "That cannot be considered the best yearly rent which is not reserved at the conclusion of the year;" but that very learned judge seems to have overlooked the disadvantage arising from inability to distrain at the conclusion of the term in such a case. These cases, which were cited to shew that the lease was not in conformity with the power, are clearly distinguishable; and as the reservation of the rent is within the terms of the power, and not in contravention of its spirit, or in fraud of the power, but affording an advantage to the landlord, whoever he might be, whether tenant for life or remainderman, which he would not have if the last half-year's rent were payable at the end of the last half-year of the term, it appears to me that the lease was well executed.

ROLFE, B.—My lords, in answer to your lordships' question put to the judges in this case, I have to state that, in my opinion, the lease of the 14th of October, 1833, is a valid execution of the leasing power given by the will of Benoni Mallett. The only restriction contained in the power, as to the compliance with which any doubt has been raised, is that which requires that to every lease there should be reserved and made payable during the continuance thereof the best and most improved yearly rent that could be reasonably had for the same, without taking any sum of money by way of fine or income in respect of such lease. The special verdict finds that the rent reserved was the best rent which could be reasonably obtained, and that it was reserved payable half-yearly by equal portions on the 6th of April and 11th of October in every year except the last half-year's rent of the term, which was made payable on the 1st of August instead of the 11th of October. The verdict further finds, that no fine or income was taken, unless the reserving of the last half-year's rent in August instead of October amounts to the taking of a fine or income within the meaning of the power. It would, as it seems to me, be a palpable abuse of language to speak of the reservation of the last half-year's rent in August instead of October as the taking of a sum of money by way of fine or income, when, in the first place, no sum of money whatever is taken, and, secondly, the whole clause has reference prospectively to something to be done at the end of the term, and not before its commencement. The only real question therefore, is, whether the mode in which the rent is reserved is warranted by the power. Now all which the power requires is, that the rent should be the best rent which could be obtained, that it should be reserved yearly, and that it should be payable during the whole term. The jury have expressly found that the rent is the best rent which could be obtained, and the only points to be considered, therefore, are, whether it is a rent reserved yearly, and whether it is payable during the whole term. It is clear, both on principle and authority, that a power to lease at a yearly rent is well complied with by the reservation of a rent payable half-yearly or quarterly. In other words, a rent does not cease to be a yearly rent, within the meaning of such a power, merely because it is made payable more than once a year. What is meant in such a power by the words "yearly rent" is, as I conceive, a rent payable in respect of each year of the tenancy, and payable in the year in respect of which it is reserved. Whether the rent be reserved on one or more days in the year, and whether it be made payable at the beginning, the middle, or the end of the year in respect of which it is reserved, it is still, as I conceive, a yearly rent, if it be payable on some ascertained day or days in every year as the equivalent for the occupation during that year. If this be so, the rent in this case is certainly a "yearly rent;" and I think it equally clear that it is a rent payable during the continuance of the term; for though after the 1st of August in the last year of the tenancy no sum of money will be actually paid, yet rent is by the lease made payable in respect of that period as well as of the rest of the term: and this, as I have already stated, is all which, in my opinion, the power requires. It is, however, contended, that, even admitting the lease to be framed in a manner which amounts to a literal compliance with the terms of the power, yet it is bad, as being a fraud on what was contemplated, and as defeating the manifest intention of the testator to protect the interest of the remainderman; for, it is said, if the tenant for life should die in the last year of the term between the 1st of August and the 11th of October, then during that period the remainderman would have no right of possession, and yet he would be entitled to no rent by way of equivalent, and this, it is said, could not have been what the testator meant. But this argument appears to me to be founded altogether on a fallacy. It assumes that the testator must have intended to give a protection to the remainderman, which, if the construction which I put on the words "yearly rent" is correct, he has not expressed. How are we to learn what benefits are intended for the remainderman, otherwise than by looking to the language of the will? He takes merely as a volunteer by the bounty of the testator. If the testator had desired that the rent should under all circumstances be made payable at the end of the year, he might have so provided. In the same way, he might have stipulated that the rent should be made payable once a year or twice a year, and not oftener, so as to secure to the party entitled in remainder the year's rent or half-year's rent falling due next after the death of the tenant for life. This, however, he has not done. He has imposed on the tenant for life the necessity of reserving the best yearly rent during the whole term, but at what days it should be made payable, and whether once or oftener, he has left to his discretion, considering him probably as the person best able to decide [illegible] be most expedient in regard [illegible] and knowing [illegible] that [illegible] reserved was the best [illegible] could be obtained, [illegible] interests of the remainderman could not be [illegible] prejudiced. In order to shew that [illegible] power it is necessary to look beyond the [illegible] words in which it is framed, the [illegible] case [illegible] put in argument [illegible] when the power required that [illegible] yearly rent should be reserved at some day in every year, then the power would be complied with by a reservation of the rent at the first day of every [illegible] of the [illegible] mode of letting [illegible] remainderman, and which the testator could not have contemplated. The case thus suggested [illegible] in the nature of a reductio ad absurdum [illegible] it was contended, can be [illegible] the present case which [illegible] a lease in which the rent [illegible] instead of at the end of every [illegible] could not have been contemplated by the [illegible] and therefore so neither can the present [illegible] not appear to me to be [illegible] the case [illegible] A lease in which each [illegible] the first day of the year would [illegible] found in the [illegible] probably could [illegible] reserved [illegible] obtained [illegible] power of [illegible] which in my opinion [illegible] the mode [illegible] so far from being [illegible] It is true that, in the [illegible] a person [illegible] a twenty [illegible] should happen to die within the two [illegible] months of the term, the [illegible] suggested might occur; but, on the other hand, in the far more probable event of the lessor dying at some earlier part of the term, the remainderman would have the benefit of the anticipated payment, and so acquire greater facility in obtaining the [illegible] half-year's rent. It only remains to [illegible] decided case is at variance with the [illegible] taken; and, on the contrary, there is [illegible] support. In Doe v. Giffard [illegible] the lease was held bad, not because the rent was payable before the last day of the year, but because it was not payable during the whole term. There was in that case one half-year in respect of which no rent was payable to any one; the term was to last one forty-two half-years, and there were to be [illegible] forty-one half yearly payments of rent. [illegible] was clearly contrary to the express [illegible] power. In Doe v. [illegible] (2 C. & M. [illegible]) Lyndhurst states the [illegible] in that case was held bad [illegible] required the rent to be made payable [illegible] half yearly payments, which must mean at equal [illegible] intervals, or, at all events, on days which [illegible] custom of the country were [illegible] intervals; whereas it was [illegible] intervals [illegible] and no evidence was given [illegible] were by the custom of the [illegible] half yearly days of payment. In Doe v. Oldknow (3 M. & Selw. 303), [illegible] Watson (5 B. & Ald. 363), the leases [illegible] and the dictum of Powell, J. in Rex v. Weston (Raym. 1198), assented to by Lord [illegible] express in favour of the present lease. On [illegible] therefore, I have to state, that, in my opinion, both on principle and authority, the lease of the 14th of December, 1833, is valid.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE

THE FEES OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

In the minutes of evidence taken before the Select Committee on the office of the Clerk of the Crown, in the present session, the Lord Chancellor was examined, and the following questions and answers passed as to the mode of remunerating the Attorney-general:—

"Sir Thomas Wilde.—A great many instruments are laid before the Attorney-general for signature?

"The Lord Chancellor.—I think there are.

"Is it necessary that the Attorney-general should place considerable reliance on the officer in respect of the form of those documents? Certainly; formerly the Attorney-general, in point of fact, signed those documents, on the responsibility of the officer, whose experience was much greater than his could be; unless he is made aware that there is any thing requiring his consideration, he takes for granted, coming from the officer, that they are correct, and signs them without hesitation.

"Is it not a mode of entitling the Attorney-general to a fee?—It is one of the numerous modes by which the Attorney-general becomes entitled to a fee. The Attorney-general's office would not be paid if he worked for every fee he received, for when he works he is very scantily paid by the public, not to the same extent, by a great deal, as he would be by private individuals.

"And for a great deal which he does, he is not paid at all?—Yes, there is a great deal for which he has no payment. I know that perfectly well."

It appears also, by Lord Eldon's "Life," that the Attorney-general is much better paid for private than for public business. We doubt both the justice and the policy of this.

FOREIGN OFFICE, JULY 19.—The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. Thomas W. Waldron, as Consul at Hong Kong for the United States of America.

The Queen has also been pleased to approve of Mr. Francis Morphy, as Consul in London for the Mexican Republic.

WHITEHALL, JULY 22.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed James Broff Byers, of Pembroke, in the county of Pembroke, gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—On Saturday a Government Bill was printed, to amend an Act of the 5th and 6th of the late King, which relates to the salary of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and to make other provisions in respect of the said office. By the recited Act the salary of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery was fixed at 700*l.* and it is now proposed to increase it to 1,000*l.* Clerks and other officers are to be entitled to superannuation. The deficiency in the fee fund to meet expenditure mentioned is to be paid out of the consolidated fund.—Sunday Times.

PROCLAMATION OF OUTLAWRY.—On Thursday, being county court-day, Hemp, the officer of the sheriff, made proclamation in the usual manner, and the following persons not answering, were declared outlaws, at the suit of their several creditors:—William Minton, — Bamford, H. T. Ryde, Thomas Read Kemp, John Charles Trevanion, George Clarke, Thomas Delahaye, — Chaunel, the Count de Tier, — Wright, William Pole Tilney Long Wellesley, William Pine, J. A. Stackpole, Gilbert Bolton, Anthony Elmsley, George Hawkins, Sarah Gregson, at the suit of two several creditors, William Walters, and [illegible] Francis Harrowby.

THE CONVICT DALMAS.—The public announcement that Dalmas was ordered to be transported for life excited no little sensation in the public mind, it being imagined that he was reprieved on the ground of insanity alone, and would forthwith be placed under proper restraint by being confined in a lunatic asylum. We are enabled to state, on good authority, that it was not wholly to the circumstance that there were grounds to imagine that the convict at times was subject to fits of insanity that the Government was induced to grant him a reprieve. There were other circumstances combined which induced the authorities at the Home-office to extend the clemency of the Crown to the prisoner. On a careful review of the evidence, which was purely of circumstantial character, it was considered that the connecting links were by no means of a strong corroborating nature, and that there was some discrepancy in the testimony of the witnesses adduced before the coroner, compared to that given before the magistrate at Wandsworth. Added to this, a strong recommendation to mercy was forwarded to the Home-office, signed by the whole of the jury who tried the prisoner. This recommendation was most powerfully backed by the friends of the convict, who stated, in a petition to the Home Secretary, that three of the witnesses were mistaken as to identity; that an unhappy prejudice was excited against the convict, owing to the dreadful crime of which he was accused; and they, moreover, conceived that the evidence brought forward against the prisoner was not sufficiently clear to warrant a conviction, and the jury had taken a wrong view of the case. These circumstances, coupled with the medical opinion of Drs. Sutherland and Monro, induced Sir James Graham to recommend that the life of the convict be spared, on the condition that he be transported for life.—Chronicle.

Malta.—A rumour has been for some days in circulation, and is daily acquiring more consistency, that the Government proposes to provide our bar with an English President, and give to our country and fellow-citizens the support of an Attorney-General, also an Englishman. We have not heard of the motives which have led the Government to think an English President so very much needed. As to the necessity of an Attorney-General, it is premised that they now fully understand how indispensable it is that the Maltese should have an English civil authority to guarantee them in some degree, placed as they are under the power of a military man, and, on the other hand, in order that the Government may be supplied with a person fit to advise them occasionally, according to the spirit of the British laws. Moreover, the experience of the past and the present is sufficient to prove the necessity of such a measure; that an English Attorney-General, chosen in the mother country, can have more independence, and that, in fine, if we are to progress as British subjects towards British institutions, this measure would be greatly beneficial to the country, since one of the greatest blunders of the reform was the doing away with the English Attorney-General before the country was prepared for the change, and without the formation of any political authority, intrusted with civic guarantees.—Malta paper.

Will of Lord Rodney.—The will of the Right Hon. Lord Rodney, late of Berrington Hall, Hereford, has just been proved by the Right Hon. and Right Rev. Spencer Baron Rodney and the Hon. W. P. Rodney, the brothers of the deceased. The will is too voluminous (upwards of 16 sheets) to admit of giving anything like an abstract. He gives to his brothers respectively 400*l.* and 100*l.* each; to his nieces, godson, and butler, 100*l.* each; to his servants, one year's wages (if they have been in his service five years). The bulk of his property seems to be left amongst various branches of his family; and in bequeathing relics, &c. to friends and others, as tokens of his esteem, he particularly mentions "four brass cannons, taken by my grandfather from the Spaniards," which have long been objects of peculiar interest at Berrington Hall. He expresses a strong desire to be buried either at "Somerset, Hereford, Southampton, or Kensal Green Cemetery," but leaves the choice to his executors. The funeral he directs to be strictly private, and his coffin "to be carried on men's shoulders." The will is dated September 1843, and the personal property is sworn under 12,000*l.*—Britannia.

Will of the Earl of Lonsdale.—The will of the late Earl of Lonsdale has just been proved in Doctors' Commons, by the Right Hon. William, Earl of Lonsdale, the Hon. Henry Cecil Lowther (sons of the deceased), and Sir John Beckett. The deceased gives a very large portion of his property to his wife (who died in his lifetime). To his cousin, Mary Francis Thompson, 10,000*l.*; but by his codicil he revokes this legacy, and gives her an annuity of 1,000*l.* per annum instead. To his friend the Hon. G. O'Callaghan, 2,000*l.* By the codicil, to his son Cecil and family (in addition to the benefit they may receive by the will), 30,000*l.* His lordship observes, "My domestics and servants are so numerous that it would be next to impossible to name them separately;" and desires his executors to compensate them, leaving the amounts to their discretion. He desires to be buried at Lowther, in a "private manner." The will is very long, and dated in 1836. The personal property is sworn under the large sum of 100,000*l.*—Britannia.

Algerian Statistics.—The Moniteur Algerien of the 14th inst. publishes the following statistics relative to the European population in the different provinces of Algeria on the 31st of December, 1843:—There were at that period in the province of Algiers 20,791 French, 2,208 English and Malto-British, 11,065 Spanish and Portuguese, 2,955 Italians, 1,146 Germans, Swiss, and Belgians, 106 Russians, Poles, and Greeks. In the province of Constantine, 4,437 French, 2,796 English and Anglo-Maltese, 389 Spanish and Portuguese, 1,223 Italians, 265 Germans, Swiss, and Belgians. 25 Russians, Poles, and Greeks. In the province of Oran, 2,929 French, 303 English and Anglo-Maltese, 5,835 Spaniards, 816 Italians, 206 Germans, Swiss, and Belgians.

Railway Legislation in France. — The Presse says:—"All the peers and deputies who have co-operated in the formation of railway companies have, we are assured, given in their resignations." The Patrie doubts the truth of this statement, the Chamber of Peers not having yet sanctioned the amendment of M. Crémieux against deputies being connected with railroad companies.—Galignani.

CORRESPONDENCE.

QUARTER SESSIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I noticed with much pleasure the passage in the report of the Yorkshire Law Society, recommending an application, by the members of the Profession, to the authorities in their several neighbourhoods to advertise the days for holding the sessions in counties and boroughs in the Law Times.

There cannot be a doubt that the Yorkshire Society is right in its opinion that such a publication, in one medium seen by all the Profession, is extremely important. For my own part, I continually feel the want of some such means for ascertaining when sessions are to be held. A short time since, I had to go to try an appeal in a distant city. I had great difficulty in discovering when the sessions were to be held, so as to time my notices accordingly. The advertisement in the local newspapers does not answer the purpose, for it is not seen by persons at a distance, and it is hard that the Profession, who are most interested in these advertisements, should have no access to them.

Now that the pages of the Law Times offer so ready a means of circulating the notices in question among the entire class most concerned in them, I trust that the expense of a few shillings a year will not deter the magistrates in counties, and the recorders or town-councils in boroughs, from giving us this necessary information.

But, to assure them of its utility, I would recommend the attorneys in every town having a Quarter Sessions, and the law societies in every county, at the next sessions, to memorialize the authorities on the subject, assuring them of its utility, and requesting their assent.

It seems that the Yorkshire Society have already done this, and with success; and that fact might be stated in the memorial.

I am, Sir, your constant reader,

July 24, 1844. A Magistrate's Clerk.

P.S.—Could you not procure and present to us, in an accessible form, the standing orders of sessions in each of the counties? They vary so much, and are so difficult to be ascertained, that continual mistakes are now arising from accidental non-observance of them. They would form an invaluable addition to your very useful Appendix.

[Note by the Editor.—We thank our correspondent for his suggestion, and we will make immediate inquiry if the information he names can be procured. As it would be impracticable to publish the orders of all the counties together, would it not be sufficient to give them as we receive them? The Index would immediately refer the practitioner to any county whose rules he desires to learn. Are there any other documents which might usefully be included in the Appendix?]

STAMP ON TRANSFERS OF MORTGAGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—There is no doubt the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in Doe dem. Bartley v. Gray has been greatly misunderstood by the Profession, as is in some measure shewn by the letters of several of your correspondents, which appear in the last two numbers of the Law Times. I refer particularly to those condemning the recent decision in Brown v. Pegg. Perhaps that decision could scarcely have been expected when the bias of the courts in favour of the subject in cases arising on the construction of the Stamp Acts is considered; nevertheless the argument that the last-named case is "insensate," or wholly at variance from its predecessors, is altogether without foundation. In considering these cases, it is important to observe the distinction between a thirty-five shilling deed-stamp when used as a transfer duty (under 3 Geo. 4, c. 117, s. 2) and when used as the stamp on a further security (under 55 Geo. 3, c. 184). Following the views adopted by your correspondents Mr. Edward Knocker, of Dover, and Outis, from Lincoln's-inn, which appear to be for the most part correct, I conceive the effect of the leading decisions on the question to stand thus:—

In Doe dem. Bartley v. Gray, the original mortgage was for a term of years, and by the transfer (on which a further sum was advanced) the term was assigned to attend the inheritance, and the fee granted to the mortgagee; the stamps were, first, an ad valorem duty in respect of the further advance, with the necessary progressive duties thereon, and, secondly, a thirty-five shilling deed-stamp. Held, that the latter was unnecessary in respect of the transfer (for which purpose it appears to have been originally impressed), and might, therefore, be applied to the further security, which it was contended the conveyance of the fee created, but that it was not requisite to decide whether such conveyance of the fee did, in fact, constitute a further security, the deed-stamp being sufficient to cover it.

Doe dem. Barnes v. Rowe followed, but did not go beyond the holding in Doe dem. v. Gray, that also being a transfer on the advance of a further sum, but not passing any greater estate or interest in the mortgaged property than that vested in the original mortgagee; but this case did not "settle the question left open in the prior case" (Doe v. Gray), or decide "that an ad valorem on the further sum was sufficient, without any deed-stamp," as suggested by Mr. Knocker, for the necessity of the deed-stamp as a transfer duty was negatived in Doe v. Gray, and the necessity of it as a duty on a further security did not arise either in that case or in Doe dem. Barnes v. Rowe.

In Lant v. Pearce, the thirty-five shilling duty was clearly rendered needful as on a deed of further security, because the transfer in that case included further parcels beyond those pledged by the original mortgage.

Up to this point, then, the question "What on the transfer of a mortgage would constitute a further security so as to render a thirty-five shilling stamp necessary, in addition to the ad valorem on the further advance (no new parcels being added)?" had not been settled. And this is the point decided in Brown v. Pegg. The original mortgage in that case appears to have been for a term of years. A further sum was advanced on the execution of the transfer, and the fee was also thereby conveyed to the new mortgagee, and the mortgagor covenanted for repayment of the whole sum; and on this a thirty-five shilling stamp is held to be requisite, as on a further security in respect of the conveyance of the fee, in addition to the ad valorem on the further advance. What share the addition of the fee and what the covenant for repayment respectively had in producing this decision, of course does not appear.

The question whether the new proviso and new covenant inserted in such a transfer might not be considered as rendering the deed-stamp requisite, as on a further security, had been previously mooted by Mr. Hayes, Mr. Coventry, and Mr. Jarman, and your correspondent, Mr. Knocker, also puts the query, "What is to be done in respect of a covenant where no new estate or further security (i. e. real security) is created?" That point was not raised in Doe dem. Barnes v. Rowe, but in Doe dem. Jarman v. Larder (3 Scott, 407), a construction was put upon the language of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, sched. Part 1. title Mortgage, where the expressions used are very similar to those in 3 Geo. 4, c. 117, s. 2; and it was held in that case, that the stamp is in respect only of the real security created by the deed, 'where the land is made to bear an additional burden,' without regard to the mere personal obligation created "by a dry covenant under seal of the party." And there appears no reason to suppose that a different result would be arrived at in the case of a covenant contained in the transfer of a mortgage; and if so, the deed-stamp would not be required in respect of the new covenant merely.

As in some way connected with this question, it may be remarked, that the marginal note to the case Doe dem. Snell and Another v. Tom, as reported in 12 L. J. N.S. 264, Q. B. is much calculated to mislead. That note states that "T. mortgaged land by lease and release to B. By a subsequent indenture of lease and release, between B. of the first part, T. of the second part, and S. of the third part, the mortgage was transferred to S., he advancing 150*l.* and a further sum of 70*l.* Held, that this deed was not liable to a stamp-duty as a fresh mortgage for the whole sum by reason of the conveyance of the fee, although B. had never executed the deed." And from this it would be inferred that the fee was first made part of the security on the execution of the transfer; but on perusing the report it will be seen that the fee was included in the original mortgage of 1819 (for all the earlier deeds are immaterial to the present question), and that the transferee, therefore, only took the same quantum of estate in the mortgaged property as the original mortgagee had in the first instance,—the effect of the addition of the fee on the execution of the transfer was not therefore a point raised, and is now for the first time decided in Brown v. Pegg.

I remain, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

Horatio Barnett.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

A subscriber of age and experience writes us as follows on the subject of "Stamps on Mortgage Transfers:"—

My letter, which appeared in the Law Times of the 13th, and which you good-naturedly designated as "the commentary of a subscriber of age and experience in the Profession," had a practical end in view—namely, to obtain relief for myself and others of my conveyancing brethren from the state of uncertainty into which so many of us were confessedly thrown by the decision in the case of Pegg v. Brown, and which relief a friendly discussion by means of your valuable journal was so well calculated to afford. I suppose it must be taken for granted, from that decision, that upon a transfer of mortgage, in which the mortgagor joins, and an additional sum is advanced, where a further estate in the same mortgaged lands is superadded—such as the fee simple after a term for years—a 35s. stamp must be used, in addition to the ad valorem on the advanced sum. Your correspondents, Mr. Knocker and Outis, both observe that Lord Denman, in the case of Doe v. Gray, declined to offer an opinion as to the necessity of a common deed-stamp, and therefore they say that the recent case of Pegg v. Brown does not militate against that case. Be it so; but I own that the reason which his lordship is made to assign for his abstinence in the case of Doe v. Gray, as reported in the Law Journal (K. B. 197, 1825), is to me perfectly unintelligible, viz.—"Whether a common deed-stamp was necessary, it is not necessary here to inquire, as here the transfer-stamp erroneously put on is sufficient to cover that." Now, the fact is, that the common deed-stamp and the transfer-stamp are perfectly identical, either being 35s. in amount, and neither having any distinguishing mark. The common deed-stamp is a mere nonentity as distinguished from the transfer-stamp; and then, if the latter be erroneously put on, it remains that there is no other stamp in being that could with propriety be substituted for it. I should suppose that this was the impression of the reporter in the case of Doe v. Gray, in 4 Neville & Manning, 719, the marginal note whereof is as follows:—"The transfer duty on mortgages is imposed only where no further sum is advanced. Where an additional sum is advanced, it is sufficient to pay the ad valorem duty on the sum advanced. So where the original mortgage was for a term, and the second deed is a mortgage in fee, and the term is assigned to secure the mortgage-money," certain it is that numbers of the Profession have adopted that opinion. I own that I have not the Reports at Large either of Neville & Manning or Adolphus & Ellis, to refer to; but I observe that Mr. Knocker refers to the Law Journal, from whence I have quoted. I suppose the two former reporters may throw a clearer light on the subject. But, as I have before said, "be it so," that this question is now settled, and that we shall do well in future, where a further estate in the premises is granted to a new mortgagee, to affix the deed-stamp, treating it, quoad this estate, as a new or further security. But I ask with your correspondent Mr. K. what is to be done in respect of the covenant for payment of the entire sum entered into by the mortgagor with the new mortgagee, when no further estate is granted? This is the question of far greatest importance, for I will venture to say it involves almost every case of transfer of mortgage where there is a further advance; and I trust, Sir, that, by your assistance, the subject will not be suffered to drop, until some understood practice is settled on the point.

Having trespassed thus far on your columns now, I must defer my answer to the questions which Mr. Argles puts to me respecting progressive duty and lease for a year stamp.

A SUFFOLK ATTORNEY makes the following complaint:—

I have often observed, with much satisfaction, your well-directed endeavours to exterminate the many practices and means of obtaining business, which, as beneath the dignity of a liberal Profession, have a direct tendency to prevent its restoration to its once high standard, and I hoped that, ere this, I should have found you touching upon a practice which I fear is daily becoming more prevalent with the attorneys of this county at least, if not elsewhere. You may possibly not be aware that there are many attorneys (and amongst them are to be found individuals, or members of firms, holding such appointments as coroner, undersheriff, &c. &c.) who are in the habit of regularly attending for a few hours on market-days at towns of considerable distance from their own residence, for the accommodation, as they allege, of their clients in the neighbourhood.

There is, indeed, and I believe there always has been, a class of practitioners, of whom one, at least, may generally be found hovering about in every town on market-days, and who, I will venture to say, a few years since, never expected his practice would be interrupted by the appearance of practitioners of a higher caste than himself. But I think no one will argue that, because the pettifogger sometimes succeeds in entrapping a client from a class above that of the horse-dealers and pig jobbers, the practitioner of acknowledged respectability is justified in resorting to the itinerant practice system as a means of protecting his connection from encroachments.

I will say nothing of the evils arising from the jealousy occasioned by the above practice, which is sometimes felt by the resident practitioners of the towns which are thus visited (for the itinerants are regarded by residents (and perhaps justly) with much of the same feeling as the fair sportsman looks upon the poacher); but I will rest my pretensions to notice entirely upon the indecorum and injurious effect of the system upon the Profession, as such, so far as regards its character in the public estimation. I need scarcely add that these remarks are made by me with a view to draw from your able pen something in the shape of a leading article upon the subject, should you agree with me in condemning the system.

NOTICE.

THE fourth part of the APPENDIX to the LAW TIMES, published this day, contains—

I. The completion of the Criminal Law Consolidation Bill.

II. Mr. STARKIE'S Digest of the Law relating to Gaming and Lotteries.

The Parts already published contain—

Part I.—1. Crime in England and Wales; 2. Crime in the Metropolis; 3. Report of the Tithe Commissioners; 4. Lord Brougham's Speech on the Codification of the Criminal Law; 5. The Criminal Law Consolidation Bill.

Part II.—The Criminal Law Consolidation Bill (continued).

N.B. This APPENDIX to the LAW TIMES is published occasionally, containing documents of value, but of too great length for the body of the Journal.

TO READERS ABROAD.

WE beg to state that we shall be glad to make an arrangement with a competent correspondent in the metropolis of each country in Europe, and also with one in each of our colonies, to supply any legal intelligence of general interest arising in their localities, such as the letter of our Paris correspondent published last week.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, JULY 27, 1844.

THE DEBTORS AND CREDITORS BILL.

IT is as we had ventured to prophesy: the admirable measure of Lord COTTENHAM has been so maimed and disfigured by the secret committee which sat upon it up-stairs, that its own parent would find it difficult to recognize his offspring. Lord BROUGHAM has done his dirty work, or rather the dirty work of his employers, with good will, because it was upon a measure of a rival Law Reformer, of somewhat more repute than himself, and with success, because, however powerless for good, he is indubitably a master in mischief.

As we know something of the secret history of this most discreditable affair, which it is our purpose to proclaim, that the country may learn how "the farce of legislation," as it has been called, is conducted; to be intelligible, it will be necessary that we should recal to the memory of our readers the history of this memorable measure.

Early in the session, Lord COTTENHAM introduced into the House of Lords a Bill for the amendment of the Law of Debtor and Creditor, based in its main provisions upon the report of the Commissioners.

The great features of that measure were the total abolition of imprisonment for debt; a great extension of the remedies against the property of the debtor, and ample provisions for the punishment of improvidence and fraud. A copious analysis of the Bill was given in the LAW TIMES a few weeks ago, and thither we must refer the reader for the details.

The principle of the measure was this. Imprisonment for debt is wrong, because it punishes the innocent equally with the guilty, misfortune alike with fraud. Moreover, it is improvident, for it disables the honest man from exerting himself, while it removes from the rogue the stigma of a punishment to which the worthiest may be subjected in common with him.

The proper line of distinction was taken by Lord COTTENHAM. We will not punish the honest man, said his Bill, but we will punish the rogue more severely than now we can do. We will abolish imprisonment for debt altogether; neither honest man nor rogue shall be sent to jail at the will of a creditor; but if a debtor be shewn to have acted fraudulently in any shape, we will give him a smart imprisonment, not, however, for the debt, but for the fraud.

Do our readers recognize the distinction? Do they not see how admirably it solves the difficulty that has haunted so many minds as to the danger of abolishing imprisonment for debt, for then they thought there would be impunity for dishonesty? Not so—that would be more severely punished than ever.

But if imprisonment for debt was to be abolished, it was undoubtedly necessary, at the same time, to provide more ample remedies against the property of debtors.

These the Bill abundantly secured. Most stringent were the powers given by it; if the debtor had property, the Bill would certainly secure it for his creditors; no property was to be exempt; mark this!—land in all its shapes, and all interests in land, reversions and remainders however remote, were to pass to the creditors; it would have been impossible for any insolvent landowner, noble or ignoble, to keep his property and cheat his creditors,—wherever and whatever property there was, the creditors would get it, and the debtor was compellable to reveal his property to the Court or be imprisoned for the fraud of concealing it.

Does not a light begin already to gleam upon the reader's mind?

When this righteous measure was submitted to the House of Lords by its foster-father, its justice was so plain, its excellence so manifest, that not a voice was raised but in warm approval of it. The Lord Chancellor gave to it his earnest recommendation, and promised the aid of Government, and without a dissentient it was read a first time.

Throughout the country it met the same approval. The organ of public opinion, the Press, without distinction of party, was unanimous in applause.

Some weeks elapse and Lord COTTENHAM moves the second reading. The country expected that after what had occurred, it would pass unopposed, as a matter of course. But suddenly up rises a Marplot in the shape of Lord BROUGHAM, and submits another Bill of his own devising, a Bill inferior to its senior in all respects, a miserable make-shift of a Bill, evidently got up for the special purpose, and he offers it as a substitute for the excellent measure of Lord COTTENHAM.

Nothing that Lord Brougham does can surprise anybody; and at first it was thought by the audience that he was only playing one of his fantastic tricks, and using his Bill as a peg upon which to hang a speech.

But, to the amazement of all, he was seconded by the Lord Chancellor, the identical Lord Lyndhurst who had so warmly approved Lord Cottenham's Bill on its introduction, and even volunteered for it the aid of Government. He could not throw it overboard openly and at once—that would have been too barefaced; so he proposed to send both Bills to a committee to prepare a measure from out of them. So experienced a statesman as the Lord Chancellor could not but know that the certain effect of this would be to destroy both. But the ruse was successful, and a very large majority of the Lords, who had before unanimously approved the Bill, now voted for that which they well knew would destroy it. And to a committee they go together.

And most efficiently has the committee performed the work of mutilation for which it was appointed. Not a trace of the parent Bill remains—its entire principle is destroyed. Imprisonment for debt is abolished only for debts under 20*l.*; and all the stringent powers for the discovery and recovery of the property of debtors are swept away. The Bill is now a wretched abortion; a pretence of reform without the reality; stat nominis umbra.

And to complete the farce—if that can be so called which is a tragedy to so many unfortunate persons in whom the Lords had, by their unanimous approval of the original Bill, encouraged the hope of speedy release—the tool by whose agency the mischief has been done, Lord Brougham, now professes extreme sympathy for the imprisoned debtors, and implores their lordships to pass it this Session, as an act of mercy to them! His sympathy, all the while, being limited to 20*l.*

Such is the history, as it stands before the public—so far as appears upon the face of the affair.

But it must be obvious to everybody that there is something beneath the surface. Let us see if we cannot find a clue to the mystery. This we believe it to be: almost may we say, this it is.

There are certain noble lords (names are needless) whose estates are largely incumbered; nay, whose debts are such that if creditors could investigate, they would appear in a very sorry plight.

When Lord Cottenham's Bill came to be scrutinized, it was found that its remedies against the property of debtors were much too extensive to be altogether agreeable to those involved noblemen. But they could not, with any grace, abolish the remedy against the person without improving the remedy against the property and, rather than the latter should bring them within its clutches, they preserve the former, to which they are not liable.

By limiting the Bill to debtors under 20*l.* they effectually exempt themselves and all great debtors like themselves from its operation.

So, because some half-dozen noblemen are afraid of being obliged to render an account to their creditors and pay their debts, some thousands of innocent debtors are to be subjected to imprisonment; fraud is to continue to go unpunished, and all the creditors in the country are to be deprived of a proper remedy against the properties of their debtors!

We are not surprised that the noble dukes and marquisses, who are the secret movers of the opposition, should make use of their power for their own protection, nor are we very much surprised that the Lord Chancellor should sympathize with them and aid them even at the sacrifice of his consistency. But we are surprised that a majority of the peers, who are not insolvent, should have lent themselves to the proceeding we have described.

But what words can epithet the conduct of Lord Brougham for condescending to play the part of Marplot for them! Let "expressive silence arouse his"—shame!

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The first part of the Cases in Real Property and Conveyancing was published on Saturday last. It is hoped that this endeavour to give to the Profession, for the first time, in a collected and easily accessible form, all the cases as they occur upon that branch of the law in which a greater number of practitioners are interested than in any other, will be found of value in the chambers and office as a work to be studied as well as referred to. A member suggests that it would be made very complete by the addition of a digest of all similar cases in all the reports down to the date of the commencement of the Verulam Reports. If sufficiently supported, this might easily be accomplished, and it would, we should think, be comprised in a volume of moderate size, and, consequently, at the cost of a few shillings.

The first part of the Criminal Law Reports is almost ready.

A series of Nisi Prius Reports, carefully selected, has been recommended by many members as much wanted, and of which, at present, there is none. This suggestion will receive due consideration.

The following names have been added to the roll of members since the last publication. The number now nearly approaches to six hundred. A few more will permit the commencement of the text-books.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

The following scale of charges, reduced more than one-third, has been adopted for Advertisements of Estates for Sale, &c., exceeding 10 lines in length:

For the first 70 words . . . . . 5s.
For every succeeding 30 words . 1s.

THE MONEY MARKET.

The Public Securities are again drooping. Consols have realized $99\frac{1}{8}$ to $99\frac{1}{4}$ for immediate transfer, and $99\frac{5}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ for the Account. The Commissioners have taken 10,000*l.* Reduced at $100\frac{3}{8}$. Exchequer Bills have been done at 78s. to 80s. premium; the New Three-and-a-Half per Cents. at $102\frac{3}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{8}$; the Reduced at $103\frac{3}{8}$ to 103; and the Three per Cents. at $100\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$. Bank Stock is marked at $199\frac{1}{4}$. Stock in general continues scarce.

The Foreign Securities are rather passive; and, as regards the South American Bonds, there is not much disposition to invest in them. The Committee meeting yesterday was not satisfactory, and Colombian have dropped to $13\frac{3}{4}$ $\frac{1}{2}$. Mexican are $36\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{3}{8}$ for the Actives, and $16\frac{1}{8}$ for the Deferred. Brazilian Bonds have been at $83\frac{1}{2}$ to 84. Portuguese Converted Stock is lower again, being $44\frac{1}{2}$ to $43\frac{3}{4}$. Russian are firm, at 120. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents. obtain $61\frac{3}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{8}$. Spanish Three per Cents. continue nominally at $33\frac{3}{8}$.

The Railway Shares continue to evince considerable firmness, and there is a good business doing. Great Western are 30 to 31; Birmingham, 130; South-Western, $45\frac{3}{8}$ to $\frac{5}{8}$; and Birmingham and Gloucester, $5\frac{1}{2}$ to 8 premium. Brighton are $1\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ discount.

Great Sale of Property in Somersetshire.—On Thursday and Friday, Mr. Harrill brought to the hammer, in the large room, at the White Lion, in this city, the manors of Chew Magna, North Elm, and Dundry, together with freehold estates, mansion houses, &c. at Chew Magna, Dundry, and Winford, the property of Mr. Harford, of the late firm of Harford, Davies, and Co. and sold by order of their assignees. The room was crowded even to a greater excess than when the Cleeve estates were offered on a recent occasion. The company was highly respectable, and included many capitalists, and a number of substantial yeomen and others from the neighbourhood in which the property is situated. There was, as a consequence, considerable competition, and every lot was cleared, at prices, in many instances, far above the sum estimated by valuers. The total proceeds amount to upwards of 54,000*l.*—Bristol Journal, July 20.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Wednesday, July 24.

Re Langham, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Payment of sum found due on information.

Bacon, for the committee of the estate of Sir James Langham, a lunatic, supported a petition praying that the committee might be allowed to pay a sum of 500*l.* found due from the lunatic, in respect of a rent-charge of 80*l.* on the lunatic's estate. In 1668 the then Sir James Langham, the ancestor of the lunatic, had founded a school at Hillsborough, and endowed it by means of a rent-charge upon his real estates. That rent-charge had been allowed to run into arrear, and an information had been filed to enforce the rights of the charity. The sum of 500*l.* was found to be due from the lunatic, and the committee prayed to be allowed to pay that sum out of a fund in court.

Ordered.

Re Otte, a Lunatic.

Allowance—Costs of next of kin.

In this matter a sum of 16,000*l.* had accumulated in the hands of the lunatic's trustees, which had lately been brought into court to the credit of the lunacy. The committee now presented a petition, praying that the dividends might be paid to him, in part of the allowance to the lunatic.

Blunt, in support of the petition.—The next of kin had attended the inquisition, and the petition also prayed that the costs of the next of kin might be paid. These costs had been reserved on a former occasion when the petition had been mentioned.

Lloyd, for the next of kin, said his clients only attended by their solicitor, and the costs would not be heavy.

The Lord Chancellor.—I shall direct an inquiry as to the costs, and if they appear to be only such as are proper, the costs will be allowed. The order asked for may be drawn up up, unless stopped by my direction.

Re Williams, a Lunatic.

Lunatic trustee—Appointment of new trustee in the place of a lunatic trustee will not be made without a reference to the Master.

De Gex supported a petition, which prayed for the appointment of a new trustee in the place of the lunatic, and he asked that the order might be made without a previous reference to inquire whether the lunatic is a trustee within the meaning of the Act. Such orders had been made in two instances, and he referred to Ex parte Rogers and a subsequent case, both reported in the Law Times.

The Lord Chancellor.—I cannot make the order without a previous reference—it will be said that I have made three such orders, and then four—until the jurisdiction has been taken away from the commissioner and transferred to this court.

Usual order of reference made.

Re Vidal, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Reduction of income—Reference.

The lunatic's income consisted of dividends of a fund in court, and of rents, amounting altogether to 400*l.* a year. The income-tax had reduced the allowance by 20*l.* and the petition prayed that an order might be made for making up the allowance of the lunatic to the old amount out of the fund in court.

Freeling, in support of the petition.

The Lord Chancellor.—You may take the order without a reference.

Re Lockey, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Opposed petitions—Attachment against a defaulting committee of the estate.

Elmsley supported a petition which prayed for an attachment against the late committee of the estate, who had been discharged, and from whom a considerable balance had been reported due. By leave of the Lord Chancellor, obtained on petition, service of the petition and of the order for payment of the balance had been served upon the late committee's wife. It was admitted that the committee himself is out of the jurisdiction, and that he is not likely to return. The object of now obtaining an order for an attachment was, that every means which indicated the use of due diligence might be taken against the principal defaulter before proceedings were taken against his sureties.

No opposition was made to the order.

The Lord Chancellor.—Such a penal order cannot be taken as an unopposed petition. It must stand over, and come on amongst the opposed petitions in lunacy.

Re Horton, a Lunatic.

Costs in lunacy—Practice.

The administrator, with the will annexed of the lunatic, prayed that the costs incurred in the lunacy might be taxed and paid, including costs for the taxation and payment of which orders had been made in the lunatic's lifetime, but which had not been acted upon.

Turner, for the petition.

The Lord Chancellor.—If, on taking the accounts, it shall appear that all the previous orders for taxation and payment of costs have not be enacted upon, let those costs be taxed and paid, together with any other costs which have not been paid. An inquiry must be made who are the next of kin.

Re Cotton, a Lunatic.

Taking account of the estate of a deceased lunatic.

The lunatic in this case is dead, and the sole executrix had presented a petition for the transfer to herself of two sums of stock standing to the credit of the lunacy. The accounts had not been passed, but the executrix was absolutely entitled, and did not seek any account.

Ordered.

Re Scott, a Lunatic.

Allowance to lunatic—Reservation out of income.

Lloyd supported a petition which prayed the confirmation of the Commissioners' report on an inquiry which had been directed, whether an increased allowance should not be made to the lunatic, by reason of an increase of income. The former income had been 155*l.* which had been lately increased by the death of a relation to 224*l.* per annum. The commissioner had approved of the whole income being allowed.

The Lord Chancellor.—If you take all the income, what will remain for contingencies? How are the costs to be provided for? Take an order for the allowance of 210*l.* per annum, leaving 14*l.* of the income to meet contingencies; and from that surplus the present costs must be paid.

Re Jones, a Lunatic.

Conduct of a suit in which lunatic is engaged.

The petitioner was the executrix of the late committee of the estate of the lunatic, Mary Jones, by whom a suit had been instituted to recover property left by her grandfather. The Master had found, that it was expedient that the suit should be prosecuted, but that it might be compromised upon certain terms, and that the defendants should be required to make an offer. The defendants, however, were not prepared to make an offer, but threatened to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution.

There was also another suit, which was a suit for a specific performance commenced by the mother of the lunatic, in which a decree had been made; and all that remained to be done in that suit was to pay some costs which had been incurred. It was now sought that a reference should be made to inquire if the first suit ought to be proceeded with, and for other objects.

Heberden, for the petitioner.

The Lord Chancellor.—Who is to have the conduct of the reference?

J. Parker, for the committee of the estate, said his client ought to conduct the reference. The committee and the executrix of the deceased committee acted by different solicitors.

The Lord Chancellor.—The committee and the executrix of the former committee should unite. The committee is the proper person to conduct the reference. Some arrangement should be come to, so as not to add unnecessarily to the costs by the employment of two solicitors.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Friday, May 31.

Allan v. Allan.

Demurrer for multifariousness and want of equity.

Between Agnes Allan, plaintiff (widow of the late William Allan, deceased), and Thomas Allan, of Sleighthouses, Joseph Allan, James Thomson, and Thomas Thomson (executors of Thomas Allan, of Harlow, deceased), Thomas Allan, of Fogorig, and Jean, his wife, Agnes Allan, spinster, and Sir William Burnett, defendants.

A testator, G. by his will, gave the residue of his property (after paying certain legacies), to be equally divided between his brother and his two sisters E. T. and M. A. the wife of T. A. of H., the shares of his sisters for their respective lives, and, at their decease, to their respective issue; to be equally divided between them.

M. A. the wife of T. A. of H. had issue four children, who survived the testator, one of them, J. died intestate, another, W. since deceased, the late husband of plaintiff, and two daughters, J. A. the wife of T. A. of F. and A. A. spinster.

T. A. of H. the father of W. in consideration of an alleged debt, had induced him (among other property) to assign over to him the whole of his share as one of the issue of M. A. in the estate of G.

T. A. of H. died, having appointed four executors, among whom were T. A. of S. and J. A.

The share of W. deceased, in the residuary estate of G. was invested by Sir W. B. the surviving executor of G. in his own name in the Government Funds.

T. A. of S. and J. A. as executors of T. A. of H. deceased, filed their bill against Sir W. B. and the plaintiff, together with all other parties interested in the estate of G. deceased, for the purpose of having the share of W. paid to them, and for carrying out the trusts of G.'s will. To this bill the plaintiff put in her answer.

The plaintiff, as administratrix of her deceased husband W. conceiving herself to be entitled to his share in the residue of G.'s estate, applied to Sir W. B. for the same, which he refused, on the ground of the assignment to T. A. of H. deceased.

The papers relating to W.'s claim having been taken possession of by T. A. of H. they, at his death, fell into the hands of his daughters J. A. the wife of T. A. of F. and A. A.

The plaintiff filed her bill against the representatives of T. A. of H., T. A. of F. and J. his wife and A. A.; also against the representative of the estate, for a discovery of the papers, &c. and for relief against the agreement between W. and his father, and for an account.

T. A. of F. and J. his wife and A. A. having put in a demurrer to this bill, Held, that the part of the bill which sought relief against the representatives of T. A. of H. in which the agreement between him and his son W. was prayed to be set aside, had nothing to do with the demurring defendants although they took shares in G.'s estate, and that as to them the bill was an original and not a cross bill, and they were not bound to answer.

Dr. John Gray, late of the Royal Hospital at Portsmouth, a physician in the Royal Navy, by his will having given an annuity to his servant, Mary West, and after making other bequests therein mentioned, directed the residue of his estate to be divided into three equal parts, one-third of which he gave to his brother, Simon Gray, for his own use; another third to his sister, Elizabeth Thomson, for her separate use during her life, and after her decease to her lawful issue, equally to be divided; and as to the remaining one-third, he directed his executors to place it in the public funds for his sister Margaret, the wife of Thomas Allan, saddler, of Dunse, and her issue, and declared that the produce thereof should be paid to her during her natural life, to her separate use; and the testator directed that, after the decease of the said Margaret Allan, such one-third part should be equally divided among her lawful issue living at the time of her decease, to be divided between them, share and share alike, to take per stirpes, and not per capita. And the testator thereby appointed his brother, Simon Gray, his brother-in-law, John Thomson, Sir G. L. Tuthill, M.D. all of whom are since deceased, and Wm. Burnett, of Welbeck street, M.D. now Sir William Burnett, one of the defendants, the executors of his will.

The testator died in March 1826, without revoking or altering his will; and Sir Wm. Burnett is now his sole personal representative.

Simon Gray died on the 28th April, 1842; and the defendant, James Thomson, is his sole personal representative.

The testator's sister, Margaret Allan, named in his will, died on the 2nd of February, 1837, leaving four children only living at the time of her decease, viz. John Allan (since deceased), William Allan, the husband of the plaintiff (since also deceased), and Jean, now the wife of Thomas Allan, of Fogorig, and Agnes Allan, spinster, three of the defendants.

John Allan, being a domiciled resident in Scotland, died about the month of July 1837, intestate and a bachelor; and by the law of Scotland, the brothers and sisters of an intestate are entitled to succeed to his personal estate and effects, to the exclusion of the father; and he, therefore, left his brother, William Allan, and his sisters, Jean Allan and Agnes Allan, his sole next of kin him surviving; and letters of administration of his personal estate and effects were granted by the Prerogative Court of Canterbury to his father, Thomas Allan, of Harlow, who thereby became his sole legal personal representative.

William Allan, and his father, Thomas Allan, of Harlow, were joint occupants of a farm at Lumsdaine, in the county of Berwick, Scotland, for a term of twenty-one years from the year 1833 or 1834; but in consequence of certain pecuniary transactions and liabilities under which the father, Thomas Allan, was placed in favour of his son, an agreement was entered into between them, the effect of which was, that William Allan assigned over to his father "the whole share which belonged or might belong to him of the succession or legacy of the late Dr. John Gray, the uncle of him, the said William Allan, and of the executry or succession of his mother, the late Margaret Gray or Allan;" and he thereby assigned to the said Thomas Allan all right and interest which he had in the above-mentioned lease, together with the whole stock, crop, and implements of husbandry and other effects except his household furniture. By this same instrument Thomas Allan agreed to allow to his son William Allan, during the continuance of the lease, "an alimentary annuity of 100*l.* per annum, payable quarterly, to be payable either to W. Allan's receipt, or that of his then present wife, and to be strictly alimentary, and not attachable for the debts contracted or to be contracted by the said W. Allan. Dated the 12th day of May, 1841."

It was alleged that William Allan, the son, was of a weak and timid frame of mind, and one easily to be imposed upon, and that his signature to the paper-writing was obtained from him by his father, Thomas Allan, by intimidation and threats, and upon a misrepresentation of the account between him and his father, and that William never received any consideration for signing the paper, or if so, a consideration wholly inadequate, and that he signed it without any professional advice or assistance, and under a threat of being disinherited, and being sent to gaol for a small debt.

The plaintiff was not aware at the time that the paper-writing comprised any thing besides the lease of the farm, and that it was not until the death of W. Allan that she was informed of the exact purport of the agreement, so that the same comprehended his interest in the residue of the estate of Dr. John Gray, and his share in the succession to his mother Margaret Gray or Allan, as well as his interest in the lease and stock, and that she had heard Thomas Allan, of Harlow, make a promise to Wm. Allan to restore to him all when reproached by him concerning the above agreement, and that he repeated the same thing to others.

William Allan, the late husband of the plaintiff, died about the 30th of April, 1842, and letters of administration of his estate and effects were granted by the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury to the plaintiff, his widow, who is now his sole legal personal representative.

Thomas Allan, of Harlow (the father), was at the time of his death resident and domiciled in Scotland, and died in April 1843, but previous to his decease he executed a deed of trust and settlement in the Scotch form, which, according to the law of Scotland, is a testamentary instrument, and thereby vested the whole of his property of which he died possessed in the defendants, Thomas Allan, of Sleighthouses, Joseph Allan, of Quixwood, James Thomson, and Thomas Thomson, whom he constituted his executors. Letters of administration of his estate and effects in England were granted to the defendants Thomas Allan and Joseph Allan, who became his personal representatives in England. Letters of administration also of the estate and effects of John Allan, deceased, left unadministered by the father, Thomas Allan, of Harlow, were granted to the two last-named defendants.

The share of William Allan, deceased, of and in the residuary estate of the testator Dr. John Gray, was invested by Sir Wm. Burnett, in his own name, in the Parliamentary Stocks or funds of Great Britain, and has since that time been accumulated at interest by him, and is now in his hands.

About the 23rd of January, 1844, the defendants, Thomas Allan, of Sleighthouses, and Joseph Allan, exhibited their original bill against Sir Wm. Burnett, Agnes Allan, spinster, Thomas Allan, of Fogorig, and Jean, his wife (the last three being the demurring defendants hereto), James Thomson, Thomas Thomson, John Smith, and Jane, his wife, Mary West, and Agnes Allan (the plaintiff), as defendants thereto, thereby stating the will and death of John Gray, and (among other things) stating that Elizabeth Thomson, the sister of John Gray, named in his will, died in December 1839, leaving three children only, viz. James Thomson, Thomas Thomson, and Jane, the wife of John Smith, defendants thereto; and stating (among other things) the lease of the farm and premises at Lumsdaine, and that in the month of May 1841, Wm. Allan was indebted to his father, Thomas Allan, of Harlow, to a considerable amount, and therefore executed the before-mentioned instrument of assignment, and stating that the share of W. Allan in the residuary estate of the testator John Gray ought to be paid to the plaintiffs, as the personal representatives of Thomas Allan, of Harlow; it was thereby prayed (among other things), that the plaintiffs, as the personal representatives of Thomas Allan, of Harlow, deceased, were entitled to the share of William Allan, deceased, in the residuary estate of the testator, John Gray, deceased, and that the defendant, Sir Wm. Burnett, might be decreed to pay to the plaintiffs the share of W. Allan therein, then actually payable, and set apart, and accumulated at interest by him the said Sir Wm. Burnett, as in the bill was mentioned, and that all proper and necessary acts might be taken and directions given for effectuating the matters therein mentioned, and completing and carrying out the trusts of the will of the said John Gray, and that all proper and necessary directions might be given touching the costs of the suit, regard being had to the payments already made out of the residuary estate of the testator, John Gray. To this bill the plaintiff, Agnes Allan, appeared, and put in her answer.

It appears that Thomas Allan, of Harlow, frequently visited at the house of his son William, of Lumsdaine; and when the latter was confined to his bed in his last illness, in the beginning of 1842, his father constantly resided at Lumsdaine, and had access to the desk wherein William Allan kept his private papers, money, and other articles, and to his books and papers.

After the death of William Allan, the father took possession of the desk, and the remainder of his books and papers not being in the desk, and kept the key of the desk; and after the death of Thomas Allan, of Harlaw, his daughters—Jean, the wife of Thomas Allan, of Fogorig, and Agnes Allan, spinster (the demurring defendants hereto)—removed the desk to Dunse, together with its contents, comprising various papers and accounts, and other books, papers, and documents relating to matters before mentioned, and the general affairs of William Allan, and still retained the same; and by reason of these circumstances, she, the plaintiff, was in total ignorance of the state of accounts between her late husband and his father, Thomas Allan, of Harlow; and that she had not, up to the time of commencing the present suit, been furnished with an account of the particulars of the debt in the paper-writing alleged to be due from William Allan to Thomas Allan, the father; and that she believed that, upon a discovery of the several books, papers, &c. it would appear that, either no debt, or one of small amount, was due from William Allan to his said father, and one far inferior to that expressed in the paper-writing or agreement. Many applications were made to the parties to give up the desk to the plaintiff, with the contents and other papers, but without effect.

As administratrix of her late husband, William Allan, the plaintiff claimed to be entitled to one equal one-fourth part of the share of the residue of the testator, John Gray, bequeathed by his will in trust for Margaret Allan and her children, and also one equal third part of the share to which John Allan, deceased, was entitled in the residue.

Under these circumstances, she applied to Sir William Burnett, and required payment of these two several parts and the interest thereon, which was refused, on the ground of notice of the assignment of William's interest therein to his father, Thomas Allan, of Harlow, as hereinbefore stated. The bill therefore prayed that the defendants, Thomas Allan, of Sleighthouses, Joseph Allan, James Thomson, Thomas Thomson, Thomas Allan, of Fogorig, and Jean, his wife, Agnes Allan, spinster, and Sir William Burnett, might make a full and perfect discovery and disclosure of the several matters therein mentioned, and that the said Thomas Allan, of Sleighthouses, Joseph Allan, James Thomson, Thomas Thomson, Thomas Allan, of Fogorig, and Jean, his wife, and Agnes Allan, spinster, might set forth a full and true list and description of all and singular the books of accounts, &c. that related to all and singular or any of the transactions and dealings that passed between the said William Allan and Thomas Allan, of Harlow, in their respective lifetimes, and that the defendants, Thomas Allan, of Sleighthouses, Joseph Allan, James Thomson, Thomas Thomson, Thomas Allan, of Fogorig, and Jean his wife, and Agnes Allan, spinster, might produce and leave the same in the hands of the proper clerk of records and writs, for the plaintiff to inspect the same and take copies thereof as she should be advised; and that the said paper writing and alleged agreement might be declared to be void, and that the plaintiff, as administratrix of the said Wm. Allan, might be declared entitled to the share or shares of the said Wm. Allan of and in the residue of the said testator's personal estate and effects, or that if the Court should be of opinion that the said paper-writing and alleged agreement was not wholly void or inoperative, that an account might be taken of what, if any thing, was due from the said William Allan to his father, Thomas Allan, of Harlaw, at the time of the date of the said paper-writing and alleged agreement, and of what, if any thing, is now due from the plaintiff, as such representative as aforesaid, to the defendants, Thomas Allan, of Sleighthouses, and Joseph Allan, as such representatives as aforesaid, the plaintiff thereby offering to come to such account and to pay to them what, if any thing, should be found due on taking such accounts, and that she might thereupon be declared entitled to receive such share or shares of the said clear residue of the testator's personal estate and effects as should appear due to her as such personal representative of the said William Allan, exonerated and discharged from any claim upon the same founded upon or in respect of the said paper-writing and alleged agreement; and that the same might be decreed to be paid to her accordingly, and that for the above purposes all proper orders and directions might be given, and inquiries instituted.

To this bill Agnes Allan, spinster, Thomas Allan, of Fogorig, and Jean, his wife, put in a demurrer for multifariousness and want of equity.

Bethel and Glass, for the demurring defendants.—The bill is filed for the purpose of setting aside the agreement between William Allen and his father, and for taking an account. The defendants, for whom we appear, have nothing to do with the parties claiming restitution from the father or his representatives. If the bill is for an account of Dr. Gray's estate, then you must have all the parties interested in his will before the Court. Dr. Gray, by his will, divides his residuary estate into three equal parts; one-third he gives to his brother Simon, another third to his sister Elizabeth Thomson for life, and her issue, and the remaining third to his sister Margaret Allen, for life, and her issue; therefore the plaintiff would be entitled to one-twelfth. If this bill had been for an account of Dr. Gray's residuary estate, then the demurring defendants would be necessary parties. Now, Dr. Gray's estate has been administered; and there is no foundation upon the allegations contained in the bill to take an account of his property, neither have the demurring defendants any interest in the subject of the present suit; for, looking at all the passages in the bill wherein they are introduced, they only prove them to be at best but mere witnesses. In that part which states that Thomas Allan, of Sleighthouses, and Joseph Allan, filed their bill against the plaintiff and the other parties therein named,—now, that was clearly for an account of Dr. Gray's estate. But we are told that we have no right to demur, because this is a cross bill. Then, again, the bill charges that we are in possession of papers, and that we are in conjunction with other persons to keep the plaintiff from regaining them; but if the plaintiff complains of that, her remedy is at law. The bill is therefore directed to objects with which they have no interest whatever. But suppose we had, how could the plaintiff justify two distinct objects; i. e. to set aside an agreement and an account of Dr. Gray's estate, in which both persons and matters are so utterly at variance. Do we ever hear of bringing parties before the Court to save a contingency?

Wakefield and Hubback for the plaintiff.—Dr. Gray left the residue of his property in thirds. The suit arose out of an agreement between the father and son, in which the father takes advantage of him; as soon as William died, his widow claimed his property, with his residuary interest in Dr. Gray's estate. The executors of Thomas Allan, of Harlow, filed their bill against Sir William Burnett and others. What claim had the father or his representatives to file a bill against the son or his representatives? Such a bill, however, is filed by the father's executors, which must fail altogether unless they can establish an agreement between Thomas Allan and his son. We resist the agreement. J. Allan is out of the question; his share is paid. The defendants state that we seek John's share—we seek no such thing; and if the demurring defendants are not necessary parties to this bill, they were not necessary parties to the other bill.—[The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In order to defeat the claim of Thomas Allan and Joseph Allan, the executors of T. Allan of Harlow, you file a bill?] Yes, a cross bill. [The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I cannot see how the demurring defendants make out any claim to T. Allen's interest.] They took the interest between them. [The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Thomas and Joseph Allan were the representatives of T. Allan, of Harlow.] Yes, in this country. The defendants have an interest and have a right to be here, as interested in Dr. Gray's estate. [The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—When once the corpus of a fund is ascertained, the amount of each party is ascertained.] No. [The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Yes; if a claim be made out of a given sum, the ascertained sum determines the parties' rights.] Why do they make the demurring defendants parties to this suit? Because they are interested in the suit. How can the Court set aside that agreement without the other children of Thos. Allen of Harlow? for in the other suit of Allan v. Burnett we cannot set aside the agreement. Now, in order to ascertain what is William's share, and the share of the rest of the children, they must have an account of Dr. Gray's estate. How, then, if they must be made parties to the former suit of Allan v. Burnett, why are they not to be made parties to this suit also? for unless an account be taken of Dr. Gray's estate, they cannot be paid. If this be looked at as if it were a purely original bill, then the demurring defendants ought to be parties to the record for an account of Dr. Gray's estate; for there is no allegation that Dr. Gray's estate has been ascertained, nor does it appear that the share of William has been ascertained. (Mitford, 81, 4th ed., Deere v. Attorney-General, 1 Yo. & Coll. 206.)

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The original bill was filed by the representatives of Thomas Allan, of Harlow, against the representatives of Dr. Gray and other parties interested under his will, including the demurring defendants hereto. That bill was founded upon the allegation that William Allan was indebted to his father, T. Allan, to a considerable amount; the share of William Allan in the residuary estate of Dr. Gray, assigned by him to his father, ought to be paid to them as the personal representatives of Thomas Allan, the father, against which assignment as a valid agreement it is now disputed in this cause; therefore, primâ facie, all persons interested in Dr. Gray's estate ought to be made parties; but the representatives of William went to impeach the transaction between William and his father. Now, although the demurring defendants are entitled to share in Dr. Gray's estate, they have nothing to do with William's estate; and if in that suit the bill had been filed for enforcing the agreement as between the plaintiffs and the representatives of William's estate, then Dr. Burnett might have demurred, as having no interest in respect of the claims of T. Allan's representatives and Wm. Allan's representatives. But this suit is the converse; for the bill is filed by William's representatives against Dr. Burnett and some of the defendants to the former suit; it is filed, not only against the plaintiffs to the original suit, but also against others who are not plaintiffs in that suit. As to the demurring defendants, therefore, it is not a cross suit, but an original one. Demurrer allowed.

ROLLS COURT.

Wednesday, July 10.

AMBROSE v. DUNMOW UNION.

Disputes respecting the compensation to be made to commissioners for examining witnesses in a cause are cognizable by a court of equity alone, of which they are the officers, and ought not to be made the subject-matter of litigation elsewhere.

This was a motion for an injunction by the plaintiffs, the assignees of William Ward, a bankrupt, against Messrs. Adcock and Cooper, commissioners for examining witnesses in the suit, to stay proceedings at law. The commissioners had been employed several days in examining witnesses, and a whole day in inspecting the Dunmow Union workhouse. After the depositions were returned, a dispute arose respecting the remuneration, the commissioners requiring three guineas a day and expenses, and the plaintiffs' solicitor offering two, which was refused. On the 22nd of April, 1844, notice of an action at law for the recovery of the remuneration claimed was given, but the writ of summons was not served till the 20th day of June. On the 18th of the same month a tender of the amount was made on the terms of the commissioners guaranteeing the repayment of the excess beyond what would be found to be the proper allowance. This offer was not accepted; and on the 26th judgment by default was taken out at law, which the judge agreed to set aside on an undertaking by the parties to try on the merits. Notice of this motion was then given, and it was now insisted by the plaintiffs that it was a case for this Court alone to decide, inasmuch as the commissioners were its officers; and by the other side, that they had a right to go to law, and if not, that the application was too late, and the jurisdiction at law conceded by agreeing to try on the merits.

Turner and Walpole, for the motion, cited Blundell v. Gladstone (9 Sim. 455); Re Weaver (2 Myl. & Cr. 441).

Roupell and Rolt, contrà.

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS had no doubt whatever about the jurisdiction. The commissioners were officers of this court, and by this Court alone should their remuneration be settled, and not elsewhere. No authorities were necessary: it was the ordinary practice of the court. The injunction must be granted, and a reference must be taken to the Master to ascertain what is due. Considering the delay in coming here, and the tender that was made, and that the notice of motion was not served till after judgment signed, let there be no costs on either side.

WHITE v. YOUNG.

If a solicitor, who is employed by a vendor to sell his estate, act also for the purchaser, he is to be considered his solicitor in that transaction, though generally he employs another.

A purchaser in such a case should look to the authority of the agent, and if, before the authority to sell is actually given or the contract signed (though there may be something said about it), he advance money to the agent, which the latter converts to his own use, it will not be considered part payment of the purchase-money, even though the agent may have fraudulently represented it to be for his principal.

This suit arose out of the same series of fraudulent transactions as that stated in Young v. Guy (3 Law T. 260), and which it is unnecessary to repeat. In November, 1840, the plaintiff employed Rumsey to sell the Radnage estate, and a contract was entered into with the defendant on the 11th of the same month, for the purchase of the estate at 920*l.*, and 300*l.* was then advanced at the request of Rumsey, but which never came to the hands of the plaintiff. According to defendant's statement, Rumsey was authorized to sell the estate, and he had been in treaty with him long before the date of the contract, and had advanced various sums to him on plaintiff's account, but for one of these Rumsey had given as security his own promissory note, and a mortgage of the same Radnage estate made to him by the plaintiff for 200*l.* This mortgage-security he afterwards got back, and it is not now forthcoming. The plaintiff was informed by Rumsey that it was rescinded. Another of those sums was by a note of Rumsey, not produced by defendant, acknowledged to be borrowed from defendant for plaintiff's use. A deed of conveyance of the premises, dated 25th of March, 1841, was afterwards executed, and an indorsed receipt in full for the purchase-money was signed by the plaintiff, to whom Rumsey paid the balance of the purchase money, after deducting Erle's mortgage expenses, &c. The conveyance was a simple conveyance in fee, and took no notice of any incumbrance. The contract for the purchase contained no allusion to the sums alleged by the defendant to have been previously advanced by him. On the discovery of Rumsey's fraud, the plaintiff filed his bill for relief, and prayed the payment by the defendant of the 920*l.* purchase-money, except the said sum of 300*l.* and the sum of 35*l.* which were advanced after the contract, and were not disputed. The defendant filed a cross-bill to have specific performance of his contract, Erle's mortgage paid off by the vendor, and a conveyance in fee, free from incumbrances. Cases cited: Pinnock v. Harrison (3 Mees. & Welsby, 532); Wyatt v. Lord Hertford (3 East, 147); Robinson v. Read (9 B. & Cr. 449); Coppin v. Coppin (P. Wms.); Chitty on Bills.

Tierney and Roundell Palmer, for the plaintiff.

Kindersley and Parry, for the defendant.

The MASTER of the ROLLS (his Lordship stated the facts at length).—This is a case in which two innocent persons have placed confidence in a third, and a gross fraud having been committed, the question is, which of the two is to be the sufferer. The sums advanced by the defendant previous to the agreement were not noticed in it, and no money was paid at the execution of the conveyance. The only sums that can be considered as paid are those admitted; and the defendant cannot be permitted to set off Rumsey's debt to him against the purchase-money. The authority given by the vendor was not to that extent, and should have been examined by the purchaser. Rumsey must be considered the solicitor of the defendant in this transaction, though not usually employed by him. The plaintiff is entitled to the relief prayed on performing his part. The costs of both suits are to follow the event.

LECKIE v. HOGBEN.

A testatrix being liable to the payment of an annuity to A for A's life, and being entitled to an annuity of the same amount for the life of B, which she applies in payment of the former, and being also entitled to a policy of assurance for the sum of 2,000l. on the life of B, makes the following codicil to her will:—"In the event of B dying before A, I direct my executors to pay A's annuity out of my estate, as they in their discretion may think fit. In the event of A dying before B, I give the annuity on B's life to C, he paying the premiums on the policy of 2,000l. and at the death of B, I give to C the 2,000l. also." C was one of her two residuary legatees. B died before A. Held, that C was not entitled to the 2,000l.

William Leckie died in 1824, in Surinam, having by his will bequeathed an annuity of 200*l.* to his brother, Remington Leckie, and one of 150*l.* to Jane Anne Gill, both to be secured on landed property in Great Britain; and he appointed his sister, Sophia Leckie, his residuary legatee and executrix in England. For the purpose of securing the 200*l.* Sophia Leckie purchased an annuity during the life of one Mrs. Fanny Burgess, charged on certain estates in the county of Kent, and to secure the 150*l.* she purchased certain leaseholds in Johnson's-court, Fleet-street. In 1828, previous to her marriage with John Penny, she assigned all her property, including that from her brother, to trustees, in trust for her separate use for life, and in case of her death in her husband's lifetime, and there being no children of the marriage, both which events happened, then in trust for such persons, &c. as she should appoint. In December 1834, by her will, she gave the interest of the money standing in the names of her trustees in the Bank of England (which included all her property but the securities for the annuities and the policy of assurance) to her husband for life, and then one moiety of the same to the plaintiff, James Henry Leckie, and the other to her niece, Anne Robinson, for life, and then to her children; and appointed the plaintiff, John Penny, and Henry Hogben, her executors. By a codicil to her will, dated Sept. 5, 1835, reciting most of the foregoing facts, and that on the death of Mrs. Burgess before Remington Leckie, the sum of 2,000*l.* would be recovered to her estate, she goes on to say:—"In the event of Mrs. Burgess dying before my brother R. Leckie, I direct my trustees to pay to him the annuity out of my estate as they in their discretion may think best. In the event of my brother, R. Leckie, dying before Mrs. Burgess, I give the annuity of 200*l.* for his life to my brother, Captain James Henry Leckie, he paying thereout 80*l.* 16s. 3d. premium on the policy of assurance; and on the death of Mrs. Burgess, I give to him the policy for 2,000*l.* On the death of Mrs. Gill, I give the leaseholds to Ann Robinson." The testatrix died in 1838, and Mrs. Burgess in 1842; R. Leckie is still living. The question was, whether James Henry Leckie was entitled to the policy as a particular bequest.

Pevers and Wood, for the plaintiff.

Kindersley and Freeling, for Mr. and Mrs. Robinson and their children.

Busk, for the executors.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The will of this testatrix affected the property in the bank only; and this she has left in moieties, after the death of her husband, to the plaintiff and Mrs. Robinson; but whether she meant that there should be an equal division of that and the other property does not appear. She then begins her codicil by reciting how she has disposed of her property, &c., and by noticing that 2,000*l.* may be recovered to her estate; and proceeds to say "In the event," &c.—the clause which has raised this question. Two events are noticed; and in one of them there is a single proposition, and in the other two propositions. In one case, the annuity is to be provided for out of her estate, as the executors think proper; in the other, the 200*l.* annuity for the life of Mrs. Burgess is disposed of, and also the 2,000*l.* policy. In the case of Mrs. Gill, she assumes the leasehold to be of sufficient duration to provide for her annuity, and there is no necessity to provide for two events in her case. In the events which have happened, the plaintiff is not entitled to the policy; but as it was a very proper case to bring before the Court, all parties must have their costs out of the estate, the executors, &c. as between solicitor and client.

MATTHIE v. EDWARDS.

"Injunction causes" in the 5th Order of April 1828, mean causes only in which the injunction depends on the exceptions: and, therefore, where an injunction is prayed by the bill, and an order for referring the exceptions is obtained before the expiration of eight days, it is irregular, and will be discharged upon motion.

In this cause exceptions were taken to the answer, for insufficiency, on the 1st of July, and on the 2nd an order of reference was obtained, and

Charles Hall now moved for its discharge, on the ground that the plaintiff was not at liberty, under the 5th Order of April 1828, to refer the exceptions, in any but an injunction cause, before the expiration of eight days from their being taken. The bill in this case prayed for an injunction, and this was not an injunction cause within the meaning of the Order, that is, a cause in which the injunction depends upon the exceptions. (Parker v. Bull, 4 Beav. 395.)

Kindersley, contrà.—The case cited does not apply, for there the plaintiff had obtained the common injunction, and it was dissolved.

The Master of the Rolls.—The order is irregular, and must be discharged.

Harvey v. Mount.

Where a witness, who previously to his examination has made an affidavit as to the subject-matter thereof, and, on the examination, contradicts the affidavit in one particular, but has not the affidavit produced to him, it is not an objection to a commission to examine witnesses as to his credit in this court, though it would if he had been publicly examined.

Neither is it an objection that the affidavit was taken by the solicitor to the plaintiff of his own authority, though it is highly improper.

This case is reported in 3 Law T. 218, and the judgment on one of the three points raised is there given. It was a motion for a commission to examine witnesses as to the credit of one Charlotte Sangwell, and the grounds of objection to it were, first, that the practice of the court required the articles to be exhibited before the commission was moved for; secondly, that Charlotte Sangwell should have been cross-examined as to the document itself, and allowed an opportunity to explain; and, thirdly, that the affidavit was illegal.

The Master of the Rolls, after stating the facts of the case and the grounds of objection, said:—The regular course is, first, to file the exceptions, but the practice is not uniform; and I must follow the course sanctioned by Lord Eldon. As to the second objection, if the witness is publicly examined, then I think the document ought to be produced; but in this court, and as evidence is here taken privately, it is not necessary. As to the third ground I have much doubt. The conduct of the solicitor was highly improper; it was an attempt to entangle the conscience of the witness, and deserves reprobation. Under the circumstances, however, and it being very doubtful whether it had any effect on the depositions of the witness, I am not disposed to admit the objection. I must, therefore, grant the motion, giving the plaintiffs leave to examine witnesses as to the credit of Charlotte Sangwell, and also an opportunity of explaining as to the affidavit; and giving the defendants leave also to examine in support of her credit.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Friday, July 26.

Ward v. The Law Society.

Corporation—Power of majority—Destruction of charter.

Where a large majority of a corporation, the capital stock of which was held by the members, resolved to surrender their charter and obtain a new one for purposes dissimilar from those of the original charter, the Court, upon a bill being filed by a member, granted an injunction to restrain the surrender until the hearing of the cause.

This was a motion that the society and the agents and officers thereof might be restrained by the order and injunction of the Court from conveying, assigning, or making over the real and personal property of the society, or any part thereof, to any person or persons, upon and for the purposes mentioned in resolutions stated in the bill, and passed on the 22nd of August, 1843, or any of such purposes, or in any other manner in furtherance of the intention of the said society to surrender its existing charter, and from affixing the common seal of the society to any deed or instrument for that purpose; and from accepting a new charter, according to the draught mentioned in the bill, or otherwise inconsistent with the existing charter of the society. The society was incorporated by charter, dated Dec. 22, 1831, for the purpose of facilitating the acquisition of legal knowledge, and for the better and more conveniently carrying on the professional duties of the members. The capital of the society was to be a joint stock of 50,000*l.* in shares of 25*l.* each, and of any further sum not exceeding 25,000*l.*

Russell and Parker appeared in support of the motion.

The plaintiffs are two shareholders in the society, who, with others, sixteen in number, and holding twenty-two shares among them, disapproved of a resolution that had been come to by the whole of the other members, for remodelling the institution, and rendering it no longer a joint-stock society of proprietors, but a corporation in its former signification, and similar to the universities and other learned bodies." That majority consisted of 1,300 members, holding among them 1,301 shares in the property of the society, and they proposed a new charter, by which it was to be recited, that "whereas it is expedient that the constitution of the society should be so modified as that the members thereof should not possess any individual right of property in its capital or possessions, rents or income, but that the whole capital and possessions and the rents and income thereof should be applicable to the general purposes of the society, in promoting professional improvement, and facilitating the acquisition of legal knowledge." It was proposed that the charter should incorporate all the present members and "all such other persons, being attorneys, &c. as shall from time to time be elected members of the society, in manner to be directed," without any limit as to number. This intended charter was the subject of the resolutions referred to in the notice of motion, and the draught of it, somewhat modified from the original, was the one also referred to in that motion.

Wigram and Adams opposed the motion, on the ground that the vast majority had a right to do that which they proposed,—that it was incident to a corporation that the majority might bind the minority. Even supposing there were any doubt as to the power of the Crown to grant a new charter, still Parliament could give the authority, and the great majority of members ought not to be driven to that expense by the caprice of so small a minority. The honourable motive of the majority was to raise the professional character of the members in public estimation, by converting a joint-stock company into a corporation, having no means of making a profit of their shares. They had the sanction of some of the highest authorities in the country for the course they pursued, and the purity of their motives would be best proved by the fact that, though they might have made dividends of the profits, they had abstained from doing so, but had invested the profits either in property for the use of the society, such as land, books, &c. or in the funds, for the further advancement of its beneficial purposes. The Court had asked why the members who had so acted feared to keep open an inducement to take the profits? To that it was replied that, although the members were conscious of their own purity and honour, they wished to inspire a limitless confidence on the part of the public, by shewing that they were not only proof against temptation when it existed, but that they wished to remove the possibility of temptation hereafter. Whatever the minority, small as it was, in any reasonable way wished done, the majority were willing to comply with; but nothing short of leaving the society a joint-stock company for profit of the members would suit the few who dissented. The bill was filed for the protection of the individual rights of the plaintiffs, and not for the general benefit of the subscribers and members. So great, indeed, had been the supposition that the new charter as proposed would be granted, that the registrar of the society had been appointed the receiver of certain fees on the admission of attorneys and solicitors, a circumstance that would never have happened had that officer been supposed always to remain the member of a joint-stock society, having a profit in its shares. The motion ought to be refused.

His Honour said, that the society consisted of certain gentlemen associated together for the purpose of affording "facilities for the convenient discharge of professional duties" of its members, besides the purposes of acquiring legal knowledge. For such purposes they obtained a charter from the Crown, and by the 17th clause the committee of management had power to do all acts fitting to be done, "in order to carry into full operation and effect the object and purposes of the said society, so always that the same be not inconsistent with or repugnant to the provisions of this our charter, or any existing bye-law, ordinance, or regulation, made, ordered, or agreed upon at any general meeting of the said society, or the laws and statutes of this our realm." Now, it was impossible to conceive any thing more repugnant, whether to a body natural or corporate, than death, whether that death were natural or civil; and nothing appeared more inconsistent with the existence of the society than any act which could in itself annihilate it. The law of the country allowed of the existence of corporations—the law of the country allowed the subjects of the realm to obtain property in such corporations—and his Honour could see no principle either of law or equity by which property so acquired with the sanction of the law could be taken from the owner without his free consent. Little was said in the charter as to the custody of the common seal, or by whom it could be affixed, but it surely could not be used by any members for the destruction of the corporation without the consent of those interested; the more especially as the purposes to which it was now proposed to be applied were wholly foreign to the purposes of the original institution of the society. The difference between the two expressions "convenient discharge of professional duties," and "promotion of professional improvement" was plain and obvious. As at present constituted, the number of members could never exceed 2,000, and in all probability never would reach 2,000, whereas in the new society the numbers would be indefinite. Could such a course be permitted to be taken by a body of gentlemen, however respectable, however honourable, actuated by motives however pure and disinterested? His Honour thought not; and he was free to say that the gentlemen now proposing to do the act in question were most honourable, and he believed actuated by the purest and best of motives. When a party had a clear right to refuse his assent to the course proposed, the Court was asked to permit the act to be done before the hearing. Without pronouncing any opinion on the power to grant a new charter, his Honour thought that his course was plainly proper, and simply unavoidable—to grant the injunction until the hearing, or until further order, without prejudice to any question.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Saturday, July 6.

Chappel v. Cooper.

A man dies insolvent, leaving an infant wife: Held, that his reasonable funeral expenses are necessaries for which she may bind herself.

Byles, Serjt. and J. Gray shewed cause against a rule, obtained by Barstow, to set aside the verdict found for the plaintiff, and to enter the same for the defendant, pursuant to leave reserved at the trial.

The action was debt for work and labour, goods sold, &c. Plea, infancy. Replication, necessaries; upon which issue was joined. At the trial before Gurney, B. it appeared that the plaintiff was an undertaker, and that he had been called in by the defendant to conduct the funeral of her late husband, who had died leaving no property. It was contended at the trial, on the part of the defendant, that the husband's funeral expenses were not legal necessaries for the infant wife.

Gurney, B. directed the jury to find a verdict for so much of the amount claimed as they thought reasonable, having respect to the condition in life of the deceased.

The jury, accordingly, having reduced the bill considerably, found for the plaintiff for the balance, and leave was reserved for the defendant to move, and this rule was obtained accordingly.

For the plaintiff it was contended that the legal meaning of the word "necessaries" is not merely bodily sustenance or clothing for the infant's person, but extends to the support of members of his family. (Turner v. Trisby, 1 Strange, 168.) Necessaries for an infant wife are necessaries for himself; though, if they are provided in order for the marriage, he is not chargeable, though she use them afterwards.

Alderson, B.—That is, it is not necessary for him to be married, but being married, his wife must be clothed.

Byles, Serjt.—Hand v. Suney (8 T. R. 578) lays down the same principle in effect. In that case the infant was a captain in the army, and was held liable for clothes furnished for the use of his servant. An infant is also liable for necessaries for his lawful children supplied on his credit. (Chitty Contr. 143; Fonbl. Equity, 5th ed. 73.) Suppose the case of an infant mother. The law would impose upon her the necessity of providing food and clothing for her child, and in case of neglect, might even hold her guilty of murder. Surely the law would not refuse her the means of obtaining such things in a lawful manner. Such a case shews that the word necessaries cannot mean things merely for the personal use of the infant.

Alderson, B.—Supposing that it extends to the personæ conjunctæ of the infant, can the dead body of the husband be said to retain that relation to the wife? During his life, she was liable for nothing, and, therefore, no part of her liability could by possibility arise until after the death of the persona conjuncta.

Byles, Serjt.—Even supposing the body to be that of a stranger. If the infant were under some disability to leave the room, would it not be necessary to have it removed? In this case, she is either to remain and be poisoned, or she is to break every moral obligation by leaving her husband's body unburied, or she must be allowed to pledge her credit. Lodgings were necessary for her. Suppose her to have no other roof; must she not have had the body removed? It is submitted that at all events there was a moral obligation upon the defendant to perform the last rites decently. Your lordships will surely not say that the body of the husband claims nothing from the duty or affection of the wife? Such a doctrine would outrage humanity. There is also another ground upon which the law will hold this expense to be necessary for this defendant. She was in possession after the death of her husband of these apartments, and the law would throw upon the occupier of a tenement the burden of burying the body of any person dying therein without the means of interment. It would be an ecclesiastical offence to neglect it, or a mandamus would lie to compel her to do it. Reg. v. Stuart and Another (4 Per. & Dav. 349); also citing

Coates v. Wilson (5 Esp.); Peters v. Fleming (6 M. & W. 42.)

Crowder, Q.C. and Barstow, contrà.—In all the cases cited on the other side, the principle of what may be necessaries is admitted, and it is a mere question of degree. In this case, a new principle is sought to be established. Necessaries for a child or for a wife are equivalent to necessaries for the person of the father or husband; but it is now said, that although a person is not liable for a single thing for her husband during his life, she becomes liable for him at the very moment when separated from him. As to the physical necessity of removing the body because of the unpleasant results which would follow its remaining, in order to make that necessity bear upon the respondent more than upon any other person, it must appear, which it does not, that she had no other roof to go to. If the doctrine of moral obligation is suffered to prevail, where is it to stop? Suppose a child left in the house, and plenty of other children who were not there; and suppose even that one of those other children was entitled to the property, the moral obligation would still be said to attach to the child on the spot. There is, perhaps, a moral obligation on a child to pay his father's debts, but surely an infant could not bind himself for that purpose.

ROLFE, B.—It is not matter of necessity that debts should be paid by any one, but it is necessary that this body should be buried by some one.

ALDERSON, B.—In Reg. v. Stuart, it seems to be assumed that the funeral is a right on the part of the dead man. I am not prepared to say that the body can be said to have any rights at all.

The Court took time to consider, and judgment was this day delivered by

PARKE, B.—A number of cases were ingeniously suggested by the counsel for the plaintiff in which these expenses might be necessaries, as, for instance, if the defendant were sick, and had no other room. It is sufficient for the purposes of this argument to say, that no such special circumstances exist here. Things necessary are those without which the infant cannot reasonably exist. Instruction for the mind has been held to be as much necessary as support for the body. Attendance, also, may be a necessary. When once it has been established that a particular class of things may be necessary, the rest must depend on the station of the infant, but it must always be first made out that the articles belong to some class which may be within the legal definition of necessaries. Articles of mere luxury are always excluded, though luxurious necessaries are sometimes allowed. This principle alone would not decide this case. An infant is allowed by law to make a contract of marriage. A contract for necessaries to an infant's wife or children is used by Lord Bacon as an illustration of the law on this subject. There are many authorities which lay down that Christian burial is a part of a man's own rights. An infant husband could contract for the Christian burial of his wife or children as personæ conjunctæ. Then the question arises whether there is any distinction between an infant husband and an infant widow. If the husband can so contract, it is because the burial of his persona conjuncta is a personal benefit to him. If so, we do not see why a different rule should prevail in the case of the wife. It may be observed, that as the ground of our decision arises out of the previous contract of marriage, it does not follow that other relations would be liable. Rule discharged.

MARQUIS OF BUTE v. THOMPSON.

In this case the Court intimated that they had decided, but they understood that the parties wished to arrange the matter, and that no judgment should be delivered, when a person present in court said that he had a case pending which had been ordered to stand over to abide the judgment in this case, when the Court said he was entitled to their judgment, which they merely stated would be for the plaintiff in both cases. Judgment will be delivered at length next term.

COURT OF REVIEW.

July 16, 20, and 23.

Ex parte MAXWELL, re BRETTAGH.

Petition to supersede a fiat—Length of time.

Where a fiat, dated 28th of March, 1842, was afterwards duly prosecuted, and in June 1844, before the bankrupt had obtained his certificate, a petition was presented by a creditor who had not proved, seeking to annul the fiat, on the ground of legal invalidity, it was held that the petition was presented too late.

This was a petition by a creditor who had not proved, to annul the fiat, on the ground of legal invalidity. The fiat was dated on the 28th of March, 1842, and adjudication was made on the 6th of June following. On the 20th of June, 1842, assignees were chosen, and on the 19th of July in the same year, the bankrupt surrendered, and passed his last examination on the 3rd of November, 1842. The bankrupt had not obtained his certificate. This petition was presented in June last. A preliminary objection was taken to the hearing it, on account of the length of time which had elapsed since the bankruptcy, and the case stood over for the purpose of searching for precedents upon the subject.

Swanson and Torrigno, for the petition, cited Ex parte Crowder (2 Rose, 324); Ex parte Cutten (Buck, 68); Ex parte Levi (Buck, 75); Ex parte Wyatt (1 Mont. & Ayr. 405); Ex parte Bonsor (2 Rose, 61); Ex parte Moule (14 Ves. 602). From the Registrar's Book the following cases were cited:—Re Bass (Order Book, 1819-20, No. 154, p. 14), where the order was made upon the petition of the bankrupt presented on the 12th of May, 1818, the commission bearing date the 24th of February, 1816; and Re Henry Cooper (Order Book, 1820, No. 156, p. 258), where the commission, dated the 24th of January, 1815, was superseded upon the petition of the bankrupt, presented the 10th July, 1820.

Russell, for the respondents, was not heard.

The CHIEF JUDGE said, that he assumed that the evidence of the legal requisites was insufficient, and that the materials on the proceedings were insufficient, and that the question was, whether the party had come within time. It had been said, that there was no authority restricting the time for complaint when a bankrupt had not obtained his certificate; and it had been urged, that Lord Eldon had held that such applications were within time if not postponed for more than three or four years. He was not satisfied that Lord Eldon had so held; but if he had, it was before 1825; and it did not follow that he would have so held in the present state of administration in bankruptcy. This was a case for the discretion of the Court. Here all the requisite proceedings were as long since as June 1842; and in June 1844 this petition was presented by a simple contract creditor, whose right was not defeated, as there was no certificate. There had been no sufficient reason for the delay, and irreparable mischief might arise from interference.

Sir GEORGE ROSE concurred with him, that the applicant came too late, and that the petition ought to be dismissed.

Monday, July 29.

Ex parte GIBBS.—Re GIBBS.

Bankrupt's Examination—Discretion of the Commissioner.

Where, upon the examination of a bankrupt, a statement unsatisfactory to the Commissioner was made by the bankrupt as to the destruction of a certain book, and the Commissioner declined to proceed with the examination until the book was produced, the Court, upon the petition of the bankrupt, directed that the examination should be proceeded with, without prejudice to the matters in issue.

This was a petition presented by the bankrupt, praying that the Commissioner might be directed to proceed with the examination of the bankrupt. In 1823, Gibbs and his partner Howard had been made bankrupts, and in March 1843 Gibbs became bankrupt again. In January last, the petitioner was examined concerning a certain vellum book with a lock, and the petitioner then admitted, that some years since he had such a book, but he stated that it was destroyed by him in the year 1831. In opposition to this statement, three of the bankrupt's clerks swore that they had seen this book in the bankrupt's possession within a twelvemonth of the last bankruptcy. The Commissioner then declined to proceed with the examination until the book was produced.

Swanston, Russell, and Montague for the petitioner.

Cooper and Bacon, for the assignees, argued that some improper conduct must be shewn on the part of the commissioner to justify the interference with his discretion. (Ex parte Perkins, 1 Mont. & Ayr. 524.)

The CHIEF JUDGE.—It seems to me that good may be done, and that no harm can arise, if I allow that in substance to be done which in substance has been asked. I shall, therefore, direct the assignees to proceed before the commissioner with the examination and investigation of the bankrupt's accounts, and the further examination of the bankrupt, for and in all such respects as the same can be done under existing circumstances, without prejudice to any question whether the bankrupt's answers have or have not been hitherto satisfactory or sufficient, and without prejudice to any question as to the existence or non-existence of the book or books alleged to be existing. Let the commissioner be at liberty, if he think fit, to make any special report; the petition in all other respects to stand over.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Monday, July 29.

(Before Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.)

Re ROE and BLACHFORD.

Where bankers, knowing themselves to be in difficulties, encourage deposits from their customers, such conduct is fraudulent, and the Court will refuse their certificates.

This day having been appointed for the learned commissioner to deliver his judgment in this peculiar case,

His HONOUR asked the trade assignee (Mr. Woodford) what opinion he had of the conduct of the bankrupts as traders—not that it is to decide my judgment, but I should wish, nevertheless, to hear what it is.

Woodford.—Very bad, Sir.

A similar question having been put to the official assignee,

Follett said that the bankrupts had been very zealous in their attendance, and were most anxious to give every information, and that their balance-sheet, though very voluminous, was well framed.

Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.—This is a case of considerable importance both to the public and to the bankrupts, Messrs. Roe and Blachford, being one only of a number of cases where the failure of a bank has brought misfortune and ruin upon persons who had placed confidence in the respectability of the parties. It is a case, I am sorry to say, of no very unfrequent occurrence, for in my short experience as a commissioner of bankruptcy, I have already had three cases of much about the same character, being that of gentlemen of supposed respectability and station in society, who have gone on for years in a hopelessly insolvent state, trusting merely to the chapter of accidents for extrication from their difficulties, yet who up to the last moment receive deposits from the unsuspecting individual who may be their customer.

The official assignee, in answer to a question put to him by the Court, said that the debts in this case amounted to upwards of 100,000*l.* but from the uncertain nature of the assets he should think that the dividend would not probably be more than one shilling in the pound.

Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.—It has been strongly urged by the counsel for both the bankrupts that the gentlemen who are now creditors for 60,000*l.* had only themselves to blame for not using that diligence which they ought to have done in investigating the accounts of the bankrupts when the new bank was formed. To a certain extent I join in this opinion, and I think the conduct of Cooke and others was faulty to a certain extent in their not making a more rigid examination, and thereby giving a fictitious credit to Roe and Blachford, and inducing the continuance of deposits to be made with them. It has also been urged that by the accounts not having been sufficiently looked into, Roe and Blachford were led into the temptation of going on in an insolvent state, and of committing the various acts charged, and, I am sorry to say, proved against them. The language of Mr. Cooke is that of unbounded confidence, for, in his examination, he states his belief to be that Mr. Roe is one of the most honest men in the world; and with respect to the imputation thrown out against Mr. Cooke, I do not think it can be fairly applied to him, particularly as to the allegation that he wanted to get at the business of the old bank; and therefore it is ungenerous on the part of these gentlemen (Roe and Blachford) to say that Mr. Cooke and the others would not have trusted to the bankrupts, if it were not for their (Cooke and others) interest. The question here, however, is, how far the blind confidence reposed in bankers is an excuse for Messrs. Roe and Blachford's going on in the continuance of their business in this insolvent state. It may be unwise and foolish on the part of these victims of over-confidence, but if we look at these transactions from beginning to end, we can see no excuse for the conduct of the bankrupts as bankers. In the case of Mr. Roe, he was the nephew of Sir Richard Bassett, and had lived in a state of splendour, was a chief magistrate, and several times the mayor of Newport; and his style of expenditure was such as to induce the belief, not only of his solvency, but that he was opulent. Under such circumstances, therefore, was it to be wondered at that the members of a rural population should "bank" where their fathers had done so before them, and on their return from depositing their money, look up at the house of one of the partners, and entertain no doubt of their respectability. The bankrupts, nevertheless, having spread ruin and misery around, could not be entitled now to say to the sufferers "Why did you shut your eyes?" Now, let us look at the charges, and the conclusion at which I am obliged to come. The first charge is, that in 1812, the bankrupts being hopelessly insolvent, to the extent of 50,000*l.* or 60,000*l.* they permitted these gentlemen (the Joint-stock company) to become their creditors, then wilfully concealing from them their insolvency, and giving to them, at the same time, an untrue statement of their affairs. Now, how is this proved? By a memorandum of the 16th of May, 1842, it appears that at a meeting held on that day, Mr. Cooke inquired whether, after the advances about to be made by the Joint-stock Bank, they (Roe and Blachford) would have sufficient to meet their other liabilities, for if not, they would be placing the company in a very improper position. The answer to this was, that they (Roe and Blachford) had kept back sufficient to meet all their liabilities. There was no doubt that all this passed, and that it was a wilful perversion of the truth. And upon the same question being pressed, Mr. Roe, who had been a banker for thirty years, and who has not youth to plead in extenuation, answers, "We certainly have, and a great deal more—have we not, Mr. Blachford?" and to which Mr. Blachford replied, "Yes, and a great deal more." Now, can any one doubt but that a gross imposition has been practised upon Mr. Cooke? This first ground of complaint has been fully made out: they (the bankrupts) have concealed the truth, and thereby deceived those gentlemen; and in this, as in all other affairs commencing in falsehood, it has gone on from bad to worse. The next charge was, that of their obtaining securities from Messrs. Currie, without the knowledge or authority of the other directors, which were also appropriated to their own account, and thereby giving them a fictitious credit. What is the excuse for this conduct? Mr. Blachford says, that they were sent for because Christmas was coming on, and he thought, perhaps, that some of the customers might wish to take up their securities. Is this true or false? They are transferred to the account of Roe and Blachford, and who will believe that his motive was as stated, when we find them placed to his own credit? The next charge was, that although there was a letter-book open for the perusal of the directors, yet that the copy of the letter sent to Messrs. Currie's was suppressed. It has been urged by the counsel for Mr. Roe that he knew nothing of these transactions; but on the 27th of September we find a letter in Mr. Roe's handwriting, addressed to Messrs. Currie, and requesting the return of some of these securities, therefore I cannot exculpate Mr. Roe from the knowledge of that transaction. The next charge was that of endeavouring to throw the charges of the liabilities of the old bank upon the new; and upon this I must say that it was not the conduct of men of business or of common honesty. We next find that it was the custom of the Joint Stock Bank to have a balance-sheet prepared weekly, and in those balance-sheets we find alterations and erasures to have been made from time to time, i. e. from May 1842, to December, 1844, for the purpose of concealing the true state of their affairs from the directors of the Joint-Stock Bank Company. Mr. Roe, however, denied any knowledge of this matter, and upon which I can only say that he must have wilfully shut his eyes to it. Then, if so, can he acquit himself of the charge, or, at all events, from his share of it? No, he cannot, for they began with falsehood and untruth, for the purpose of misappropriation. The learned commissioner having gone through a luminous review of the facts, as detailed in the evidence, proceeded to say that there was a great difference in this case from that of persons who had got into difficulties from misfortune, or from circumstances over which they had no control; but here was conduct grossly fraudulent, and he should be giving way to a morbid sympathy if he were to decide this case upon the same footing as that of an honest trader. Under the whole of the circumstances, as evolved in this extraordinary case, he felt it to be his duty to refuse the certificates of both the bankrupts.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

BEDFORDSHIRE ASSIZES.

Bedford, Saturday, July 13.

(Before Mr. Justice Williams.)

Reg. v. John Williams and Ann Shippey, described as a married woman in the indictment.

The circumstance that a married woman at the time of the felonious reception of stolen goods charged against her, was living with her husband, travelling with him from place to place, raises no presumption of marital coercion, though it is not shewn that she received them out of his presence.

The indictment charged the male prisoner with the larceny of some silk pocket-handkerchiefs, and the female prisoner with the reception of the said silk pocket-handkerchiefs, she knowing them to have been stolen.

The evidence was, that Williams entered the prosecutor's shop at half past eight in the morning to buy handkerchiefs. The prosecutor went out of his shop into another room, but, nevertheless, had it still in his view, and was able to see Williams leave the shop. The prosecutor instantly went to the door, and Williams started off running. The prosecutor returned and found that the handkerchiefs which Williams had been looking at were gone.

Ann Shippey was the wife of one Shippey, a sort of pedlar, who attended fairs. Her husband and herself had come in their covered cart to a public-house in Bedford the night before, where Williams and another man also slept. Williams and his companion slept together. Shippey and her husband slept in their cart, which stood in the public-house yard. In the morning, Williams and his companion went away early; they did not pay for their bed, but said that the people in the cart would pay for it. Williams was dressed in a dark-coloured coat; at about half-past eight o'clock he and his companion returned. Shippey and her husband had not at this time got up. Soon afterwards Williams and his companion took their departure; Williams dressed in a pepper-and-salt coat, and his companion went away with Williams's dark coat on his arm. After this Shippey and her husband were applied to pay for Williams's bed; Ann Shippey refused, but paid on her husband saying "Pay, the young men have had the bed, the landlady shan't be the loser." The sum was only sixpence. On the same day the constable was sent in pursuit of Williams. He overtook a man: then the covered cart about fifty yards from the man; Shippey's husband was in the cart, and Williams about ten yards beyond it; Ann Shippey was behind them all, at about 100 yards from the first-mentioned man. The constable searched all these parties, and found in the cart a dark coat, afterwards identified to be that of Williams; this done, he let them go; but, re-pursuing them, he overtook them again and arrested Williams and Ann Shippey on the information of witnesses, who led him to a spot where he found the pocket-handkerchiefs that had been lost, and where his informants had seen Ann Shippey go and stoop down as if to deposit something at the very time when the constable first passed. Under these circumstances, the case for the prosecution, as to Williams, was, that Williams must be regarded as the thief, on the strength of the loss at the time when he left the shop—of his running when the prosecutor looked out at the shop door—of his changing his coat on his return to the public-house—and on the strength of the discovery of the property in a manner which traced it into the possession of Ann Shippey, with whose party he was associated.

As against Ann Shippey, the case was that possession of the stolen property was traced to her within a very few hours after the loss, and that her guilty knowledge was intimated by the act of concealment in which she had been detected at the very time of the constable passing.

The prisoner Williams was not defended by counsel.

Gunning, for Ann Shippey, addressed the jury, and submitted that the evidence intimated association, not between Williams and Ann Shippey, but between him and Shippey, the husband He argued that, as Shippey and her husband had not got up until after the final departure of Williams and his companion from the public-house, they were in their cart at the time of the second entrance of Williams and his companion to the inn yard. And the natural supposition was, that the stolen property had then been received from Williams or his companion, and that, under these circumstances, Ann Shippey was excused, for only two events were open for the passing of the stolen property from the thief to the receiver: one, that Shippey himself received the stolen goods, or that Ann Shippey received them in his presence; in either of which events she was excused.

Williams, J. summed up, and laid down the general law that felonies committed by a married women in the presence of her husband were excused.

The jury found both prisoners guilty.

Sentence, twelve months imprisonment, with hard labour for each.

Henry Mills, for prosecution.

Gunning, for Ann Shippey.

[Note.—The evidence for the prosecution did not shew what were the circumstances as to presence or coercion by Shippey's husband at the actual moment when the prisoner Ann Shippey received the stolen property. And it is conceived that the verdict was right, for it is not in all cases necessary to negative the question whether a married woman did the felony under the coercion of her husband, but only so in those cases when the circumstances existent at the time of the act appear in evidence, and are such as to raise that presumption; and here no such circumstances were shewn; for the circumstances, whatever they were, which existed at the time of the reception did not appear at all. Regarded as a decision, the case is corroborative of the doctrine which has just been laid down.]

SUFFOLK ASSIZES.

Ipswich, Wednesday, July 24.

(Before Mr. Baron Alderson.)

Reg. v. Davy and Feakes.

Arson—Setting fire to a single detached tree is not arson within 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 17.

The indictment charged that the prisoner had set fire to certain wood, to wit, to 20 yards square of wood, situate and growing, &c. and was intended to be framed in accordance with 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 17, the words of which are, "set fire to any part of a wood," &c.

Gurdon, for the prosecution, had opened the case, when

Alderson, B. suggested that the indictment did not charge any offence, and, after consulting with Williams, J. he returned, and said:—It was no offence to set fire to a single detached tree; that this indictment was so framed that proof of the prisoner's having set fire to a single detached tree would sustain it in point of fact, which, however, was not within the words of the statute; and as he should be obliged to arrest the judgment if the prisoner was convicted, it was no use to go on with the case. He therefore directed the counsel for the prosecution to adduce no evidence, and left it open to him to have another indictment framed.

The prisoners were accordingly acquitted.

Gurdon, for the prosecution.

The prisoners were undefended; they were boys, the one 11, the other 13 years of age.

[Note.—The prisoners were afterwards indicted and were tried the next day before Williams, J. for having set fire to part of a certain wood, called, &c. Davy was found guilty, but Feakes was acquitted. According to the general doctrine that a second indictment may be preferred if the first be so radically bad that the prisoner was never in jeopardy by it (always provided the prisoner has not taken advantage of the defect by demurrer—see Dickinson's Sessions Guide, 5th edit. p. 173 r, and the authorities there), the legality of the second indictment in the above case is clear.]

Gurdon conducted the second prosecution. The prisoners were undefended.

Reg. v. Hammond.

Arson.

Semble—A building built originally for a stable does not cease to be a stable, though horses have not been kept in it for three years, if nothing has been done in the mean time to shew an intention of never employing it for that purpose again.

An "out-house" means something annexed to an in-house.

The indictment was framed on 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 3.

The first count charged that the prisoner had set fire to a "stable."

The second, that he had set fire to an "outhouse."

The evidence was, that the "stable" was part of a detached building that stood in a field, and originally consisted of "a stable and cow-house." They were both under one roof, divided from one another by a partition that ran up to the slant of the roof. The "stable" had originally been provided with a rack and manger, but not with stalls. There still was a door to it. About three years ago the prosecutor used to keep young horses in the field, and drive them into the "stable" at night. Since that time the "stable" was used to put hay or straw in. Last spring, two calves had been kept there to fatten, and the rack had then been removed. Under these circumstances Rouse submitted to Alderson, B. that the so-called "stable" did not answer the description; and was about to address himself as to whether it was an outhouse within the meaning of the stat., but

Alderson, B. who had before stopped some questions as to the distance of the "stable" from the prosecutor's premises, saying, "It is not joined to the other buildings, so it is not an outhouse according to the last decision—it is of no use to inquire the distance"—said, "An outhouse means something annexed to an in-house; this is no outhouse;" and that as to whether it was a stable was for the jury.

As to this point the learned judge, in his summing up, said, it was built to put horses in. If it ever was a stable, it is a stable now (a). The rack was not taken away with the intention of never replacing it. The question is, if this is what the jury, as a matter of plain understanding and common sense, understand to be a stable. And one of the points left to the jury was, that unless they found the so-called "stable" to be a stable, they must acquit the prisoner.

The jury found a verdict of Guilty.

O'Malley, for the prosecution.

Rouse, for the prisoner.

REG. v. GRIMWADE.

Sending letter threatening to burn.

Under 4 Geo. 4, c. 54, s. 3, the person to whom threatening letter is sent must be the person whose property is threatened to be burnt.

Quære, if the landlord of premises has such a property as is intended by the Act; in other words, if a reversionary interest suffices?

There were three counts in this indictment.

1st count charged that the prisoner had sent a letter to Sir Joshua Rowley, threatening to burn the premises of Sir Joshua Rowley in the occupation of Brown.

2nd count charged that the prisoner had sent a letter to Brown, threatening to burn the premises of Brown.

3rd count charged that the prisoner had sent a letter to Sir Joshua Rowley, threatening to burn the premises of Brown.

Gurdon, for the defence, applied that the prosecution should elect on which count they would proceed. He said they expressed distinct offences; but

ALDERSON, B. said they were all intended to refer to the same transaction, and were merely different modes of description; that Gurdon's application was not one which he could persist to argue as of right, bus raised a question which was purely for the discretion of the judge. The reason why the judge will compel a prosecutor to elect on which of several charges which relate to distinct offences, he will proceed, is to prevent the prisoner from being distracted in his defence; but when the counts are all intended to refer to the same transaction, no such distraction can issue, and the existence of them enables substantial justice to be done.

The learned judge added that as soon as he saw evidence given of a second transaction he should restrain it.

The case proceeded. A witness came to swear to the identity of the letter produced; Gurdon would have cross-examined him as to his means of recognizing the letter without letting him see it, but ALDERSON, B. interposed. He had a right to look at it, and to point out the marks by which he knew it.

The facts of the case were as follows:—A letter corresponding in effect with the following was produced:—

"SIR,—If your tenant Mr. Brown does not increase his wages, he may depend on it he will have a 'blaze' Your timely interference may prevent so unhappy a calamity. Policemen at 30s. per week and labourers at 8s. won't do. Though 'tis true that with these wages the labourers require to be looked after."

This letter was sealed, and addressed to Sir Joshua Rowley. It was picked up near Brown's premises, and was taken to the steward's room at Sir Joshua Rowley's, and opened by the steward. Evidence was given that the letter was in the handwriting of the prisoner, and he was coupled with the spot where it was found by his saying to the constable it was dangerous for a man to be seen running in these days, for he had just stopped at (the whereabouts of the locus in quo), and had run on, and he supposed he should be accused of having written the letter. Though Brown had seen the letter and its contents, there was no evidence that Sir Joshua had shewn it to him. These were the facts.

Gurdon raised objections to the first and third counts of the indictment. The first count, he said, was bad on the face of it; for, whereas the stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 54, s. 3 (the words are, "If any person shall send or deliver any letter threatening to kill or murder any of his Majesty's subjects, or to burn or destroy his or their outhouses," &c.) required that the property threatened to be burnt should be the property of the person to whom the letter was sent, this count, alleging on the face of it that the property was in the occupation of Brown, shewed, on the authority of a case cited (2 Russell on Crimes, p. 718), that Sir Joshua Rowley was not the party in whom the property could be laid, but that Brown was; Brown, to whom it was not in that count charged that the letter was sent, and that, therefore, the count was bad. For the same reason, the third count, which laid the property in Brown, was bad; and he submitted that the evidence would not sustain the second count, for there was no evidence that the letter had been sent to Brown. It had been sent to Sir Joshua Rowley, to whom it was addressed, and to whom its import shewed it was intended. When it reached Sir Joshua it was functus officio.

ALDERSON, B. said, the third count was clearly bad. As to the second count (so far as regarded Gurdon's objection), he left it to the jury to find a verdict of guilty if they found that the letter had been sent to Sir Joshua Rowley with the intent that it should through him reach Brown, and had so reached him. So as to the first count, he left it to them to find a verdict of guilty, if they found that the letter had been sent to, and received by, Sir Joshua Rowley.

The jury found a verdict of guilty on the first and second counts, and not guilty on third.

ALDERSON, B. then said to Gurdon, that in order to give the prisoner the benefit of the objection as soon as possible, he would pass sentence upon him at this assizes, subject to the opinion of the judges, rather than reserve the points and defer the sentence.

The points being, whether the first count was good in law; secondly, whether direct evidence should not have been given that Sir Joshua Rowley had shewn the letter to Brown; and so, whether the learned judge was not wrong in leaving it to the jury to imply that Sir Joshua Rowley had shewn the letter to Brown. Be it observed, the submitting it to the jury to construe this letter was clearly within their province; but the point reserved intimates that it was for the learned judge to decide that, under the circumstances, there was no evidence of the letter having been legally sent to the party it was intended to reach.

Gurdon, for the prisoner.

[Note.—To support a charge on the above statute, the prisoner must knowingly and wilfully send or deliver a letter, threatening a subject to kill him, or to burn his house, &c. or procure, counsel, aid, or abet the commission of the said offence. It is a matter of common sense that the Act must mean that the sender or deliverer is one who himself threatens, or is himself party to the contents and intention expressed in the letter; or one who procures, counsels, aids, or abets the sending or delivering of a threatening letter by one who is party to the threat and intention therein expressed. There then are two branches of proof: First, there is an indispensable initiatory step to the commission of the crime,—the man must make himself party to the threat conveyed. Secondly, there are the steps by which the offence must be completed: There must be a sending or delivery. The sending or delivering must be "knowingly and wilfully." The meaning of knowingly and wilfully sending will be satisfied if the party intentionally set a letter in motion with the motive of its reaching, and which does reach, the party intended to be threatened. Alderson, B. in the above case said, that the judges, had ruled, the address on the letter does not signify if it actually reaches the party intended to be threatened. And he told the jury they must be satisfied that the letter was not accidentally dropped by the prisoner in the spot where it was found. The letter must be a threatening letter. It must be sent to a subject of the realm. It must threaten to kill him, or burn, &c. his houses, &c.

REG. v. JACKSON.

Arson.

Before the evidence of a dumb witness can be received the Court must be satisfied that he comprehends the obligation of an oath.

In this case a dumb person was offered in evidence. An interpreter was about to be sworn.

ALDERSON, B. interposed, and required him to be first sworn generally to answer the questions which the Court should put to him; and he was then asked by the Court as to his ability to understand the intended witness.

He was then sworn to interpret; but Alderson, B. required that he should put the usual preliminary question to the dumb man, as to his comprehension of the obligation of an oath. The interpreter was unable to do this, and the witness was not sworn.

Prendergast, for the prosecution.

Deseut, for the defendant.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

PARLIAMENT has been galloping through the business during the past week, working night and morning. The Commons will adjourn for a week, to give the Lords time to bring up arrears and pronounce judgment in O'Connell's case, and then the curtain will fall. The mangled Debtors and Creditors Bill has gone into the Commons. We direct attention to the debate upon it, and we take from The Times the following excellent article, which we commend to the perusal of our readers:—

Poor Lord Cottenham has certainly been very ill treated in the matter of his "Insolvent Debtors Act Amendment Bill." Ever since 1838 he has had that unfortunate class of mankind with their creditors under his protection. He has been all industry; all knowledge, all judgment, all perseverance. Everybody has given him all sorts of credit—has applauded his discretion—supported his second reading—promised to pass his Bill,—yet, somehow or other, he finds himself, at the end of the session, edged over board—his Bill mangled, perverted, abstracted, and the fragments, which are not appropriated by other hands, shelved.

Part of his projected reforms he was allowed to carry in 1838; another instalment was taken out of his hands by Lord Lyndhurst, and also became law in 1842. In 1843 he returned to the charge, but was told that he had better leave it in the hands of Government, who were taking the matter up. In 1844, not perceiving that Government were doing any thing of the kind, he renewed his efforts on his own account. After a couple of postponements, his Bill was read a second time on the 30th of April last. He was violently patted on the back by Lord Lyndhurst; but entreated both by him and Lord Brougham to postpone the third reading. Lord Brougham told him, that if he would but wait he would see something that would astonish him; something was coming in the shape of insolvent reform unlike any thing which the world had ever heard of—"a document, which indeed (he insinuated with his usual diffidence), he himself had to a certain extent revised, embracing a most extraordinary degree of information on the subject, and an infinity of the most valuable suggestions for the reform of the law of debtor and creditor that by any possibility could ever be brought together." Lord Cottenham grumbled, but submitted himself. The committee was deferred to May 14th, then postponed to the 23rd, then to the 1st of June, then to the 6th, then to the 13th.

Meanwhile, the phœnix paper (or, at least, part of it) had appeared.

"It was," says Lord Cottenham, "a very odd letter addressed to the Lord Chancellor, which had no beginning, and which was signed 'Manning,' meaning Mr. Serjeant Manning. It must have had a beginning at one time, but he had not seen it.' The letter stated that the writer had been induced for some reason or other to turn his attention to the subject."

This is scurvy treatment of Lord Brougham's revision. All that Lord Cottenham professes his ability to gather from the unparalleled paper is, that it probably once had a beginning, and that the writer had been induced to turn his attention to the subject of insolvent law. Such as it was, however, a rival Bill was in due time born from it—"superseding," as Lord Cottenham urges with a somewhat unusual tenderness for antiquity, "not only his Bill, but every other Bill since the time of Elizabeth." From this time the face of the Chancellor became blacker towards Lord Cottenham and his Bill.

"——— Hinc spargere voces
In vulgum ambiguas et quærere conscius arma.'

Unfeeling hints were thrown out that possibly the Bill might not pass after all; and three days afterwards it was, by the direction of the Lord Chancellor, plunged into a committee from which it never emerged alive.

We repeat, that this is scurvy treatment. It is bad to be plundered it is bad to be shelved; but to be both plundered and shelved passes all ordinary patience The House of Lords mutilates Lord Cottenham's first Bill. No sooner has he produced his second than Lord Lyndhurst lays violent hands on half of it; and no sooner has he embodied the remainder in a third, than Lord Brougham throws his arms about him and beseeches him to wait a fortnight, till Serjeant Manning has picked his pocket of all that is worth carrying off in that. What is taken away he is compelled to see mangled and metamorphosed by his ruthless enemies — what is left him he is compelled to drown in that Parliamentary slop-pail, a hostile committee. And then, when he makes his moan to the House of Lords and the public, his brother ex-Chancellor gets up like a monkey to jeer at him.

The insolent triumph with which Lord Brougham refreshes himself is certainly amusing enough. There is a daredevil merriment about it, which diverts if it does not edify. Lord Brougham, like Grimaldi, likes tumbling head over heels now and then to stretch his limbs, and astonish the public. A "wholly new character for this night only" is just what suits him. At present he is painfully anxious for the rights of Royalty. His whole energies are concentrated in defence of an imaginary Prince of Wales, who owes an imaginary 100,000*l*. and as an "adjudicated debtor," under Lord Cottenham's proposed Act, has had an imaginary cartload of furniture seized out of a less than imaginary Carlton-house.

"An adjudicated debtor?" says his Royal Highness; "what's that?" "Why, please your Royal Highness—or whether it please your Royal Highness or not—it means in plain words you are a bankrupt." "Impossible! I never was under the bankrupt laws." "No matter, your Royal Highness, Lord Cottenham has passed a retrospective act which makes you so." "I am sure," exclaims the Prince, "the Legislature never passes an ex post facto law." "Pardon me, your Royal Highness, they have done so. Lord Cottenham, whom you must know—he was Lord Chancellor for four years—has made them do it." "It is a very hard case," complains the Prince; "why did you not apprise me of this before? I should not have spent so much money in plate or in horses. . . . Why did you not give me notice of this before?" "I cannot answer that question, your Royal Highness; perhaps my Lord Cottenham may."

And so exit Lord Cottenham's Bill amidst peals of laughter. Lord Brougham's anxious loyalty to the Prince of Wales and Lord Lyndhurst's more consistent anxiety to save peers of the realm from bankruptcy—not to mention his difficulty (delicately touched on by Lord Cottenham) in finding himself at variance with his Sancho Panza in the House of Lords, and with the introducer of his colleague's County Courts Bill in the House of Commons, settled its fate. Lord Cottenham, however, professed his determination to stick to his Bill. And so we may count on the periodical re appearance of its remains in succeeding sessions; when it may be expected, if there is any truth in analogy, to undergo toties quoties, a similar process of mixed acceptance and rejection, till the residuum becomes too small to be worth even the opposition from Lord Brougham, and is suffered to pass in quiet—a happy conclusion, for the attainment of which Lord Cottenham has our best wishes.

PUBLIC BUSINESS TRANSACTED.

Monday, July 29.

ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. Speaker reported the royal assent to the following Bills:—Assessed Taxes Compositions; Copyholds Enfranchisement; Soap Allowances; District Courts and Prisons; Marriages; Sudbury Disfranchisement; Actions for Gaming Discontinuance, No. 2; Lecturers and Parish Clerks; Parish Constables; Butter and Cheese; Loan Societies; Western Australia; Colonial Postage; Linen, &c. INSOLVENT DEBTORS BILL.

Lord Brougham's Bill, entitled, "An Act to amend an Act passed in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of her present Majesty, entituled 'An Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors,' and to limit the the power of Arrest upon Final Process," has been brought down from the Lords, and was read a second time in the House of Commons on Tuesday evening. It contains forty-nine clauses, a brief abstract of which may be interesting, especially to those unfortunate persons who are either already incarcerated, or have the fear of a debtors' prison before their eyes. The notice to creditors in the Gazette, previous to presenting petitions for protection from process under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, is, by the first clause, entirely dispensed with, another form of petition to the Court of Bankruptcy for protection from process, to be verified by affidavit, being laid down in the schedule of the Bill. Forthwith, after the filing of the petition, notice thereof is to be given to the creditors, and advertised in the Gazette, and a public sitting of the Court appointed for the first examination of the petitioner, and for the choice of creditors' assignees. The property of the petitioner to vest in the assignees pro tem. by virtue of their appointment. Upon the petition being filed, the commissioner is to have the like power touching the seizure of the property of such petitioner (except in certain cases) and the examination of persons, as in cases of bankruptcy. All prisoners in execution at the time of passing this Act upon any judgment in any action for the recovery of a debt, may be petitioners for protection from process, and such petitioners shall be protected, by an interim order, from detention in prison, upon any judgment for the recovery of any debt mentioned in their schedules; and if so detained, the commissioner may order their discharge. Petitioners in custody, and not entitled to be discharged, may be brought up by warrant. Wearing apparel, working tools, &c. of the value of 20*l.* are exempted from the operation of this Act. Final orders under the Act to protect the person of the petitioner from process in respect of the sums or debts particularly mentioned in the clause, viz. from process in respect of the debts due to the creditors named in the schedule, or in respect of the claims of any other persons not known to such petitioner at the time of making the final order, who may be endorsees or holders of any negotiable securities set forth in such schedule. Prisoners in execution at the time of filing their petitions may be discharged by the commissioner, if detained for any debt in respect of which they are protected from process by the final order. A discretionary power is given to the commissioner to adjourn the consideration of the final order sine die. No debtor to be imprisoned for more than twelve calendar months for any debt contracted before filing his petition, in case the final order shall be refused, or shall not be made, or in case the protecting order shall not be renewed. Persons making out fraudulent schedules will be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour, and liable to three years' imprisonment and hard labour. The 36th clause distinctly abolishes arrest upon final process for all debts wherein the sum recovered shall not exceed 20*l.* exclusive of costs. Persons in execution at the time of passing this Act, in judgment in any court in any action for any debt, where the sum shall not exceed 20*l.* shall be discharged on application to a judge of one of the superior courts. Persons fraudulently obtaining their discharge may, however, be retaken in execution. The estate of the debtors discharged to continue liable as if they had not been taken in execution. By the 38th clause, the Lord Chancellor is empowered to issue a fiat in bankruptcy against a trader, having filed a declartion of insolvency, on the petition of the trader himself. Such are the chief enactments of the Bill, which, if passed, is to commence and take effect on the 1st day of November next—that is to say, on the eve of Michaelmas Term.

PRIVATE PARTNERSHIPS BILL.

A Bill to enable private partnersnips to sue and be sued in the name of the firm has been prepared and brought in by Mr. W. Gladstone and Sir George Clerk. It enacts, that where any person ca ying on any trade or business, or being engaged in any adventure or undertaking in partnership in England, either before the passing of this Act, or at any time after the passing thereof, and not being established for the purpose of carrying on the business of banking, and not being such partnerships as would come within the definition of a joint-stock company in the Act just passed for the registration of joint-stock companies, shall, at any time after the 1st day of January next, produce to the registrar of joint-stock companies, appointed under and by virtue of the said Act, a certificate setting forth the nature of the business, undertaking, or adventure, and the principal or only place of carrying on the same (if any), the names of the several partners, and their respective residences and occupations, and the name of the firm under which the same business, undertaking, or adventure is carried on, and the event or mode by which such partnership is to be determined, then and thereupon such registrar shall deliver to the said parties a certificate stating the name of the firm and the names of the partners, and certifying that such firm had been registered, and for such certificate a fee of 1*l.* shall be paid. The Bill then enables the firm so registered to sue and be sued, &c.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

THURSDAY, July 25.—Lord BROUGHAM moved that the report of the Insolvent Debtors Act Amendment Bill be considered. The discussion was to have been taken on the third reading; but, by some mistake, the report had been postponed until that night. —Lord COTTENHAM made a long statement, complaining of the way in which a measure of his own had been treated, and comparing it with other Bills of a similar kind. His Bill was founded on the report of the Commission appointed in 1839: it was introduced in 1841, and again in 1842. Its object was twofold,—first, to make alterations recommended in the improved bankrupt-law; and, secondly, to abolish imprisonment for debt, and substitute various provisions by which the creditor would obtain a better remedy against the debtor's property, also consolidating the bankrupt and insolvent laws and courts. The part for making the alterations in the bankrupt laws was incorporated in a separate Bill by Lord Lyndhurst, and passed into law. The remainder of his own Bill was reintroduced in 1843, but postponed because he heard that Government intended to deal with the subject. The session went on, and nothing was brought forward; so he reintroduced his Bill in 1844. After many delays, it was read a second time on the 30th April, and was then warmly applauded by Lord Lyndhurst. After many more delays, it was reported on the 13th June, and Lord Lyndhurst introduced several clauses; after which he no longer called it his own Bill. [Lord Brougham proposed to call it "the applauded Bill!"] On the 15th, he received an intimation that perhaps "the applauded Bill" might not pass at all; and, on the 21st, it was referred to a

Select Committee of twenty-one, seventeen of whom uniformly took their opinions from Lord Lyndhurst; and that Committee reported that it should not be proceeded with. On the 15th of April, Mr. Serjeant Manning had written to Lord Lyndhurst that he had been attending to the subject; a Bill by him, "for facilitating arrangements between debtor and creditor," was introduced on the 13th May: it would have repealed all the laws on the subject since the reign of Elizabeth; but it was ultimately abandoned, as well as a third Bill that had been introduced on the 6th May. On the 21st, a fourth was introduced by Lord Brougham; and that was referred to the same Committee with his own Bill. Lord Lyndhurst had got into a difficulty, for he was not only running counter to Lord Brougham, but to one of his own colleagues, who had introduced into the House of Commons the County Courts Bill, which authorized imprisonment of debtors at the rate of a day for each shilling, or 300 days for a debt of 15*l.* Lord Cottenham proceeded to compare the provisions of his own Bill with those of Lord Brougham's; having previously mentioned that, in 1842, a Bill was passed which obliged insolvent debtors to surrender their property to the Court, but did not provide for its distribution among the creditors. Lord Brougham's Bill applied only to traders whose debts and property should not exceed 300*l.* All those who owed more, or who possessed more, were not included in it; and they might, consequently, be taken upon execution and imprisoned. It assumed continuance of imprisonment for debt, and contained a clause by which the creditors were empowered to compel cession of the debtor's property for distribution. The Bill now before the House contained an important alteration in that respect: it struck out all the clauses giving compulsory cession. Under that Bill, therefore, as under the law as it had existed for a great length of time, a man getting into prison might indulge himself with luxuries and laugh at his creditors. By another alteration, debtors for sums under 20*l.* could not be taken in execution; which removed a very cruel class of imprisonment. A third alteration transferred several clauses from his own Bill; the remainder being thrown aside. His noble and learned friend's Bill, so far from abolishing imprisonment for debt, provided for the indefinite continuement of debtors. [Lord Brougham.—"In cases of fraud."] No; the case was left to the opinion of a judge. A man contracting debts without the means of paying them was liable to be imprisoned for life. That, surely, was too severe a punishment; particularly as it was inflicted not after a trial or conviction, but upon the impression of the individual judge before whom the case of the insolvent was brought. His noble and learned friend's Bill contained a clause giving to members of Parliament an immunity from arrest; but he hoped that Parliament would never approve of preserving imprisonment for debt simply for the purpose of covering that privilege. If such privileges were to exist, let them be provided for in a distinct and separate Act. But if they proceeded with this Bill, they would not only be perpetuating but aggravating the system which his noble and learned friend, in the speech he had already referred to, repudiated and condemned; for, instead of having but one system, they would have three. He was yet induced to hope that his Bill, abolishing imprisonment for debt except in certain cases of fraud, would become the law of the land; but the Bill he certainly would not abandon.—Lord Brougham bantered Lord Cottenham for reading the Lord Chancellor's speech of 1843 again and again, and for saying his own speech over so often that it could be followed from memory; and he proceeded to defend his measure in comparison with its rival. The two plans proceeded upon entirely different principles. He was for throwing it upon the debtor to prove himself entitled to freedom from arrest and imprisonment for debt: his right honourable friend was for liberating the debtor, and throwing it upon the unfortunate creditor to prove that the debtor should be incarcerated. The principle of the law was primâ facie that the man who could not pay his debts was in the wrong, though he might be an innocent debtor; but let him shew that he was so, and not a culpable debtor. His noble and learned friend said that his principle was an applauded principle: but the part of that plan which his noble and learned friend on the woolsack applauded was that which equalized and assimilated the processes of bankruptcy and insolvency. How his noble and learned friend could say that his Bill abolished imprisonment for debt any more than his (Lord Brougham's) was perfectly unintelligible. Did not his noble and learned friend allow a person to be arrested and imprisoned, ay, and indefinitely, if he did not disclose where his property was concealed, and give it up? "But oh!" said his noble and learned friend, "that is not imprisonment for debt, but for contumacy." Contumacy! was that a crime known to the law? How? in what respect? In not disclosing his property to his creditor. Therefore the contumacy was of the debtor towards the creditor; and that was exactly what he called imprisonment for debt. Did he complain of that? On the contrary, he thought it the just and true principle. He had always laid it down, there and elsewhere. His proposition had always been, that the fraudulent or extravagant debtor should be so dealt with. If a man with 100*l.* a year only ran in debt 20,000*l.* or if, having little or no property, he went to a tradesman and induced him to give up his property, a couple of thousand pounds worth of goods in which his capital was invested, by appearing to him as a person of wealth, he might as well rob the tradesman at once; and he ought to be sent to Botany Bay for it, not because he was a debtor, but because he was a fraudulent individual, or an individual quasi fraudulent. The Bill of his noble and learned friend did not work out the principle at all; his would. Talk of poor debtors! why there were poor creditors. Harsh creditors were spoken of: were there not cruel debtors? His noble and learned friend left the creditor to prosecute for fraud by indictment, subject to all flaws and failures, to bills of discovery and writs of error. The poor creditor, who had suffered the loss of 19s. 6d. in the pound, or the whole 20s. perhaps, was to be saddled with the further expense of prosecuting for a fraud, for the sake of public justice, and an example to the community. [Lord Cottenham—"At the expense of the estate."] Suppose the estate did not amount to 1s. in the pound? Why, in one of the very two cases of prosecution for fraud under the Act of 1842, how much did their lordships think it cost the creditor besides the loss of his debt? It cost 250*l.* See the consequence, then: nobody would prosecute, and the fraudulent debtor would go scot-free. But the fraud was not the only thing: the common case was not where there was any indictable fraud at all, but there was gross, culpable extravagance, a running up of scores without the ability to pay them. His noble and learned friend's Bill provided no remedy for that: his Bill did. The debtor must be called before the Commissioner, who would examine and sift into the whole case; and to him was given a discretionary power to imprison the debtor, and not to the creditor. His Bill said the creditor should not imprison a man, because he could go and get a protecting order if not arrested, or if arrested he might get his imprisonment abolished altogether. Such were the different principles of the two measures; and he left their lordships to judge whether his Bill did not effect the abolition of imprisonment for debt, leaving it only for crime, and not for misfortune. There were other objections to his noble and learned friend's Bill. It made traders of all kinds of persons—judges, physicians, princes, peers, lords, commoners, country gentlemen, country clergymen, and of all persons whatsoever, though they were not traders, and never had been—no one was exempt from it. There had been noble peers owing 200,000*l.* or 300,000*l.* and princes royal as much as 700,000*l.* or 800,000*l.* Well, suppose the prince got notice that he must pay within fifteen days, or he must be advertised in the London Gazette as an adjudicated debtor, which was the same as being a bankrupt: his whole property would be seized. That was the Bill of his noble and learned friend; which he verily believed its author himself never could have expected that any ten members in that House or in the other House, or any hundred out of Parliament, whose opinions were worth a straw, would approve. Well, now suppose the prince to make some inquiries into this unwelcome interference with his freedom. "What is the official assignee?" asks the Prince of Wales. "Oh, Sir, he is a very drastic person; he sifts people's affairs and property, and takes possession of what they have not got rid of." "Well, but cannot you let me keep my pictures at Carlton House?" "Oh dear, no! not one. Your Royal Highness is an adjudicated debtor." "An adjudicated debtor—what is that?" "Why, please your Royal Highness, or whether it pleases your Royal Highness or not, it means in plain words, you are a bankrupt." "Impossible! I never was under the bankrupt-laws." "No matter, your Royal Highness; Lord Cottenham has passed a retrospective law which makes you so." "I am sure," exclaims the Prince, "the Legislature never passes an ex post facto law." "Pardon me, your Royal Highness; they have done so. Lord Cottenham, whom you must know—he was Lord Chancellor four years—has made them do it." "It is a very hard case," complains the Prince: "why did you not apprize me of this before? I should not have spent so much money in plate, or in horses; I should not have bought so much mariscal powder; I should not have presented so many jewels to this person and to that. Why did you not give me notice of this before?" "I cannot answer that question, your Royal Highness; perhaps my Lord Cottenham may." (Frequent laughing during this dialogue.) That was the gross injustice—he would say, with all respect to his noble and learned friend, the scandalous and intolerable injustice—which this Act would do, that ex post facto it would make people liable for past debts to the bankrupt-laws. He (Lord Brougham) having seen the injustice of that principle, had abandoned it; and when he came to consider how repugnant it was to the public mind that all persons should be made traders whether they were so or not, he had adhered to the distinction which had been made in all bankruptcy laws from the time of Henry the Eighth downwards.—The Lord Chancellor put the question; but Lord Campbell rebuked him for his silence under Lord Cottenham's reproach of inconsistency. Whereupon, the Lord Chancellor defended his conduct, and the Bill before the House, at some length. Two Bills were submitted to the Committee, who adopted the principle of Lord Cottenham's Bill, and engrafted it upon another. He denied that they had departed from the principles of his noble and learned friend's Bill. A principle of that measure was to introduce from the law of Scotland the cessio bonorum, to that he had always adhered, and he had never departed from it. Another principle was, to abolish imprisonment for debt: to that he had always adhered, and from it he had never departed—he adhered to it so far as it was wise and prudent to act upon it. Another principle was, that they should adopt the administration of the bankrupt-laws as applicable to the laws of cessio bonorum: and to that principle he still adhered. He had not, therefore, departed in the slightest degree from the course which he had adopted on the second reading of the Bill, and which did not pledge him against desirable alterations. To the principle of making all people, even those of the Blood Royal and Peers, amenable to the bankrupt-law, he had always avowed his opposition. He proceeded in defence of the Bill before the House; especially of retaining a discretionary power of imprisonment as a check upon the debtor, and of the abolition of imprisonment for small debts; citing several instances of abuse in bad prisons for that class of debtors.—The report was received.

COURTS OF LAW PROCESS BILL.

Thursday, Aug. 1.—Lord Campbell wished to draw their lordships' attention to the amendments made by the Commons in two Bills respecting the right of suing parties residing abroad for debt, which had been sent down from their lordships' House and were now returned (the Courts of Common Law Process Bill, and the Courts of Common Law (Ireland) Process Bill). The first amendment, as it merely explained more fully what his intention was, namely, that the Act should apply only to parties who were actually domiciled abroad, he did not object to, and he would advise their lordships to agree to it. But the Commons had, as he conceived, without reason, excluded Scotland from the Bill, and in that amendment he could not concur.—The first amendment was, as we understood, agreed to, and a conference with the Commons to be requested as to the second.

DEBTOR AND CREDITORS BILL.

Lord Brougham presented petitions from certain confined debtors, praying for relief. Such unfortunate persons were generally ignorant of what steps, under what he hoped would soon be the law of the land, it would be necessary for them to take for the purpose of obtaining relief. There would be no expensive process requisite. It would be merely necessary to apply to the commissioner, in order that the proper steps for relief should be taken. This was not generally known, but when his Parliamentary duties left him time, he intended to draw up directions for making the application, and an account of the whole process requisite, and send copies to every debtors' gaol in the kingdom.

POOR LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

Lord Wharncliffe moved the second reading of the Poor Law Amendment Bill, observing that, owing to the unavoidable absence of several noble lords, it had been agreed that the debate should be taken upon the House going into committee on the Bill.—The Bill was then read a second time, and ordered to be committed on Monday.

LAW COURTS (IRELAND) BILL.

Lord Wharncliffe moved the third reading of this Bill.—The Lord Chancellor had still an objection to make to this Bill, which had just been proposed by his noble friend. By the common law of this country the appointments were in the judges of those courts, and he should now read a passage from Lord Coke, for the purpose of shewing that that was the law, and also giving reason for it. The passage was to be found in the Second Institutes, and had reference to the Statute of Westminster. There it was stated that by the common law the appointments were in the judges of the court; and the reason given for this was, that it was more their duty to select proper officers who would faithfully perform the duties imposed upon them—and if these officers did not do that it would be a reproach to the judges themselves, who were responsible for the proper keeping of the records of these courts. This was the course in England from the earliest periods, and within the last few years, when an Act was brought in similar to that which was then before their lordships, it was provided that the appointments should be in the chief justices and chief baron. That was the course in England. Why were they to deviate from that course in Ireland? The common law of England was the common law of Ireland, and until a very late period the practice in this respect was the same in both countries. By the 1st of Geo. 4, the appointments were taken from the judges and given to the lord lieutenant. No reason was stated for doing that; but for some particular purpose, which was not stated on the face of the Act, these appointments were taken from the chief justices and given to the lord lieutenant. An Act of Parliament for the purpose of remodelling the offices in these courts was proposed two years ago, and it was remarkable that in the same Act—not the same Act, not the same Bill, but having the very same object with this identical Bill,—and in that Bill there was a clause corresponding with the Bill in England, and by which the appointments were transferred back from the lord lieutenant to the judges of the courts in Ireland, from whom they ought never to have been taken. Now, however, they had the Bill of two years ago again before them, but by it the appointment of offices was continued to the lord lieutenant, and not restored, as they should be, to the judges. Under these circumstances, he trusted that their lordships would be of opinion that the clauses ought to be altered, and the Bill made to correspond with the English Act. Why, then, was Ireland to be put on a different footing? (Cheers from peers on the opposition benches.) Were they not continually saying that they would administer the same laws and the same justice to Ireland where they could be applied? (Cheers from peers on the opposition benches.) If then they laid that down as a principle of legislation, the moment they made an exception to it, they reflected upon the parties against whom the exception was made. (Hear, hear, hear.) If they did not give to the judges in Ireland that which the judges in England had, they said that the Irish judges were undeserving of exercising that authority—that they would be likely to abuse it—and they drew a distinction between the judges in England and the judges in Ireland, who so well performed their duties, and who were utterly undeserving of any reflection being cast upon them. (Hear, hear.) In his opinion nothing could be more unwise, nothing could be more impolitic in the present state of Ireland than this, and he might also add, nothing could be more prejudicial to the interests of the empire. (Cheers from peers on the opposition benches.) He proposed, then, that the clause be struck out. (Cheers from peers on the opposition benches.) But he forgot his noble and learned friend had a motion to that effect. If his noble and learned friend would have the kindness to propose it, he should have great pleasure in supporting it. (Hear.)—Lord Campbell said he had heard with most sincere pleasure the sentiments which had fallen from his noble and learned friend, and the irrefragable arguments by which he had supported the views he had expressed. He had likewise with much pleasure heard his noble friend (Lord Fortescue), who had been Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, cheer the sentiments of his noble and learned friend. He should move that for the words "Lord Lieutenant, or other chief governor of Ireland," in the 7th section, should be substituted the words "Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, as the same shall be in the Court of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer."—The Lord Chancellor begged to supply an omission of his, and to state that the Bill went so far as to take away the appointment of some minor offices which had been allowed to remain with the chief justices.—Lord Wharncliffe said he could not contend against the authorities cited, but he believed the facts were not exactly ascertained by either of the noble and learned lords. He believed the appointment to those offices had at no time been in the hands of the judges. He wished, however, to have time to consult with the law officers of the Crown before he decided upon the proposed amendment.—Lord Cottenham said it appeared to him immaterial whether the appointments had formerly been in the hands of the Crown or of the judges. If it was proper that a particular course should be adopted for the future, it was no argument against it to say that a different and an erroneous one had been pursued for a century or half a century.—The debate was then adjourned, in order to allow time for the consultation proposed by Lord Wharncliffe.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE, MIDDLESEX.

Friday, July 26.—On bringing up the report of the Criminal Justice, Middlesex, Bill, in answer to Mr. Hume, Sir J. Graham said, he had already entered into a full explanation on this subject last night, when the hon. member was absent. He had read last night the only matter of any importance in his correspondence with the Middlesex magistrates. He was bound by no promise as to the selection of chairman, but he certainly meant to take into consideration the labours of the gentleman who now presided over the magistrates. He (Sir J. Graham) had required, previous to the introduction of the Bill, that ample accommodation should be provided for prisoners. He was not pledged to any particular system of prison discipline, but he felt bound to take security that ample accommodation should be afforded for prisoners, particularly before trial. Mr. Williams asked, if there was any objection to introduce a clause to exclude this new judge from any interference with the management and expenditure of the rates? There was a strong feeling on the subject among a part of the Middlesex magistrates.—Sir J. Graham could not consent to any such regulation. It would be passing a Parliamentary stigma on an individual beforehand.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE (MIDDLESEX) BILL.

Monday, July 27.—Sir J. Graham moved the third reading of the Criminal Justice (Middlesex) Bill, which was read a third time and passed.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.

Mr. C. Berkeley asked, whether it was true that the Lord Chancellor had stated that it was not the intention of Government to proceed with the Charitable Trusts Bill? Such a course of proceeding was any thing but satisfactory.—Sir J. Graham said that he had not had an opportunity of seeing his noble and learned friend since the matter had been last discussed in the House of Lords, but he saw from the votes of the House that the Bill had been read a second time, and then postponed. He supposed his noble friend had yielded to the solicitations of those who had opposed the Bill.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS BILL.

Wednesday, July 31.—The Solicitor-General said, he was quite prepared, if the House should think it necessary, to enter into a statement with regard to this Bill; but as it had already been the subject of a good deal of discussion in the other house, and considering the present state of that house (the House of Commons), perhaps it would not be necessary for him to enter into any statement of the particulars embraced by the proposed measure. What he proposed to do, therefore, was, that they should take the second reading of the Bill then, and go into committee upon Friday next at 12 o'clock.—Mr. Hume had no objection to the adoption of the course proposed by the hon. and learned gentleman, but he thought it would be desirable previous to going into committee, that some statement should be made with reference to the Bill.—Mr. Wakley said, as he knew the Bill was much sought for out of doors, he wished to ask whether it was the intention of the Government to pass the Bill during the present session of Parliament?—The Solicitor-General.—Undoubtedly such is the intention of her Majesty's Government, if possible. The Bill was then read a second time.

THAMES EMBANKMENT.

On the motion of the Earl of Lincoln this Bill was read a first time, and ordered to be printed.

SCOTCH POOR LAW.

Mr. Bouverie begged to ask the right hon. baronet the Home Secretary, whether it was the intention of the Government to found any measure during the next session of Parliament on the report which had been made by the commissioners appointed to examine into the state of the Poor-laws in Scotland.—Sir J. Graham said that up to the hour at which he spoke he had not had time to read the report in question, which, together with the evidence, formed three large folio volumes; and it was his duty to examine the whole subject before he gave any opinion relative to the matter. He had seen the noble lord the member for Dorset in the house a short time since, and he would therefore take that opportunity of mentioning to him a fact relative to the administration of the Poor-law in Scotland. When the noble lord introduced the subject of the confinement of lunatics in poor-houses, during his able speech of last week, he had read a passage from some publication wherein a most touching picture was drawn of the wretched state of certain pauper lunatics who were confined in the island of Arran. He (Sir J. Graham) had the satisfaction to be able to state to the House, that nearly nine months ago measures had been taken to remedy the state of things described in the document referred to by the noble lord, and that all the pauper lunatics had then been removed from Arran and placed in the Glasgow asylum; and, moreover, criminal proceedings had been taken in order to visit punishment upon those who had been guilty of the gross abuses complained of, the Lord Advocate of Scotland and the Sheriff Depute having likewise taken steps to prevent their recurrence.

DEBTORS AND CREDITORS BILL.

Thursday, August 1.—The Solicitor-General moved the second reading of the Debtors and Creditors Bill, and very briefly explained its provisions, which have been fully reported already. Agreed to. The bill was ordered to be committed on Friday.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY BILL.

The Solicitor-General in moving the second reading of this Bill, said, it had come from the House of Lords, and was founded upon a recommendation of the Commissioners of Real Property. He should defer his explanation of its provisions until it was in committee, when he should be ready to answer any question upon it.—Mr. Brotherton approved of the Bill.—Mr. Duncan regretted that there were only three or four members present on his side of the House representing commercial interests. The Bill was then read a second time, and ordered to be committed on Friday at 12 o'clock.

PRISON REGULATIONS.

Mr. O'Ferrall said, that by a regulation recently adopted in this country, all persons under sentence of transportation in the metropolis were confined in one prison. He wished to know whether it was the intention of the Government to consider the propriety of introducing a similar system in Dublin?—Sir J. Graham was understood to say that an arrangement had been made in Ireland similar to that adopted in England, namely that all persons sentenced to transportation should, before the sentence was carried into execution, be brought to a central point, where opportunities might be given of forming some estimate of the precise destination to which they should be sent. This system had already been completed in Dublin; and it had been carried into execution herewith the approval of Parliament, the penitentiary character of the Milbank prison having been abolished, and it having been made a receptacle for persons under sentence of transportation. He might add that his confidence in the success of the new Pentonville Prison was so great, that he would gladly see a similar institution established in Ireland. It would be premature to pledge the Government to the adoption of such a measure; but it would be his province, and that of his colleagues, to watch the success of the experiment at Pentonville, and if it should be attended with the success he anticipated, he should be glad to see a similar system adopted in Ireland.

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

Metropolis Turnpike-Roads.—The eighteenth report of the Commissioners of the Metropolitan Turnpike-roads on the northern side of the river Thames has been presented, pursuant to the Act of Parliament 7 Geo. 4, c. 142, s. 138, and was ordered by the House of Commons to be printed a few days ago. The report is dated on Lady-day last, and is signed by the Earl of Lonsdale, chairman of the Board of Commissioners. It appears, that in consequence of the recent policy pursued by the board, advanced prices have been obtained for the tolls on all the districts, except those on the tenth, which comprise the City-road, which tolls having been sold at the auction of the following year for 150*l*. beyond the sum at which they were then put up, found no bidder at the last sale, and were put into collection. The board have likewise the satisfaction to report that, in consequence of certain reductions in the expenditure, they have been enabled, with the funds under their management, to maintain all the roads in their customary good condition, and by pursuing their usual system of economy have been also enabled to meet all their engagements, and to pay off, at the regular periods, the interest and the eleventh instalment on their mortgage debt, which is now reduced to 45,000*l*. The receipts from tolls during the past year have amounted to 66,310*l*. and the total receipts from all sources of income to 69,035*l*. The expenditure, during the same period, amounted to 64,555*l*. including the sum of 5,000*l*. paid in diminution of the debt. The balance in hand is consequently 5,164*l*. whereas in Lady-day 1843, the balance of available assets did not exceed 685*l*. The Surveyor-General, Mr. M'Adam, states in his report that the weather during the spring and summer of the past year was generally favourable for roads; but there having been much wet during the autumn, and frequent slight frosts, followed by speedy thaws, in the winter, a considerable expenditure of materials and expense in labour was necessary in order to maintain the roads in their usual good condition.

The Army and Ordnance Departments.—Mr. William Williams, M.P. for Coventry, has obtained certain statistical returns relative to the army and the ordnance, from which we make bold to extract the following particulars:—The number of officers and men voted for the Ordnance Military Corps in the year 1792, amounted to 4,846; in the year 1805, to 16,201; in the year 1810, to 20,080; and in 1815, to 28,404. This gradual increase is of course to be accounted for by the long continuance of the French revolutionary war. The average number of officers and men annually voted for the Ordnance Military Corps in the period which elapsed between the years 1822 and 1843-44 inclusive (for Great Britain, the colonies, and Ireland), appears to have been about 8,000, in round numbers. The number of officers and men in the said corps receiving half-pay and pensions was, in 1822, 11,563, and the amount of money voted 299,315*l*.; in 1833-34, the number was 10,817, and the amount voted 260,474*l*.; in 1834,35, the number was 609, and the amount voted 77,796*l*.; and in 1843-44, the number was 641, and the amount voted 91,082*l*. The number of military pensioners returned fit for local service (as far as the inspection has gone), under the Act 6 & 7 Vict. cap. 95, amounting to 17,368, who are not, however, fit for military service as soldiers. None of these have been yet called into active service, either on garrison duty or in aid of the civil power; but on the Queen's birthday 8,000 were mustered for inspection. The number of officers and men voted for the army, to serve in Great Britain, the Colonies, Ireland, and India, amounted in 1792, to 57,252; in 1805, to 332,191; in 1810, 371,382; and in 1815 (and at the close of the Continental War), to 276,221; in 1822, the number was reduced to 91,756, and it continued to be under 100,000 for four years. In 1826 the army was raised to the number of 115,693, since which period down to 1842-43, the annual average number of officers and men voted for the whole army has been between 111,000 and 112,000 in round numbers, including the supplementary estimates for 1842-3 and 1843-4. The number voted for the current year, 1844-45, amounted, we believe to about 100,000 (in round numbers), which may be considered as our standing army in time of peace. The French maintain one of about 300,000, or full thrice the number. The number of general officers on unattached pay was in 1843-4, 198, and the amount of their pay, 89,000l. The number enjoying retired full-pay was, at the same period 369, and the amount 64,000l.; the number on half-pay and military allowance, 4,140, amount, 457,000l.; the number on foreign half-pay, 482, amount, 40,000l.; the numbe. of officers enjoying pensions, 543, amount thereof, 73,162l.; and the number of men enjoying pensions, 73,101, amount thereof, 1,239,498l. Our army was distributed as follows, according to the last return of the number of officers and men voted for 1843-44; viz. Great Britain, 36,990; Colonies, 49,921; Ireland, 13,935; and India, 28,635; making a total of 129,481.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION.—The report of the Ecclesiastical Commission gives a statement of all churches and benefices augmented by the commissioners up to May 1844. Since the passing of the first Cathedral Act in 1840, it appears that 496 livings have been augmented, as follows:—With a population of 2,000 and upwards, the stipend of the minister has been raised to 150l. in 261 cases; population of 1,000 and upwards, to 120l. in 96 cases; population of 500 and upwards, to 100l. in 80 cases; population below 500, to 80l. in 59 cases. The annual augmentation of these livings amounts to 25,779l. which, with grants to meet benefactions when the income is below 200l. compensation to incumbents for loss of fees surrendered to new churches, &c. gives an annual augmentation of 29,809l. wholly exclusive of considerable gross sums of money expended and promised to meet benefactions for building and purchasing houses of residence for incumbents whose annual incomes are below 200l. This statement is also independent of all that is in progress under Sir R. Peel's Endowment Act.

STIPENDIARY JUSTICES (COLONIES).—From a return moved for by Mr. Hume, M.P. of the manner in which the sum of 52,850l. voted in the year 1842 for salaries and allowances of stipendiary justices in the colonies was expended, &c. it appears that the total amount expended out of the said sum of money was 48,430l. of which Jamaica received 13,104l.; Antigua, 908l.; Montserrat, 436l.; Tortola, 450l.; Barbadoes, 1,349l.; Berbice, 1,800l.; Demerara, 4,948l.; Dominica, 2,752l.; Grenada, 2,648l.; St. Christopher (vulgo St. Kitts) 1,659l.; Nevis, 441l.; Anguilla, 447l.; St. Vincent, 1,350l.; St. Lucia, 2,256l.; Tobago, 1,350l.; Trinidad, 2,700l.; Honduras, 597l.; the Bahamas, 2,801l.; the Cape of Good Hope, 1,800l.; and the Mauritius, 4,522l. The sum of 105l. was paid by the Paymaster of Civil Services for the passage of two stipendiary justices.

COFFEE.—An account of the quantities of coffee retained for home consumption in the United Kingdom in the years 1840, 1841, 1842, and 1843, &c. has been printed by order of the House of Commons, on the motion of Viscount Sandon, M.P. for Liverpool. It hence appears that the gross total quantity of this useful commodity retained for home consumption in this country amounted in 1840 to 28,664,341lb. of which 14,443,399lb. were the produce of British possessions; in 1841, to 28,370,857lb. of which 17,532,448lb. were the produce of British possessions; in 1842, in 28,519,646lb. of which 17,299,916lb. were the produce of British possessions; and in 1843, to 29,979,404lb. of which 20,130,630lb. were the produce of British possessions. Thus the average annual consumption of coffee in the United Kingdom would appear to amount to about 28,500,000lb. By far the greatest quantity of British colonial coffee is imported from the island of Ceylon, and the West Indies, whilst most of the foreign coffee is imported from the Cape of Good Hope, the East India Company's territories, and Colombia.

CLOSE OF THE SESSION.—It is expected that the regular business of Parliament will have been disposed of by the end of the first week in August. The Parliament will not, however, be then prorogued; but the session will be continued by adjournment to the 25th of August. The purpose of this arrangement is to afford time for receiving the reports of the judges, and making up the judgment of the House of Lords upon the writ of error brought by Mr. O'Connell and his fellow-prisoners. — Ministerial paper.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

No incident in the administration of the law during the past week calls for comment in this place. The absorbing topic of incendiarism, as developed by the trials at the assizes, is treated of in a leading article.

THE RECORDERSHIP OF SALISBURY.—There were several candidates for this office, among whom was Mr. Slade, the barrister, who has attended the Western circuit and Wilts sessions for fourteen years. He has attended strictly to his profession, and has now considerable business both on the circuit and at the session. He had also been connected by marriage with Mr. Wyndham, formerly member for Salisbury, and he had naturally looked forward to this recordership as a kind of result of his labours. He is also a stanch Conservative, and upon the late vacancy it was confidently anticipated that the Government would have conferred this office upon Mr. Slade. It turns out, however, that a Mr. Chambers has been chosen by Sir James Graham. Now, the first and natural question in every one's mouth was, Who is Mr. Chambers? It so happens that Mr. Chambers is the brother-in law of Lord Wodehouse, and during the time the selection for the recordership was pending, Lord Wodehouse stepped in to help Sir James Graham by abusing the Suffolk correspondent of The Times in no measured language, and contradicting his statements. A few hours passed over, and Mr. Chambers was appointed Recorder for Salisbury. A few days had only elapsed before Lord Wodehouse admitted the error of his statement as regarded the fires and working of the Poor Law in Suffolk and apologized to The Times correspondent for his contradiction. What morality is exhibited in this short paragraph!—Times.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE week has been barren of events interesting to the legal world. The following letter, on the delays in the Chancery Registrar's Office, has appeared in The Times:—

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

"Sir,—On the 26th of June last, an order was pronounced by Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, and the papers were afterwards left at the seat of the registrar of the day to draw up the minutes of the order; after four or five days the solicitors of the parties apply at that registrar's seat for the minutes, and are then informed that it is not that registrar's order, but belongs to another registrar; a further delay then takes place, in consequence of a disagreement between the two registrars as to which should shirk the drawing up of the order. It is then handed to the other registrar; the solicitor then applies to that registrar for the minutes, and is told that he cannot look at it for some days. Upon this the solicitor consents to draw up the minutes himself, which are approved of by the other solicitor in the cause, and handed to the registrar for settlement; that registrar again declines to draw up the order, and the papers are transferred back to the first-mentioned registrar. From that time to this the order remains unpassed.

"By the old practice of the Court the registrars received certain fees upon drawing up the orders; the contention would then have been who should have the drawing up of the order, instead of (as now) which should get rid of the trouble.

"The insertion of the above in your valuable journal will oblige, Sir, your obedient servant,

"July 29. "A SOLICITOR."

Memoranda for Lawyers.

Administrator.

The last issued part of Meeson and Welsby's Exchequer Reports contains an important case upon the title of an administrator to sue on a contract made before administration granted; the Court ruling that he might do so.

The facts were, that E. Pollard sent goods to Fernando Po, and then died intestate. The defendants bought the goods there after his death from his agent, who sold them for the benefit of the estate. After the sale, the plaintiff took out letters of administration to the intestate, and sued the defendants for the price of the goods. At Nisi Prius, the jury found for the plaintiff, with leave reserved to defendants to move for a nonsuit.

The question at issue was, whether the title of an administrator had relation back to the time of the death of the intestate, or dated from the grant of the letters of administration. The Court held that it related back to the death of the testator.

The point was ably argued, and, for an elaborate report of the arguments, the reader is referred to the report. In this place we can only occupy their attention with the results. The judgment of the Court was as follows:

"PARKE, B.—In this case, which was argued a day or two ago, we delayed giving our judgment, not on account of any doubt we entertained at the time, but in order that we might refer to the several authorities cited at the bar. We are of opinion that the rule to enter a nonsuit must be discharged. The only question is, whether the plaintiff could sue for goods sold and delivered by him as administrator of one Pollard, upon the facts which were in evidence on the trial. It appeared that the goods were sold after the death of the intestate, and before the grant of letters of administration, by one who had been the agent of the deceased on the coast of Africa; and that they were there sold avowedly on account of the estate of the intestate. It is clear that the title of an administrator, though it does not exist until the grant of administration, relates back to the time of the death of the intestate; and that he may recover against a wrong-doer who has seized or converted the goods of the intestate after his death, in an action of trespass or trover. All the authorities on this subject were considered by the Court of Common Pleas, in the case of Tharpe v. Stallwood (a), where an action of trespass was held to be maintainable. The reason for this relation given by Rolle, C.J. in Long v. Hebb (Styles, 341), is, that otherwise there would be no remedy for the wrong done. The relation being established for the benefit of the intestate's estate, against a wrong-doer, we do not see why it should not be equally available to enable the administrator to obtain the benefit of a contract intermediately made by suing the contracting party; and cases might be put in which the right to sue on the contract would be more beneficial to the estate than the right to recover the value of the goods themselves. In the present case, there is no occasion to have recourse to the doctrine, that one may waive a tort and recover on a contract; for here the sale was made by a person who intended to act as agent for the person, whoever he might happen to be, who legally represented the intestate's estate; and it was ratified by the plaintiff, after he became administrator: and, when one means to act as agent for another, a subsequent ratification by the other is always equivalent to a prior command; nor is it any objection that the intended principal was unknown, at the time, to the person who intended to be the agent, the case of Hull v. Pickersgill (1 Bro. & B. 282), cited by Mr. Greenwood, being an authority for that position. We are, therefore, of opinion, that the plaintiff is entitled to recover."

Practice—Interpleader.

The same report contains, also, a case that calls for notice. It is that of Patorni v. Campbell (12 Mee. & Wels. 277). The facts it is needless to repeat. The point settled was this, that a party cannot avail himself of the Interpleader Act (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 58, s. 1), if he has incurred a personal liability to either of the contending parties.

Practice—Sheriff's Court.

For our readers the following case will have an interest.

In Harrison v. Sutton (12 Mee. & Wels. 307), it was held, that where a cause is directed by a judge's order to be tried before the sheriff, and the plaintiff neglects to go to trial, the defendant may take down the cause by proviso, even although it has been once tried, the Court having granted a new trial. It was observed by "Lord ABINGER, C.B.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be discharged. The object of the stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 17, was to facilitate the trial of causes, where the amount in dispute is under 20*l.* by enabling the Court to direct a trial before the sheriff or other judge of an inferior tribunal: but such a trial is to be conducted in the same way as, and is liable to all the incidents of, any cause tried before a judge at Nisi Prius. And if so, why should the mode of proceeding to trial by proviso, which is one of the means which the law gives a defendant of proceeding to trial with a cause, and so putting an end to it when the plaintiff will not, be deemed inapplicable to cases of this description? There is nothing in the Act which says that a trial by proviso shall not apply to cases within the Act, and it is reasonable that it should. The defendant has a right to bring the cause to a termination.

THE PROPERTY LAWYER.

EXECUTION OF LEASING POWER.

MAULE, J.—My lords, I am of opinion that the lease was a valid execution of the power. The power requires that upon every such lease there should be reserved and made payable, during the continuance thereof, the best improved yearly rent that could be reasonably had for the same; it further requires, that there should be no fine, that there should be a clause of re-entry for non-payment of rent, and that the lessor should execute a counterpart. The lease in question is for twenty-one years from the 11th of October, 1833, and the rent of 903*l.* is payable on the 6th of April and the 11th of October in every year, except the last half-year's rent, which is made payable on the 1st of August next before the determination of the said term. It is agreed, that the power is well executed, if the last half-year's rent might be reserved payable on the 1st of August. It is to be observed, that this power, though it requires a yearly rent to be reserved and made payable during the term, does not point out any mode or term in which it is to be made payable; it has no such words as "by equal half-yearly payments," or "by yearly payments," and in the absence of such words, it is well settled that a rent may be a yearly rent though reserved payable half-yearly. It follows from this, that "yearly" means payable within each year, not payable at the end of a year; for if it had that meaning, a rent payable half-yearly would be only a part and not entirely a yearly rent, and, therefore, a bad execution of a power requiring a yearly rent. It has been contended, indeed, that, as the last rent payable under this lease is before the end of the term, the rent is not payable during the continuance of the term; but I think that is a forced and unnatural construction of the power, the proper meaning of which is, that the rent shall be payable in every year during the continuance of the term, the words "during the continuance of the term" being used to exclude payments after the term. If it had said it should be "reserved and made payable on every 1st of August in every year during the said term," there would have been no doubt that a rent payable on that day would have been sufficient, though the term continued after the last payment. The present power has, in effect, said that there shall be reserved and made payable, during the continuance of the said term, the best yearly rent on such days as the lessor and lessee may agree upon; for, as it does not in any way point out the days, it leaves it to the parties to suit themselves about it. It appears to me, therefore, that that power has been literally pursued, and when that is the case, the execution of it is good, though some other mode might be suggested which would be more beneficial to the remainderman, possibly with the exception of a case of fraud, which, however, it is not necessary to discuss, inasmuch as nothing of the kind can be here suggested. There are cases, indeed, in which the power has not been complied with according to its terms, but it has been insisted that it was sufficiently executed, because the actual execution could not put the remainderman in a worse situation than that in which he would have been, if the terms of the leasing power had been pursued, and leases have been sustained on this ground. Whether such a ground has been taken in support of an execution not according to the terms of the power is a legitimate argument in support of the objection to the lease, that, in some event, the remainderman would be worse off than if the power had been pursued; but it is a fallacy to apply this argument when the leasing power has been pursued, and to insist that a lease is bad though the power is pursued, because some other mode of execution, also within the power, would, in some event, have been more beneficial to the remainderman; indeed, if such an argument could be sustained, in many cases,—for instance, in this,—a valid execution of a power would be impossible. The Court of Exchequer Chamber seems to have lost sight of this distinction when it states the case of Doe dem. Harris v. Morse (2 C. & M. 247) to be directly in point, and the leasing power in that case to be substantially the same as in this. The leasing power in Doe dem. Harris v. Morse required that there should be reserved and continued payable during the continuance of the lease, by half yearly payments, the best and most improved yearly rent, whereas, in the present power, nothing is said about the period of payment; and the lease in Doe dem. Harris v. Morse reserved the rent payable the 1st of May and the 29th of September, i. e. at periods of five and seven months; that was held not to be rent payable by half-yearly payments; it was clear, therefore, that the power was not complied with in terms; and it being insisted, that the remainderman could not be prejudiced, and that, therefore, the case might be sustained as a sufficient though informal execution, Baron Bayley, in answer to this argument, made use of the dicta for which alone the case was cited by counsel in the Exchequer Chamber, and cited as a case in point, as the Court seem to have considered it. But though this case is not in point, that put by Justice Powell, in Reg. v. Weston, and agreed to by by Chief Justice Holt, is in point. In that case, the first of those learned judges, desiring to illustrate the case in hand by something clear and indisputable, said, that, if a man had power to make leases, reserving the ancient yearly rent annually, yet, if it was received on a day before the year was up, as if the year ended at Christmas, and was received at Michaelmas, it would be well, pursuant to the power, to which Chief Justice Holt agreed. As to the weight of such an argument, I refer your lordships to what Lord Abinger observed, when the case was cited in the Exchequer. On the whole, therefore, I am of opinion that the lease was a valid execution of the power.

COLTMAN, J.—My lords, in answer to the question proposed by your lordships, I humbly beg to state my opinion that the indenture of lease between Phillip Mallet Case and Margaret Rutland, dated the 14th of December, 1833, as stated in the special verdict, is not a valid execution of the power of leasing, also stated in the special verdict, given by the will of Benoni Mallet. It appears by the special verdict that the donees of the power are authorized by indenture under their hands and seals to demise for any term not exceeding twenty-one years in possession, so that upon every such lease there should be reserved and made payable during the continuance thereof the best improved yearly rent that could be reasonably had for the same, without taking any sum or sums of money by way of fine or income for or in respect of such lease, with other provisoes not material to be considered. The lease was made on the 14th of December, 1823, for twenty-one years from the 11th of October preceding, yielding and paying the yearly rent of 903*l.* by equal half-yearly payments, that is to say, on the 6th of April and the 11th of October in every year, in equal portions, except the last half-year's rent, which was thereby reserved and agreed to be paid on the 1st of August next before the determination of the said term. Now, what is it that the power requires? It requires that the best yearly rent shall be reserved, and that it shall be reserved and made payable during the continuance of the term; and, on the best consideration I can give the subject, it appears to me, that, in order to a compliance with the power, there ought to be, during the whole time that the term shall continue, rent growing due to the person who is entitled for the time being to the rents and profits of the land, so that no part of the time during which he is so entitled should be barren and unproductive to him. This view of the law is, I think, sanctioned by the opinion of Mr. Justice Bayley, as it is to be collected from his judgment in the case of Doe dem. Harris v. Morse (2 C. & M. 247), and such appears to me to be the view most conformable to the words of the power. The case of Isherwood v. Oldknow (3 M. & Selw. 382) may appear at first sight in some degree at variance with the opinion above expressed, but I think on examination it will not appear to be so. There the power to make leases was for two or three lives or for twenty-one years, so as there were reserved payable during the continuance thereof the best and most improved yearly rent which could be gotten for the same, without taking any sum of money for or in lieu of a fine or income for the same. A lease was made, under the power of the 15th of October, 1800 for fourteen years, to be computed, as to the meadow and plough lands, from the 13th of February then last, the pasture lands from the 25th of March then last, and as to the messuage, from the 12th of May then last past, under a yearly rent of 100*l.* payable by half-yearly payments on the 11th of November and the 25th of March; and this lease was held good, although it was open to the objection that the term, as far as the house was concerned, had a continuance for a period of six weeks after the last rent day. No objection was raised to the lease on this score, it being, I conceive, considered, that, as the whole of the land was to be given up on or before the 25th of March, the term was to be looked upon substantially as not extending beyond that period, so that the reservation of the rent might reasonably be considered as co-extensive with the continuance of the term. This mode of viewing the term as expiring on the 25th of March is analogous to what takes place with respect to the notice required to be given to a tenant from year to year who has entered on different parts of the demised premises at different times. The law requires, in order to determine his tenancy, that half a year's notice should be given him, ending at the expiration of some year of his term; but it is always held a sufficient compliance with the rule, if the six months' notice is given with reference to the time of entry on the substantial part of the demised premises, for his year is considered as ending when his interest in the substantial part of the demised premises expires. (Doe v. Snowdon, 2 Wm. Black. 1224; Doe v. Watkins, 7 East, 551.) It may be proper here to notice a passage to be found in the Queen v. Weston (2 Ld. Raym. 1198), where Mr. Justice Powell is reported to have said, that if a man had a power to make leases, reserving the ancient yearly rent annually, yet if it were reserved upon a day before the year was up, as if the year ended at Christmas and it was reserved at Michaelmas, it would be well, pursuant to the statute, to which Lord Holt agreed. The opinion thus expressed by Mr. Justice Powell having reference to a supposed case not very particularly stated, it is difficult to say how far it was intended to go. If he was contemplating a case in which an ancient rent was reserved upon the ancient and accustomed day of payment, it would be the same case with Doe v. Wilson (5 B. & Ald. 363). There the power was to lease for twenty-one years, or any term of years determinable upon three lives, so as upon every such lease there were reserved and made payable during the continuance thereof the usual and accustomed yearly rents, boons, and services for the same. The lease was made on the sixth of January, to hold from that day for ninety-nine years, if three persons, therein named, should so long live, at a rent payable at Lady-day and Michaelmas in every year. It was objected to the lease, that the first payment, being to be made on the 25th of March, in little more than two months after the demise, was rather in the nature of a fine than rent, and the last payment, if the lives should last till the end of the term, being to be made on the 29th of September, whereas the lease would not expire till the 6th of January following, the rent could not be considered as having been made payable during the continuance of the term. But as it appeared from former leases of the demised premises that the 25th of March and the 29th of September were the usual and accustomed rent-days, the Court were of opinion that the reservation of the rent was in conformity with the power. In that case, although by the terms of the power the rent was required to be reserved during the continuance of the term, yet it was the usual and accustomed yearly rent which was to be reserved, and the reference to the accustomed rent qualified the words of the power, which required a yearly rent to be reserved during the continuance of the term. This case, therefore, will not furnish a rule for construing the same words, where there is nothing in the context to indicate that they are used in any limited and restricted sense. On these grounds it seems to me that there has not been in this case a compliance with the requisites of the power; and although the deviation is not in a very important particular, great inconvenience would follow from introducing, without any necessity, laxity and uncertainty into a branch in which the provisions of the law may so easily be accurately complied with.

COLERIDGE, J.—My lords, it will be unnecessary for me to re-state the question upon which your lordships have called for my opinion, or to detail at any length the facts out of which it arises. The question turns upon the execution of a leasing power contained, in a will, which, among other things, required, that, in every lease made under it, there should be reserved and made payable during the continuance thereof respectively, the best improved yearly rent that could be reasonably had for the same, without taking any sum or sums of money by way of fine or income for or in respect of such lease or leases, and that there should be a clause of re-entry for non-payment of the rent. The lease in dispute was made on the 14th of December, to hold from the 11th of October preceding; the rent was reserved payable on the 6th of April and 11th of October, except the last half-year's rent, which was reserved and agreed to be paid on the 1st of August preceding the determination of the term; and it is upon this stipulation as to the last half-year's rent that the objection is founded. In order to a due construction of any leasing power, we are to be guided of course by the intention of him who created it. In this inquiry, it will almost universally happen that the intention is in part expressed, in part to be collected by implication. With regard to the former, I am not aware that any difference of opinion as to the rule to be observed prevails. However unreasonable or unnecessarily minute it may be, it is an express condition which binds the party who acts under the power; he can enter into no consideration of consequences; he must obey it strictly; and any substantial deviation, however desirable in itself, upon a just consideration of all the circumstances, will vitiate the instrument on which it appears: this, then, is the first inquiry. The power in terms requires, that "upon every such lease there should be reserved and made payable during the continuance thereof the best improved yearly rent that could be reasonably had for the same, without taking any sum or sums of money by way of fine or income for or in respect of such lease." The objection to the lease seems to raise only two questions upon this:—Has the rent been reserved and made payable during the continuance of the lease? Has any sum been taken by way of fine or income in respect of the lease? These questions will in fact resolve themselves into one, and they both involve an inquiry into the character which we are to ascribe to the payment which is to be made on the 1st of August in the last half-year of the term; for it has been doubted whether that payment can properly be considered rent at all, and is not rather in the nature of a fine or income, or, at all events, a money payment not issuing out of the land, nor paid in return for the occupation thereof. On the first view, an express prohibition in the power would be disregarded; in the last, the rent would not be reserved during the continuance of the term, but the occupation for a whole half-year would be rent-free. I cannot, however, acquiesce in either view; it does not seem to me that this partial anticipation of the payment of one small portion of the rent at the very close of the term bears any resemblance in character to a fine or income; it has no effect on the amount of rent annually reserved, nor can have been stipulated for with a view to the interest of the tenant for life, as opposed to that of the remainderman. If it be not a fine or income within the meaning of those terms as used in the power, it seems scarcely worth while to inquire whether it strictly fulfils the legal definition of the term "rent," because we must construe that term as used in the power popularly, according to the manifest intention of the devisor; and yet it may be observed, that it is clearly a return, annual in its nature, for the occupation of the lands, and that distress is incident to it. Certainly, we have no right to require a closer agreement to rent, in the strictest sense, in all its essential qualities. In 2 Rolle's Abridgement, 446, tit. "Reservations," B. pl. 1, it is said, "if a man grant a future interest in land, as for certain years, to commence ten years after, he may reserve a rent upon this, payable presently;" and Mr. Cruise gives the reason; "for it will be a good contract to oblige the lessee, and to ground an action of debt, and the lessor may have his remedy by distress for the arrears when the lessee comes into possession." I come then to the question,—Has it been reserved and made payable during the continuance of the lease? It is urged that, to satisfy these words, rent ought to be accruing and issuing out of the land from day to day for every day so long as the term endures, and up to the last moment; but that, from the 1st of August to the 11th of October in the last year, if the rent be paid according to the stipulation of the lease, the land will become rent-free; no rent will be issuing from it; that the rent, therefore, is not reserved during the continuance of the term. It seems to me, that the words "during the continuance of the lease" will more reasonably bear another meaning, and that the stipulation merely requires that the best improved yearly rent shall be reserved for every year of the term for the whole period of it, and that it should be made payable in every year during the continuance of the term; that is, neither before its commencement, which might make it a fine, nor after its termination, by which the security of distress for its payment at all might be lost. In this sense, the lease satisfies the stipulation of the power; and I conclude, therefore, that the lease is a valid execution of the power, so far as regards the expressed intentions of the devisor in the creation of it. But although there be no breach of any condition expressly imposed by the leasing power, I am still to inquire whether the case satisfies all those that are implied in it, for I cannot agree that a merely literal compliance with the written terms of the power will suffice; the terms of the lease must be such as to satisfy the intention of the devisor, as that may be collected from the language he has used. It has been said that, where there is a literal compliance with the power, the only proper inquiry remaining is, whether the lease is such as a prudent tenant in fee-simple would have made. Such an inquiry might in many instances lead to the same conclusion in fact as a more correct one; but, on the other hand, many circumstances might very reasonably induce a prudent owner of the fee to make such a lease as could contravene the intentions of the framer of such a power as that under consideration; it might be wise in him, for good consideration, to postpone or to anticipate the receipt of the profits; the tenant for life and the remainderman, though their estates make up the whole fee, do not, in respect of interest in the profits, make up exactly the tenant in fee, for they have several, and, in many respects, opposite interests. The true criterion is the intention of the devisor. Now, he intended that the tenant for life, in spite of the uncertainty of his interest in duration, should be able to grant a certain lease; that in this lease the rent should be so reserved as to make the tenant's occupation equally profitable in the way of render to the landlord for the time being throughout its whole duration; the rent, therefore, was not to be anticipated in the shape of fine or forêgift, but to be reserved and made payable yearly during the continuance of the term. Thus far his intention is clear; but the very terms in which he has disclosed this intention shew also that he was not anxious to provide for absolute certainty and unerring equality on the division of the profits between the tenant for life and the remainderman, in case the former should die during the continuance of the term: that could only be secured by directing a reservation of the rent daily, and he makes no such unreasonable stipulation; he does not even direct it to be reserved weekly, monthly, or quarterly; he uses the term yearly, and that permits a yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly reservation. Something, therefore, is necessarily left to what we call chance during the whole twenty-one years, for the tenant for life may die soon after the commencement, or towards the close of a half year, and his occupation for a short period may be profitable or not, accordingly. The devisor appears to have entered into no calculation on such minute points. It is said that his intention was, that in no event should the remainderman's occupation be for any period of time barren. That could only be effected, consistently with a yearly reservation, by making it possible in a certain event for the occupation of the tenant for life to be barren for a considerable period; in other words, he would give the remainderman a preference over the tenant for life. But what is the evidence of such intention? I cannot collect it from the words of the power or the circumstances it must have contemplated. It has been asked whether the whole last year's rent might have been reserved at the beginning of it. I am inclined to think that the spirit as well as the letter of the power would allow this; but I do not pronounce a decided opinion; it seems to me unnecessary to form one in order to answer your lordships' question, for in a matter of this sort much will depend on degree; extreme cases, therefore, will not, as sometimes they will, test the soundness of an opinion. In this view I observe upon the fact that it is not the first half-year's rent, nor every half-year's rent, but only the last, of which the payment is anticipated. Whoever is to receive that payment will be benefited by the stipulation, because he thereby gains the power of distress with the crops on the ground; and at the original granting of the lease it was more probable that the remainderman would be benefited than the tenant for life. Being, therefore, on the whole, of opinion that this lease has been framed in accordance with the intention of the devisor, expressed and implied, I am of opinion that it is a valid execution of the power.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE

The Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas has been pleased to appoint Mr. William Jones, of Newtown, Montgomeryshire, and Ayrton Gatliff, of Leeds, in the county of York, gent. perpetual Commissioners for taking the Acknowledgments of Deeds by Married Women.

Court of Bankruptcy.—In consequence of an awkward mistake on Tuesday, by which an insolvent escaped an opposition, Mr. Commissioner Goulburn has given an order for the cases of all insolvents to be called on by the usher, so that solicitors in attendance may not plead ignorance of which case is going on. The case in question was one of six, all appointed at the same hour, and in consequence of the business being conducted in a buzzing conversation between the parties and the different official assignees almost at the same moment, it was difficult to distinguish which was going on; the consequence was, that although the case stood five on the list, and half an hour only had elapsed, the final order was signed before the solicitor heard the name mentioned. He then claimed to have the order retracted. The commissioner said he regretted the mistake, but having signed the order, he could not interfere.

Robberies in Solicitors' Chambers.—During the last few days many attempts at robbery in the chambers of solicitors in Lincoln's-inn and Lincoln's-inn-fields have occurred, and some of them attended with success. This being the time when solicitors are leaving town, their chambers are left upon the lock, and a party of fellows are prowling about on the watch for such apartments, and having obtained entrance by means of false keys, plunder all they can lay their hands on. The chambers of Mr. Wrightson, in Lincoln's-inn-fields, have been entered by a picklock-key, and robbed of a quantity of jewellery, wearing apparel, &c. taken from the drawers; and yesterday the chambers of Mr. Urquhart, in Lincoln's-inn-fields, south side, were attempted as early as half-past four o'clock in the afternoon; but, owing to the lock being a Bramah, the wards of the key broke and defeated the attempt. Information was immediately conveyed to the inspector of police at the police-station, Bow-street, and an extra officer will, no doubt, be stationed in that neighbourhood. This should act as a caution, however, to solicitors leaving their chambers in an unguarded state, as the same system of robbery exactly took place last year, and with much greater success. When the parties are met on the stairs of the chambers they have some excuse as to having been up on business, so that detection cannot take place unless they are followed and seen in the act of picking the lock.—Evening paper.

The Irish State Trials.—The judges will not all be in town until Friday, the 23rd of August; their lordships shortly afterwards will have a meeting to consider the questions propounded to them by the House of Lords, and it is generally expected that judgment in the case of Mr. D. O'Connell, and the other traversers, will be given either on Thursday, the 29th, or Friday, the 30th of August. As before stated, when the public business of Parliament is brought to a close, both Houses will adjourn from time to time, until the judgment on the writ of error is pronounced. There will be no formal prorogation until then.—Standard.

Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt in Prussia.—The Gazette des Tribunaux states, on the authority of a letter from Berlin, that the Prussian Government has come to a resolution to abolish imprisonment for debt in all cases.

THE APPENDIX.—ORDERS OF SESSIONS.

Some of our readers having suggested that a collection of the Rules and Orders of Sessions in all the counties in England and Wales would be a valuable boon to the Profession, and should form a portion of the Appendix, we shall be much obliged to any Clerks of the Peace who may have printed copies of such rules and orders of their respective counties, to forward one of them by post, if within reasonable weight, that we may judge from inspection how far they are likely to be useful, and if their length suits our space.

Some correspondents have suggested the publication in the Appendix of such valuable Precedents as any of our readers may possess and be willing to publish for the advantage of the Profession. We need not say that such contributions would be very welcome, and that the pages of the Appendix could not be more usefully occupied.

NOTES UPON CIRCUIT.

ACQUITTED PRISONERS.

There is an evil that cries aloud for a remedy.

A prisoner is acquitted and discharged. If he have a home to return to, and friends to help him on the way, he suffers no other mischief than the anxiety of a trial, the imprisonment that precedes it, and the cost of his defence, and his family the loss of their little furniture, and their dinners for a few weeks.

But if the prisoner who has been prosecuted by the Crown and pronounced "Not guilty" of the crime with which he has been charged, be unfortunate enough to have no home, no friends, he is, by our beneficent law, turned loose upon the world without a penny in his pocket, and no means of earning one, to starve or to become in reality the criminal he was before only suspected to be.

A striking illustration of this defect in the administration of criminal law has just occurred, and which suggested this commentary.

A little boy, twelve years old, was tried at the Exeter Assizes on a charge of arson, and acquitted. The child was much agonized during the trial, and excited the interest of many of the spectators. Some of them addressed the gaoler, and hoped that the little fellow would be delivered to the care of his friends. It then appeared that he had no friends. He was an orphan, and had wandered from London in company with his fellow-prisoner, who had been convicted of the crime with which they were jointly charged. He was obviously too young to earn a livelihood. How then was he, turned out penniless into the streets of Exeter, to find food even for the day? Still it was nobody's duty to see to this, there was no fund wherewith to help poor prisoners to the procuring of an honest livelihood. Another case was called on, that of the child was forgotten.

Where he is now, God knows. The probability is, that to save himself from starving he has violated the law from whose grasp he has been so recently delivered. Who can wonder if the next assize sees him again at the bar—a criminal? The wonder will be, if he escape from his terrible temptation unstained and honest.

What is this but manufacturing criminals! How melancholy this process of first making thieves, and then punishing them. What a mockery to command people to be honest, and then to throw them into situations in which honesty is almost impossible.

Nor is the case we have narrated a singular one. At every assize it happens that prisoners are brought to the assize-town from distant parts of the county, acquitted, discharged, and left to find their way back again as best they may. The consequences of this may be anticipated.

Is it expedient that such a state of things should continue? But we go further, and ask, if it be just? Should a man who has been wrongly accused, and upon that charge dragged to a distant place to take his trial, be thus treated? Has he not a fair claim upon his accuser, the public, represented by the Crown, at least to return him to the place from whence it wrongly took him?

Among other improvements in our judicial system, the duty should be imposed upon some officer of seeing that prisoners discharged or acquitted are taken proper care of, and provided with the means of returning to their homes, or cared for until employment can be provided, if they have no homes. The cost would be trifling; but even if it were great, in a question of justice, humanity, and morality, cost should not enter into the calculation. If the present system make criminals, and undoubtedly it does, it would be a miserable economy that should expend in their punishment five-fold more than the expense of prevention. Let it then be done forthwith.

It is worthy of note, that there is a fund from which the convicted criminal receives relief on his quitting the gaol, after the expiration of his sentence. It is only the innocent, or the man pronounced innocent, to whom aid is refused.

In many counties, we believe, there are societies for the relief of discharged prisoners; they are useful, but the duty is a public one, and should be imposed upon the public; and we trust that the subject will attract the notice of some one of the readers of the LAW TIMES in the Legislature, who will make it his own, and submit a remedy for the wrong early in the next session of Parliament.

INCENDIARISM.

THE progress of incendiarism in the rural districts is a problem that perplexes the more, the more it is investigated. It was expected that the trials at the assizes now proceeding would have thrown light upon the causes of the crime; but they have entirely failed to do so. Each case seemed to rest upon its own circumstances, and the only fact positively ascertained, and it is an important one, is that there is no one prevailing cause, such as discontent, nor does it proceed from any agency of the nature of organized disaffection.

Thus, in Suffolk, the calendar is described by the correspondent of the Morning Chronicle as presenting the following results:—

"There are 55 prisoners for trial at the present Suffolk Assizes. There are 30 of these for incendiarism and for sending threatening letters; and 4 for sending threatening letters only, three of these being against property, and one against life; there are 15 for theft of various kinds; 1 for killing and slaying; 1 for murder of a bastard child; 1 for assault, with intent (a soldier); 1 for maiming a cow; 1 for stabbing; and 1 for concealment of pregnancy. Of the 55, there are six females, two of whom are for arson; namely, Ann Manning, a married woman, aged 32, convicted; and Eliza Sergeant, a married woman, aged 22, the bill ignored by the grand jury. A true bill is found against her husband and another man. Maria Barber, single, aged 25, for murder of infant; Ann Smith, married, aged 63, for theft of butter and basket; Ann Bauley, single, aged 20, for concealment; and Sarah Freestone, married, aged 53, for stealing 'half a peck of coal of the value of two-pence, the property of John Hall, of Haverhill.'

"Of the 30 prisoners for incendiarism, two, aged 22 and 35, can read and write well; eight, aged respectively 12, 1[illegible], 18, 21, 22, 29, 32, and 53, can read and write imperfectly; four, aged respectively 11, 12, 12, and 16, can read but not write; fifteen, the half of the whole, aged respectively 11, 11, 13, 15, 16, 16, 17, 17, 20, 21, 22, 28, 31, 33, and 40, can neither read nor write; and there is one whose age and education are not stated. Of the 29 whose ages are known, 15 are aged 18 and upwards, and 14 are under that age. Of the whole 30, 24 have been committed to prison by clergymen, who were either the only magistrates present at the examination, or who acted with other magistrates. Of the 15 who can neither read nor write, 12 were committed to prison by clergymen, the prisoners being principally from the respective parishes or near neighbourhood of these clergymen. Of the whole calendar of 55, there are 22 who can neither read nor write, and 18 of these have been committed to prison by clergymen. Of the whole calendar of 55, there are only 5 who can read and write well; one of them is the woman, Mrs. Sergeant, for arson, discharged by the grand jury; the second is Robert Grimwade, a linen-draper, for writing threatening letters; the third is John Scrutton, a sawyer, for theft; the fourth is Robert Hammond, a carpenter, for incendiarism, tried and found guilty; and the fifth is Charles Jas. Ford, a blacksmith, charged with stabbing. The occupations of those who can read and write well are worth notice; there is not a farm labourer among them."

In Devonshire, the calendar presented nine cases of arson; but in these the major part of the criminals were children, all of whom appeared to have been instigated by malice against the owners of the property destroyed. One of the persons convicted was evidently almost an idiot, and the act purely the mischievousness of imbecility. In all the acquittals, malice was the motive charged by the prosecution.

It is a singular fact that so large a proportion of the prevailing incendiarism is committed by children, nor is there the slightest reason to believe that they are instigated by older persons.

The absence of any thing like conspiracy or suspicion of general disaffection among the agricultural labourers, while it relieves alarm as to ultimate consequences, increases the difficulty of providing present remedies. We might have looked to legislation to remove any single cause that operated thus fearfully on so many minds; and the difficulty is not less in which the administrators of the law find themselves involved, in dealing with the cases brought before them for punishment. On the one hand, they fear to encourage the crime by lenient punishment, on the other, they feel the monstrous cruelty of transporting for life a child of twelve or fourteen years, for an offence which, however serious, not unfrequently proceeded rather from mischief than from immorality.

From a review of all that we have heard, and read, and seen, in relation to this strange social phenomenon, we are satisfied that it is not (as politicians on one side allege) the result of discontented poverty, nor (as it is asserted on the other side) the consequences of the preachings of agitators: it is, we firmly believe, nothing more nor less than one of those moral epidemics of which history records so many, in all ages and countries, accidental in their origin, and the rationale of which may be explained thus:—

Imitation is one of the most powerful of the mental faculties. There is a tendency in all persons to do as others do, and emotions and passions are readily roused by mere sympathy. The History of Fashion is but the history of the development of this faculty, and proves to what an extent of folly and even of vice its influence will carry persons who are rational and virtuous in every thing beyond its sphere. Among the most educated classes, there is almost at all times a prevailing mania upon some subject, during the prevalence of which the wonted reason and right feelings of individuals are actually so perverted as to laud that which at other seasons they would have condemned. Under such a delusion deformity becomes beauty, vice virtue, folly wisdom, and there is no limit to the extravagances into which even the sagest of the community will permit the most foolish to conduct them in the name of fashion.

And if the most sane are not exempt from the effects of an excitement of the imitative faculty, it may be readily imagined that minds having the slightest tendency to a morbid condition are peculiarly open to its influence; and so, in fact, we find it to be. Whatever strongly seizes the imagination, is brooded upon until an intense desire is felt to do the like, and to realize the idea, that has become actually painful for want of expression. This is the history of all great popular crimes—of those epidemic monomanias which have shewn themselves at various times and in various countries. And such we believe to be the history of the INCENDIARISM of our own day.

It prevails principally among the agricultural peasantry, because they are less educated and more solitary, and consequently have fewer thoughts to occupy their minds. The mind needs the stimulus of excitement; in some shape or other it is necessary to health, and so strong is the desire for it, that, wholesome or unwholesome, the mind will have it; and if the former be beyond its reach, it will fly to the latter. In towns there are many objects to attract and amuse, and to abstract the mind from its own thoughts, and, not the least, the constant society of fellow-beings. In the country, the mind, for want of these external stimuli, feeds upon itself—dwells upon its own ideas until they become morbid, and the result is not unfrequently monomania, or partial insanity. If accidentally the same idea be vividly impressed upon many of such minds, the monomania thereby produced becomes epidemic.

Applying these acknowledged laws of mental physiology to the fever for incendiarism now prevailing, it will not be difficult to trace its immediate causes.

Its remote origin cannot now be ascertained; but, whatever the accidental combination of circumstances from which it took rise, its subsequent progress cannot possibly be mistaken. Accident or design produces some two or three fires in some neighbourhood about the same time. They are talked about in the tap-room and the stable, in the church porch, at the market, and the fair; speculation is afloat as to the causes; lucifer-matches are denounced; conjecture is busy tracing the deed to the malice of this or that person, though the perpetrator escapes detection. In districts where events are few, such an occurrence fills all thoughts; the very spectacle of the fire, the splendour of the flame, the shouts, the alarm, are an excitement that yields actual pleasure to torpid minds. The shepherd-boy, as he tends his flock upon the solitude of the heath; the scullion-wench, as she plies her lonely task with no other society than her mistress, (who too often speaks to her but to scold); they, and such as they, amid the monotony of their daily duties, dwell upon the one absorbing event they had witnessed; it fills their imaginations; they reproduce the scene and recal the sayings that were abroad as to its origin, and busily try to picture to themselves the perpetrator, who he could be, and how he did it, and why; the creeping in the dark of night to the doomed rick; the handling of the fatal match; the absorbing interest of the moment when the flame was communicated; the retreat from the spot; the beholding from a safe distance the splendour of the flame; the greatness of the terror which a poor, weak, despised, trodden worm of a boy had been able to produce, and the sense of power which he possessed in his feeble arm: we say, that in the solitary labourer, man or boy, woman or servant-girl, these imaginings renewed day by day, will, ere long, become morbid; they will come though not called for, and there will be a strong desire to realize the scene the fancy had pictured. Then will every cause of offence from employer or neighbouring farmer, a trespass punished, relief refused at the parish board, any wrong, real or imaginary, great or slight, rise up and connect itself with the disordered fancy. He has an injury to avenge like the unknown incendiary, and the deed is done. Or, even if he have none, the child's propensity to imitate what it sees and hears will be sufficient to send it forth upon the destructive mission.

Thus a few fires tend to produce more; and the more that rage, the more the mania grows. The very efforts made to repress them,—the array of police, the meetings of magistrates, the comments in the papers, the discussions in Parliament, the trials at the assizes,—all tend to increase their number, by increasing the morbid excitement which is their cause.

Such, we are satisfied, is the theory of incendiarism that is frighting the isle from its propriety. If so it be, there are but two remedies: the one immediate, the other permanent. The immediate remedy is to cease to talk about them. If the newspapers would but refrain from recording them for three months, the fever would die for want of fuel.

The permanent remedy is rather for the prevention of such mischiefs for the future. Let there be a supply of wholesome excitement for the rural mind, by means of education partly, and partly by the encouragement of sports and pastimes. It should never be forgotten that excitement is essential to mental health, and so powerful is the demand for it, that if in wholesome shape it be not attainable, the mind will seek it in any unwholesome form that most vividly presents itself at the moment.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Mr. Commissioner Fane has forwarded to us the following outline of a plan for improving the Law of Debtor and Creditor without abolishing Imprisonment for Debt, which he has submitted to the Society for the Amendment of the Law. The writer's experience upon the subject of which he treats claims for his suggestions the respectful consideration of the Profession, and there is enough of novelty in his scheme to give it the interest of originality. The various propositions will demand more careful scrutiny than we can now give them. We will now only lay them before our readers with a commendation that they be read with the attention they deserve, and we shall take future opportunities of reviewing the propositions seriatim. The question is one of vast importance to the community, and it should receive the most ample discussion.

I. Retain imprisonment for debt, for two purposes:—

1. As giving to debtors a strong motive for declaring their own insolvency.

The motive which induces insolvent debtors to come forward and meet their creditors fairly is not love of justice, nor is it a feeling of honesty; it is dread of consequences; and the consequence which an insolvent debtor most dreads is the seizure of his person. Were it not hopeless, I should even propose to revive imprisonment on mesne process: for it is that sort of imprisonment which is the truly valuable one, and there could not be the smallest injustice in it, if it were qualified by these provisions:—1. That no debtor should be arrested who had declared himself insolvent; 2. That no debtor should be arrested except on the order of a Commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, made after careful investigation; 3. That no debtor should be arrested except in respect of a debt evidenced by the debtor's own handwriting; and, 4, that the commissioner should have power to release him, on his shewing that the creditor's demand was of a doubtful character. With these qualifications, whilst creditors had the use, debtors would be secure from the abuses of the old law.

2. As furnishing an easy means of inflicting punishment, where punishment is due.

If imprisonment for debt is abolished, no punishment will ever be inflicted on debtors. Lighter offences, of very common occurrence, such as gross extravagance, giving undue preference to creditors, buying goods for the very purpose of turning them into money and paying a relation or friend, harassing creditors by vexatious defences, giving insufficient explanations, &c. cannot be punished by indictment under the Criminal Law. Graver offences will not, because creditors will not undertake the trouble and expense of prosecution. At present, the burden of proof is on the debtor; he is either in prison or subject to imprisonment, and must shew his claim to relief, which he can always do, knowing all the facts. If imprisonment for debt is abolished, the burden will be shifted to the creditor, who must prove the debtor's guilt; and the debtor will of course insist on his privilege of not answering so as to criminate himself.

II. Suspend imprisonment pending inquiry.

No debtor who has declared his insolvency, and his willingness to submit to the law, ought to be either put in prison or kept there during the inquiry into his affairs and conduct: if out of prison, he should receive protection from arrest; if in prison, the Court should order his immediate release. His fate should depend upon the result of the inquiry.

III. Facilitate imprisonment after inquiry, if inquiry shews that the debtor does not deserve relief.

This should be effected by giving to every creditor, acknowledged as such in the debtor's accounts, all the rights of a judgment creditor; and thus enabling him, at very small expense, to seize the debtor's person as soon as the Court's protection was withdrawn. When the debtor was in prison, he would pray for relief, which might be granted after he had undergone sufficient imprisonment.

IV. Consolidate the laws of bankruptcy and insolvency, and make them into one code.

It is absurd to have one law for bankrupts and another for insolvents. There is no rational ground of distinction between traders and non-traders. In every case the property, if any, should be seized and distributed, and the person and future property (except perhaps such as comes by heirship or will) freed either at once or after proper punishment. It is as cruel to send the debtor back into the world of industry to encounter the difficulties of competition under the weight of old debts, as it is to throw an animal into the water with a stone round its neck. It is scarcely possible for either to escape sinking.

V. But, whilst consolidating the law, maintain two distinct Courts with distinct names, and, if possible, distinct places of business,—one for debtors with assets exceeding 100*l.* and one for debtors with less.

The reason for this proposal is, that, in practice, it is most inconvenient to mix up the affairs of merchants, bankers, and respectable tradesmen and their creditors, with the affairs of hack-cabmen, omnibus drivers, washerwomen, &c. and their creditors. The presence of the lowest classes in any Court has a tendency to drive out the more respectable, and it must be remembered that courts of bankruptcy and insolvency are necessarily attended by the suitors in person. The practical effect of having only one court will probably be, that the business of the Insolvent Debtors' Court will be transferred to the Court of Bankruptcy, and the business of the Court of Bankruptcy to the privacy of solicitors' offices, and thus the greater part of the benefit derived from the reforms in bankruptcy effected in the last fifteen years will be neutralized. The character of the cases which the Insolvent Law of 1842 has brought into the Court of Bankruptcy may be judged of from this fact,—that the number of cases is about 1,500, and the assets received about 5,000*l.* being an average of about 3*l.* 10*s.* in each case. Such cases are not fit for the Court of Bankruptcy, which Lord Eldon always declared was a court for the distribution of assets. In such cases official assignees are evidently useless. The true policy would be, if possible, to keep the cases as far apart as Portugal-street, Lincoln's-inn-Fields, is from Basinghall-street, in the centre of the City.

VI. Abolish execution against property at the suit of individual creditors, and substitute seizure, as in bankruptcy, and thus have only one seizure and one expense.

If a debtor adjudged to pay a debt does not pay it, the strong presumption is, that it is because he cannot. If so, he is an insolvent; for if he cannot pay one creditor, à fortiori he cannot pay all. If he is insolvent, there is no reason why his property should be seized by one, for his exclusive benefit, to the prejudice of the rest; that one being always either a fictitious creditor in league with the debtor, or, if a real creditor, either a favoured one, or the most harsh, exacting, and selfish. Execution against property, to an honest creditor, is generally not only useless, but ruinous; for after the creditor has seized, a claimant to the property starts up, and as it is impossible, in the nature of things, for the creditor to know whether the claim is good or not, he either withdraws after having incurred considerable expense, or enters into the contest and is defeated by a fraudulent bill of sale, which he has no possible means of proving to be fraudulent.

VII. Enable the debtor as well as the creditor to originate the proceedings in bankruptcy and insolvency; and, in order to facilitate proceedings by a creditor, make the non-payment of a debt within three weeks after judgment an act of bankruptcy.

No satisfactory reason has ever been given for not permitting a bankrupt to procure the adjudication of bankruptcy against himself. At present, the law allows him to gazette himself insolvent, but will not permit him to go further and obtain his protection from arrest. This is most unreasonable; and the more so, because, whilst the law embarrasses an honourable man, who objects to gain his object indirectly by persuading a friendly creditor to take out the fiat, it does not in the least impede the less scrupulous man, who always has a creditor ready to act. If the debtor could take out the fiat and procure a declaration of bankruptcy, on his own admission of the three requisites,—a sufficient debt, a trading, and insolvency,—the expense of the attendance of three persons, and much delay, would constantly be saved.

VIII. Distinguish cases in the Court of Bankruptcy into two classes: the first class to include cases where the insolvent originates the proceedings against himself, and is willing to swear to his belief, that his assets, if realized in the ordinary course of business, would suffice to pay 10*s.* in the pound on his debts: the second class to include all other cases.

In the first class let privacy be the pervading principle, unless the assignees should require publicity, or some ground should be shewn for suspecting fraud; and let the proceeding be called by some name other than bankruptcy,—cessio or composition perhaps might do. In such cases there would be no publication in the Gazette and no seizure by the messenger in the first instance; the notice to creditors would be by private circular.

In the second class publicity would be the prevailing principle.

The object of this would be to furnish insolvent traders with a strong motive for the early calling together of their creditors, by exempting them in such a case from harsh names and from unnecessary publicity; indeed, there are many cases where creditors, and those the most respectable, are as averse to publicity as the debtor himself.

IX. Afford no facilities for composition until after the insolvent has delivered in his accounts and sworn to their truth; after that, afford every facility.

X. Digest the existing law, dividing it into its two branches,—the law itself, and the code of procedure.

Court of Bankruptcy, May 1844.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The first part of the Criminal Cases will be ready by Saturday next.

The second part of the Cases on Real Property and Conveyancing is in a forward state.

An accident has delayed the publication of the Registration Appeal Cases.

It will be seen by the additions weekly made to the list that the Society is rapidly progressing in numbers.

The entrance-fee will remain, as now, at half-a-guinea, until the beginning of the new year.

It is hoped that after the Vacation the numbers will be sufficient to justify an immediate commencement of text-books.

The following are the members enrolled since last Saturday:—

Palmer Hanslip, Upwell, near Wisbeach
Gaskoin, —, 10, New Inn
Cooke, James, Over, near Winsford
Simpson, Thomas, Proctor, York
Fearon, Samuel, 7, Gray's-inn-square
Austin and Holcroft, Seven Oaks
Woodhouse, John, Bolton
Ansdell, J. T. 2, Bedford-terrace, Bootle, near Liverpool
Robinson, William, York
Edwards and Bryett, Totness
Houchen, John, jun. Thetford

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Wednesday, July 24.

Re ——, a Lunatic.

Practice—Striking out part of the prayer of a petition—Purchaser's costs.

J. Baily supported a petition by the committee of the lunatic's estate, which prayed that a sum of 200*l.* might be paid for past maintenance, and that the sum of 2,500*l.* in court, the produce of part of the real estates which had been sold, might be distributed amongst the lunatic's creditors, after payment of costs. The petition also prayed an inquiry into the validity of one of the lunatic's debts, alleged to be due to a Mr. Bevan.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Does any one oppose it?

Campbell, for Mr. Bevan, said he should oppose the prayer of the petition, if the reference as to Mr. Bevan's debt was pressed.

Baily having consented to waive that part of the prayer.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Then strike out that portion of the prayer. The small sums due may be paid to the solicitors, and by them distributed amongst those creditors. The costs of the purchasers must be paid out of the lunatic's estate.

Re YAW.

Lunatic protector of a settlement.

The heir-at-law of the lunatic petitioned that the Court would, as protector of the settlement under which the lunatic was tenant for life, consent to bar the entail, for the purpose of raising 1,500*l* by way of mortgage, to purchase a lieutenant-colonel's commission in the army for the petitioner. The same arrangement had been made on a previous occasion, when a major's commission had been bought for the petitioner. An allowance was made to the petitioner out of the lunatic's estate, and the petition proposed that the interest of the money now required to be raised should be deducted from that allowance.

Order made.

Re —— , a Lunatic.

Practice—Expense of maintenance beyond income—Reference.

K. Parker appeared in support of a petition by the committee, which asked that sums expended beyond the income of the lunatic might be repaid out of the capital of his estate, and also certain costs which had been incurred.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—You have expended more than the income. There must be a reference to the commissioner, to inquire under what circumstances such expenditure has taken place, and to state the facts as to the way in which those costs have been incurred.

Re TURNER, a Lunatic, ex parte HORTON.

Payment of lunatic's debts—Practice.

Lowndes appeared to support a petition which prayed that certain moneys due from a lunatic to a numerous partnership might be paid to the manager of the partnership. Ordered.

Re GREEN, a Lunatic.

Practice—Sale of lunatic's estate—Jurisdiction.

The committee of the estate petitioned that part of the lunatic's estate may be sold. The whole of the estate consisted of real property, producing only 34*l.* a year, and the portion now sought to be sold consisted of a piece of land set out under an inclosure Act, let at 8*l.* a year by the commissioners under the inclosure, for the purpose of defraying the lunatic's share of the costs. The debt due under the inclosure was 124*l.* and the commissioners had received the rent of the allotment for a great many years. The piece of land was expected to sell for about 300*l.*

Jenkins supported the petition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I have no power to direct the sale of a lunatic's real estate, except for the purpose of paying debts and costs. Take a reference to inquire what is due from the lunatic in respect of debts and costs.

Re DAVIS, a Lunatic.

Allowance to lunatic—Where committee not accountable.

The committee of the person prayed the confirmation of the commissioner's report, which approved of a plan proposed for raising a sum of money to pay certain debts and costs. The only property of the lunatic consisted of a real estate producing 420*l.*; and 6,000*l.* had been raised by a mortgage of that estate, for the purpose of discharging debts, in pursuance of an order in lunacy. That sum had been exhausted by debts and costs, and there still remained debts unpaid amounting to 500*l.* besides costs. It was now proposed that a further sum of 1,200*l.* should be raised, and that the whole of the income, thus reduced, should be paid to the committee, who was the husband of the lunatic's only child, he undertaking to maintain him with precisely the same comforts as previously to the reduction of the income. The lunatic resided in the same house with his daughter and her husband. The husband is a gentleman of great respectability.

Wray, in support of the petition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The objection to this arrangement is, that the committee will not be required to account. He enters into a special agreement, but he may neglect the lunatic; and if he gets the order, it may be abused. He must come before the Commissioner once in two years, and account for the income, upon the footing of the agreement into which he has now entered. Report confirmed.

Re GOULD, a Lunatic.

Compromise of suit—Payment of costs.

The lunatic was entitled to one-third of a manor in conjunction with two other persons, as lords farmers of the manor, which was held by a kind of copyhold tenure. A suit had been instituted against the lords farmers by a person asserting that the admission of a tenant of the manor had been obtained by fraud, and endeavouring to set it aside. The suit had been compromised by the principal parties, and it was now proposed to pay the lords farmers, who had no interest, 56*l.* in full for their costs. The party liable to the costs is a pauper, and nothing more was likely to be obtained by refusing to accept the sum offered.

Bacon, for the petition, prayed that such costs might be accepted. Ordered.

Re DODSON, a Lunatic.

Practice—Committee of estate—Security.

Lewin supported a petition by the father and committee of the lunatic, which prayed that security might be dispensed with. The only estate of the lunatic consisted of a sum of 5,000*l.* Consols in the hands of the Accountant General, and the income allowed to the lunatic was 120*l.* a year.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Security must be given for the due application of 120*l.* the yearly income.

Saturday, July 27.

Re DYCE SOMBRE, a Lunatic.

Allowance to lunatic.

Lloyd, for the committee of the estate of Mr. Sombre, stated that his client felt some difficulty as to supplying him with funds. Since Mr. Sombre's return to England, he had been paid 100*l.* a week, but he kept no establishment, or maintained any ostensible appearance which could justify such an expenditure. Under these circumstances, the committee asked for his lordship's directions upon the subject.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Let the same allowance be continued for another week.

Ecclesiastical Courts.

ARCHES COURT.

Office of the Judge promoted by TITCHMARSH v. CHAPMAN.

In a cause of office against a clergyman of the Church of England for refusing to bury the corpse of a child who had been brought, after due notice and at a convenient time, to the churchyard for interment—

Held, that a child, baptized with water and in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is not "unbaptized," according to the true meaning of that term as used in the Rubric prefixed to the Order for the Burial of the Dead in the Book of Common Prayer, even though the act of baptism be performed by a layman, who is alleged to be heretical and schismatic, and consequently, not being "unbaptized," is entitled to have the burial-service read over its body.

Both lay and heretical baptism are contrary to the orders of the church, but in both cases the child would seem to be "sufficiently" baptized.

The "excommunicatio ipso facto" must be preceded by a "sententia declaratoria."

On the 20th of May, 1843, a decree, founded upon letters of request from the Bishop of Ely, issued from this court, citing the Rev. Wm. Herbert Chapman, clerk in holy orders, rector of Basingbourne, in the county of Cambridge, to appear and answer to certain heads, positions, or interrogatories, and more especially for having within the said diocese of Ely offended against the laws ecclesiastical, by refusing, a second time, to wit, on the 26th of May, 1841, being within two years from the date of these presents, to bury the corpse or body of Jane Rumbold, spinster (an infant), a parishioner of the parish of Basingbourne aforesaid, when duly applied to on that behalf, after convenient notice or warning given on both occasions (the first whereof occurred on or about the 17th day of February, 1840), without any just or sufficient cause on either occasion.

The party cited appeared under protest, by reason that the 20th section of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, provided that every suit against a clerk in holy orders, for any offence against the laws ecclesiastical, should be commenced within two years after the commission of the offence and not afterwards; that by the first refusal the offence, if any, had been complete, and that the time limited by the Act had expired before the service of the said citation. The matter of the protest was argued, and after argument, the protest was overruled by the Court (3 Cur. 706), and the party assigned to appear absolutely.

A prohibition was subsequently applied for but refused; an absolute appearance was then given. A libel setting forth the charge was given in and admitted; a negative issue was given to the articles; witnesses were examined and publication prayed, and an allegation on behalf of the party cited was now brought in. This defensive allegation in substance pleaded that the child, whose corpse the rev. defendant had refused to bury according to the forms and ceremonies of the Church of England, was unbaptized, by reason that the person who administered the baptism was a heretic and schismatic, and, as such, a person ipso facto excommunicate; and, consequently, was not entitled to the privilege of burial in accordance with the service of the Church of England.

The admissibility of this defensive allegation was opposed by Sir J. Dodson, Q.A. and Addams.

Sir H. JENNER FUST delivered judgment as follows:—The question before the Court in the present case respects the admissibility of an allegation, which is offered on behalf of the Rev. W. H. Chapman, the party cited in this cause, which is a cause of office, for refusing to bury the corpse of a child brought to the churchyard of the parish of which he is the vicar, and of whose interment due notice is alleged to have been given. The question comes before this Court by virtue of letters of request from the bishop of the diocese of Ely, within whose diocese the party cited holds preferment. The citation in the cause was returned on the fourth session of Easter Term, in the last year, and an appearance was given to that citation, but under protest. That protest was extended in acts of Court, for the reasons therein set forth, and pressed in argument; the Court was of opinion that the protest could not be sustained, and, accordingly, overruled it. A prohibition was applied for and refused; an absolute appearance was then given for the party cited. A libel, setting forth the charge against the party cited, was brought in and admitted; a negative issue was given to the articles; witnesses were examined, and publication prayed; and this allegation is now offered by way of defence to the charge brought against this reverend gentleman. The substance of this defence is, that this child was unbaptized within the true meaning of that term, as used in the rubric, it being alleged in the articles, and not denied, that the child was baptized by a minister of that class of Protestant Dissenters termed Independents, according to the form used by them, that is, with water, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; and it is pleaded, on behalf of the Rev. Mr. Chapman, that such baptism is schismatical and heretical, and such as not to entitle the corpse of this child to have the burial-service read over it. I had hoped, that, after the late case of Mastin v. Escott, after the sentence in this court, and the affirmance of that sentence in the superior court, this question was set at rest, and that no further resistance would have been offered to what was declared, both by this Court and by the Court above, to be the law on this question. This Court is bound, upon proper application, to enforce the law; the Court has no discretion whether it will entertain a suit of this description, which is clearly within its jurisdiction, neither can it refuse to pronounce a decision when the suit is before it. It is now contended, that this question is not concluded by what took place in Mastin v. Escott, that there it was only decided, that an infant who had been baptized by a Wesleyan minister in the name of the Trinity was not unbaptized; and that the portion of the rubric which declares that the burial-service shall not be read over persons who die unbaptized did not apply to that baptism. Certainly, in Mastin v. Escott, nothing did turn on the suggestion of heresy or schism; the defect in the baptism, as they alleged, was the want of holy orders in the person who had performed that ceremony. In the present case this question has been directly raised; it is distinctly averred, that this baptism was and is heretical, performed by a person not qualified to administer the rite of baptism. The Court may here say, that, in Mastin v. Escott, both in this court and in the superior court, the question was stated to be confined to this; whether baptism could be duly administered by a Wesleyan minister: nothing turned on the question of heresy or schism. The case was so stated by the learned lord who delivered the judgment of the Court above. The distinction does arise in the present case, whether or no baptism of this description, pleaded to be heretical and schismatical, is invalid baptism, so as to take this case out of that decision. Now, although it is perfectly true that there was no absolute decision on the point, for it was not raised, and courts of law never determine more than the question raised before them; yet, undoubtedly, the greater part of the argument in this court turned on the question, whether schismatical or heretical baptism was or was not valid. It was part of the object of the party cited to shew that this was heretical and schismatical baptism, and not simply lay baptism; and the arguments were founded principally on its being heretical and schismatical; and, although in that case it was not necessary to decide whether schismatical and heretical baptism was valid or invalid, the arguments were principally directed to that point. It is not, however, necessary to enter into the arguments which were so elaborately urged on the Court in that case; I have stated that they principally turned on this point. Reference was made to the different opinions entertained in the primitive church as to the validity of such baptism; the authority of Tertullian was cited in support of that baptism, and of St. Cyprian, Firmilian, and writers in the second and third centuries in opposition to it. Again, reference was made to the council of Arles, to the opinion of St. Austin, and to the general opinion in favour of that proposition; also to the opinions of the eastern and western churches, and to the practice down to the time of the Reformation, and thence to the present time. The strength of the arguments certainly turned on that point—namely, whether schismatical or heretical baptism was or was not valid. It does appear to me, therefore, that this question is reduced to a narrow compass, and I say so at the present time, because I find in the seventh article of this allegation that the validity of lay baptism seems hardly to be brought in question. Now the seventh article is to this effect: "That by the practice and usages of the primitive church, and the laws, canons, and constitutions of the Church of England, any person, whether infants or adults, baptized in the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost by heretics, could not be admitted into the Church, or allowed to partake of her privileges, until they had by themselves or by their sponsors sought for such admission according to the form directed by the Church, although it might not be essential to reiterate the sacrament of baptism." This articles does appear to me to admit the whole question of the validity of lay baptism. All that it says is this: That by the canons and constitutions of the Church of England, persons so baptized could not be admitted into the Church until, by themselves or by their sponsors, they had sought for admission according to the form prescribed by the Church. It therefore seems to me that it would be utterly superfluous to enter into a discussion of the authorities cited on the one side or on the other, for the sole purpose of determining whether this baptism is valid or not. It is not contended that this baptism is invalid in itself; it is not said that it is null and void, but the question is, whether baptism so conferred entitles the party recipient to have the burial-service read over his corpse when duly brought to the churchyard for interment. The Court, therefore, is relieved from the necessity of entering into that discussion. Now although this case has remained long undetermined, that has arisen from other circumstances, and not from any doubt which the Court has entertained with respect to the law of this case; and it being not questioned that baptism by heretics or laymen is a valid baptism, and need not be reiterated (indeed one of the very authorities cited by the learned counsel who support this allegation went to shew that such baptism need not be repeated). This surely was acknowledging it to be valid in itself, and, if so, even although received at the hands of persons who disbelieve in the doctrine of the Trinity, the recipient cannot be said to die unbaptized. There cannot, then, be any doubt in the mind of the Court as to what must be the fate of this case, when, as I have shewn, the baptism itself is admitted to be valid, and the only doubt I feel is, whether this allegation ought not to be admitted for the purpose of allowing the question to go up to the Privy Council, in order to be discussed by the highest tribunal. This Court would be very much inclined to pursue the course it adopted in Mastin v. Escott, namely, to admit the allegation, for the purpose, if the parties are so disposed, of taking the opinion of the superior court. But if the parties wish to take a higher opinion upon the admissibility of this allegation, they can apply for leave to appeal from its rejection; for that it must be rejected is the opinion to which the Court has arrived. The Court would be unwilling to exercise the discretion reposed in it by the Act of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, s. 13, because if the Court were to reject this allegation, and refuse leave to appeal, the rejection would be final. In a case which is supposed to involve a most important question between Protestant Dissenters and members of the Established Church, the Court would be unwilling to exercise that discretion, and refuse leave to appeal. I will now state the grounds upon which I have come to the determination to reject this allegation. The whole question seems to me to have been determined in Mastin v. Escott, in favour of the validity of this baptism; because, if baptism conferred by a heretic is so far a valid baptism that it need not be repeated, then the whole case seems to come to this, that, being a valid baptism, the child cannot be said to have died unbaptized. It is clear, that a child baptized by a layman is not unbaptized within the meaning of the rubric; and, if so, I cannot understand what is the distinction between the two cases. If it be admitted that this baptism is so far valid that it need not be repeated, I confess I cannot see the reason why, in the one case, the child is to receive the offices of the church and to have the burial-service read over it, and, in the other, not so entitled. Neither child can be said to be unbaptized; and it is only where the person is unbaptized that the service for the dead is not to be read over the body. Both lay and heretical baptism are contrary to the orders of the church, but both are valid, and, if valid, entitle the recipients, in either case, to the privileges conferred by valid baptism, whatever those privileges may be. In both cases the child would seem to be, in the words of the rubric, sufficiently baptized; and I use the word sufficiently advisedly, and in the sense in which it is used in the rubric. It was not a word for the first time introduced in the former case by this Court; the word will be found in the first rubric (Edw. 6, A.D. 1549), and the word has been continued and used in the rubric for the present form of baptism. In both it is declared that a child so baptized (in the case of a layman it has been already decided, and, as I consider, by a heretic also) is sufficiently baptized, according to the use made of that word in the rubric, to which meaning the Court is confined in this case. To what extent such baptism goes is not for the Court to determine: whether it does or does not confer spiritual grace, the Court does not determine. All which the Court declares is, that the child was not unbaptized, need not be baptized again, and, if not unbaptized, that the minister was not justified in refusing to read the burial-service over it. It has been contended, that there are other means by which this child must be admitted into the body of the church—admitted to partake of the privileges of the church. What those other means are I have not yet heard; I suppose by imposition of hands by the bishop at confirmation. I inquired during the argument, and I could not find that there were any other means by which this child could be admitted into the Church of England, except by confirmation by the bishop, after it had arrived at years of discretion; and I now understand this is the ceremony which is requisite to entitle it to that right. How, then, does this baptism differ from the most solemn and formal mode of baptism? No child can be admitted to partake of the holy communion until it has been confirmed, or is desirous to be admitted to be confirmed—no child can be presented to the bishop to be confirmed until he or she has arrived at years of discretion, and is able to say the Creed, the Ten Commandments, and answer the questions of the Catechism of the church; the bishop is then to confirm that child. No recipient of the most regular baptism is admitted to partake of the holy communion until confirmed, or desirous of being confirmed. Then, this baptism being so far valid that it need not be repeated, this very child, if it had arrived at years of discretion, would have been entitled to claim to partake of that rite, qualified by conforming to the orders of the church. It is also quite clear that no person is entitled to have the order of confirmation administered, unless previously baptized: the mere imposition of hands will avail nothing without a previous baptism. There is nothing to be confirmed, unless there has been a valid preceding baptism. It seems to me that the case of this child is precisely the same, so far as the rites of the church are concerned, as in the instance of the most solemn form of baptism; because it is quite clear, that a party is admitted into the church by baptism, and not by imposition of hands. There may be deficiencies in that admission which may be afterwards supplied, but those deficiencies do not arise from the inward defect of that baptism, either in the case of the most regular or irregular baptism. Therefore, it appears to me, upon these grounds, unless there be something in the allegation which can be said to be a valid defence for refusing to bury the child,—I mean, refusing the offices of the church and the benefits conferred by the offices of the church, whatever those benefits be,—that this question has been determined by what took place in Mastin v. Escott, and by the admission of the principle, that this is a valid baptism, and not to be repeated. It is quite impossible that this child, by sins of commission or omission, can have forfeited the right of these offices, for the child died shortly after its birth; at least, so far as this child is concerned, it could not be by any fault of its own, that it did not obtain the ulterior rite of imposition of hands, for that can only be obtained by an adult, having knowledge of the Creed, the Ten Commandments, and the Church Catechism. The question, as it appears to me, is not whether this child was admitted into the Church of England, but whether it was admitted into the Church of Christ? "God forbid," said Dr. Phillimore, in arguing this case, "that I should say this child was not a Christian," having received the rite of baptism. Unless, therefore, there be something in the articles of this allegation which can in form or substance constitute a defence to this charge, or prevent the party being condemned in costs, the Court will reject the allegation. Now, the first article of this allegation recites the fourth article given in by the promoter of this suit, pleading the law with respect to the office of burial, and setting out the sixty-eighth canon, and then it alleges, "That all the rights and privileges conferred by this canon and constitution ecclesiastical, and of the other canons and constitutions promulgated in 1603, of which the sixty-eighth canon forms a component part, were limited, by letters patent of King James the First, to all persons being within this realm, as far as lawfully, being members of the Church, they might be concerned in them." Now, so far as I have gone, it is not material to the party cited, that this part of the allegation should be admitted, for this objection, which it sets up, was open to the party on the admissibility of the libel; then it goes on to plead, "That by the 110th of the canons and constitutions aforesaid, means were pointed out for bringing all schismatics, and hinderers of the word to be sincerely preached, to ecclesiastical censure and punishment." What are the means pointed out for bringing the parties to censure and punishment? "They shall be presented to the bishop, to be censured and punished according to such ecclesiastical laws as are prescribed in that behalf." If these are the means, let them be adopted in this case; but I confess I do not understand the meaning of this part of the article. It is said, it is offered by way of illustration or explanation. I confess I do not see how it illustrates or explains this case; and it appears to me to be of no importance whatever to the party cited, although the Court might have been inclined to have admitted it if the other parts had been admissible. The second article recites the fifth article of the libel, which pleads the refusal to bury the corpse of this child; and the object of this part of the allegation is to shew that the party did not refuse to bury the corpse, but to bury it according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England, which he is ordered to do by the canon law, and for which he is punishable for refusing to do, unless the corpse be that of a party excommunicate majori excommunicatione. This appears to me to be altogether immaterial—his duty is to be an active duty—he is not simply to allow the body to be buried, but he is to bury it according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England. Then it goes on to plead, "That, by such refusal, the party cited did not act in contempt of the laws, canons, and constitutions ecclesiastical, but, on the contrary, he acted in conformity therewith, as well as in obedience to, and in conformity with, the obligations by which he bound himself when he became an ordained minister of the Church of England. This is the whole question in the suit; was it or was it not his duty? surely it is not necessary to plead this. I remember it was so pleaded in Maslin v. Escott, and the Court then pronounced it to be unnecessary and inadmissible, and only allowed it to be retained, in order that the whole question might go up to the appeal court, as being a new question, notwithstanding the decision of Sir J. Nicholl in Kemp v. Wickes. I may here observe, what I intended to have before observed, that, in the first article of the allegation, it is pleaded, "that the rights and privileges conferred by the sixty-eighth canon were confined to members of the Church of England." I do not understand what are the rights and privileges which were conferred by this canon; the canon does not profess to confer any rights or privileges, it only declares, that if a minister refuse to inter a body, brought to him at a convenient time, according to the ceremony of the Church of England, he shall be liable to be punished. I do not understand that the right to the church burial-service is conferred by the canon; therefore I think this article ought to be rejected: it merely contains a verbal criticism on the fifth article of the libel, which contains the charge, and is quite unnecessary to the defence of the party cited. The third article recites the sixth article of the libel, "That the said infant died within the said parish of B; that such infant was the daughter of John Rumbold and Jane his wife, who are Protestant Dissenters, of the class known as Independents, and, during the first five months in the year 1841, and for some time previous thereto, had been in the habit of frequenting or resorting to a chapel or place of religious worship established by or for the use of a congregation of the said class of people, situate within the said parish; that the said infant had been, on the 8th February, 1840, baptized according to the rite or form of baptism generally received and observed among the said class of people, that is to say, with water, and in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, by the Rev. C. Moase, a minister, preacher, or teacher of the said class of people; that of the aforesaid fact of baptism the said W. H. Chapman was informed, on the 26th May, 1841, when [illegible] to bury the said infant, and by means of such information was, at the time of his refusal to bury the said corpse, well and sufficiently apprized and aware of the fact of such baptism, and he made or assigned the aforesaid fact of such baptism expressly as the pretext or ground for refusing to comply with such entreaties and application." This is the charge. What is the answer? "That the aforesaid baptism of the said infant, as set forth in the said sixth article, by the said C. Moase, was heretical." There the article stops. The Court must look to the other articles, to see whether this baptism was a valid baptism, or whether the party was excluded from the rites of the Church of England. The fourth article pleads, "That, by the ecclesiastical laws of the whole Catholic church, more especially as they are expounded and laid down in the canons and decrees of the first four general councils, which canons and decrees have been adopted by the Church of England, and on divers occasions recognized to be of binding authority by the statutes of the realm, applicable to questions of heresy and schism, more especially by stats. 1 Eliz. c. 1, s. 36, and 29 Car. 2, c. 9, s. 2, the said C. Moase, having collected a congregation in opposition to the canonical bishop, is guilty of heresy, and any baptism performed by him is heretical." A former article had pleaded, that the baptism pleaded in the sixth of the promoter's articles was heretical. Here it is pleaded, that the person who performed the service of baptism had collected a congregation in opposition to the bishop, and was, therefore, at the time a heretic; and I am to infer accordingly, as I suppose, that any baptism performed by him was heretical. The fifth article pleads —"That, by the first canon, made and agreed upon at the second general council, holden at Constantinople, in the year of our Lord 381 (being the first of the general councils holden in that metropolis), it was ordained and decreed as follows. [This canon was set forth, as was also the sixth.] The purport of this, I presume, is to shew that persons accused of heresy are not to be permitted to accuse the clergy, unless they first shew themselves to be innocent, and the object of the article is to shew, that the party promoting the office of the judge is not a party who can be permitted to accuse the party cited. The sixth article pleads—"That, by the twenty-first canon of the fourth General Council, holden at Chalcedon, A.D. 451, it was decreed—" [This canon was set forth.] This merely goes to the same point, that the party who is promoting the office is not legally competent to do so as against a clergyman. The seventh article contains the sum and substance of the charge of this being an heretical baptism. [See this article in the former part of the judgment.] This, as I have already stated, is the whole question before the Court—Is this a valid or an invalid baptism? It is not averred, nor is it attempted to be said that it is averred, that this is an invalid baptism, null, void, and of no effect whatever. All that is pleaded is, that the recipient thereof is not entitled to partake of the privileges of the church until he or she has complied with certain forms. What is the particular form, as I before observed, is not stated. I collected, during the argument, that it is to be by the bishop, by the imposition of hands; and that the form which is to entitle the recipients of this heretical baptism, is precisely the same as is requisite to entitle the recipients of the most regular baptism to be admitted into the church. Now, I think in rejecting this article I am injuring the cause of the promoter rather than that of the party cited. What is the eighth article? "That, long previous to and on the 17th day of February, 1840, there had been, and was, and still is, within the said parish, a burying-ground or chapel-yard attached or annexed to the Independent Chapel, which was and is commonly used and resorted to for the interment of corpses of all persons calling themselves Independents, dying in the said parish." What is the use of this article? What is it if there be a burial-ground annexed to a chapel used by the parents of this child? If the parents have a right to require that their child be buried in the churchyard of the parish church, they may insist on that right. It may be, as said in argument, a vexatious proceeding, but if the right exists, how can the Court say it is not to be enforced? I cannot really see what is the use of admitting an article of this description; it cannot have any effect on the costs of the suit. The ninth pleads—"That, by a stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 92, courts of justice are enabled to admit non-parochial registers as evidence of deaths." How can this article be material? The tenth article is the next. [This set forth the thirty-third of the thirty-nine articles of the Church of England.] This is rather the introductory part to that which, as I have before said, is the whole substance of the allegation, namely, that this was the corpse of an heretic or person excommunicate ipso facto. I may be mistaken, but, as I understand it, the effect of this article is to shew that this was a person who, by open denunciation of the church, was cut off from the unity of the church, and to be considered as a publican or an heathen. Primâ facie, this can hardly be said to apply to this child, dying in its infancy, before it could have committed any heresy. The next, the eleventh article, is one of a most extraordinary description. It sets forth the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, ninth, and twelfth canons of 1603. These canons are pleaded to shew, that persons guilty of the offences there mentioned are excommunicate ipso facto. The substance of these canons is pleaded in the twelfth article: "That the said J. Rumbold, C. Moase, and T. Titchmarsh, the promoter of this suit, are persons who have severally affirmed, and do severally affirm," &c. Then it ascribes to each of these persons offences against the seven canons pleaded in the eleventh article, and concludes by pleading, "That they were, and are, severally persons rightly cut off from the unity of the church, and excommunicated according to the true intent and meaning of the thirty-third of the thirty-nine articles pleaded and referred to in the eighteenth article of the allegation." I confess that when I read these two articles the question did occur to me how, by what means, and in what manner, are all these things to be proved? Here are three persons alleged to have offended against no less than seven distinct canons, "or some or one of them, or some parts or part thereof," upon which witnesses are to be examined to prove such and such things there stated, by which it is to be shewn that these parties have incurred the penalty of excommunication. Who are to be the witnesses? what number of witnesses are to be examined on such a charge? The parties themselves cannot be compelled to answer to such charges, because, if the charge be valid, any answer to such charge might be made use of against them as a confession in a cause of heresy. No person is bound to answer criminatory charges; no witness is bound to answer questions which may criminate or tend to criminate himself. So Mr. Chapman must bring satisfactory legal proof of these charges, not mere confession, but legal proof by witnesses. The great question argued is that which was thrown out in the superior court, namely, whether "excommunication ipso facto" is or is not incurred without a declaratory sentence. Upon that point the learned lord who delivered the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Mastin v. Escott expressed himself in these words:—"An objection was, in opening this case, taken, and for the first time taken, to three of the witnesses, who, it was contended, were rendered incompetent by the twelfth canon, which ordains, that 'whosoever shall hereafter affirm, that it is lawful for any sort of ministers and lay persons, or of either of them, to join together and make rules, orders, or constitutions, in causes ecclesiastical, without the king's authority, and shall submit themselves to be ruled and governed by them, let them be excommunicated ipso facto.' This objection ought clearly to have been made in the court below: however, it is unavailing whensoever made. First, it would not dispose of the cause if it were allowed; and next, it is unfounded, and cannot be allowed. That it would leave the cause unaffected, if allowed, is plain both from the pleadings and the evidence; from the pleadings, because the first article of the responsive allegation admits the appellant's refusal to read the burial-service." This led me, in a former part of my judgment, to observe, that, by rejecting the whole of this allegation, I should be injuring the cause of the promoter, because this responsive allegation contains an admission of a similar refusal. "So that, the refusal to read the service being admitted, the ground of that refusal is pleaded; namely, that, if the child had been baptized at all, it was by a person unauthorized, and that, therefore, there was no valid baptism; and thus the only material facts of the case are admitted by the pleadings, and the whole question is raised on the pleadings without any evidence being required. But, suppose the objection to prevail, it has no application to two of the witnesses, who prove the whole of the case." Then Lord Brougham goes on to shew, that the objection has no foundation. He says, "Suppose (which is not, however, admitted) that the so affirming and so submitting would operate as excommunication without sentence such effect would only follow from the individuals, as individuals, doing that which has incurred this penalty. It becomes, from these considerations, unnecessary to inquire how far the dictum of the learned judge in Grant v. Grant (1 Rep. Temp. Lee, 593) bears out the decision contended for; but it is fit that we add our opinion that the words in Lyndwood (p. 276), 'Incurrit sententiam excommunicationis ipso facto,' compared with those of the canon and the stat. 5 & 6 Edw. 6, would make it very difficult to maintain this position; whilst the Toleration Act (1 W. & M. 18), and still more the 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, passed long after the date of Grant v. Grant, appear to leave no doubt that the incapacity, if it ever existed, is now removed." That was the judgment given in accordance with the unanimous opinion of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. It is impossible to read the Act 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, and not perceive that all incapacity arising from excommunication is removed. The second section does indeed provide, "That nothing in this Act shall prevent any ecclesiastical court from pronouncing or declaring persons to be excommunicate in definitive sentences, or in interlocutory decrees having the force and effect of definitive sentences." It has been said, that this reserves to the Ecclesiastical Court the power of pronouncing a definitive sentence of excommunication, as before the passing of the Act; but what are the consequences of a sentence of excommunication? Sec. 3.—"Be it enacted, that no person who shall be so pronounced or declared excommunicate shall incur any civil penalty or incapacity whatever, in consequence of such excommunication, save imprisonment, not exceeding six months." This is, then, the substance of this part of the allegation. If these persons are excommunicate, they are liable to imprisonment for six months; but no civil penalty attaches on them; there is no incapacity whatever arising in consequence of such excommunication. Then, could it be contended, at least with any chance of assent in a court of law, that a party is disqualified from promoting the office of judge, or from being a witness, on the ground that he has been declared excommunicate, when it has been enacted that no civil incapacity whatever shall flow from excommunication? I am of opinion, upon the Act of Parliament, that a party is not prevented either from promoting the office of judge, or being a witness in a cause of office, even supposing such party to be excommunicate: he may be imprisoned for six months, and that is all. I am further of opinion, that, if any such incapacity formerly existed as would have prevented these parties either promoting the office or being witnesses, it has been removed by the Act of Parliament. What is the meaning of excommunicatio ipso facto? In the case of a person declared to be excommunicate ipso facto, for having been present at a clandestine marriage, it has been held in Scrimshire v. Scrimshire (2 Cons. Rep. 399), that, if produced as a witness in a suit, he must be first absolved, not generally absolved, but merely for the purpose of giving evidence; and that, after giving evidence, he falls back to his status before absolution; and that the effect of such ipso facto excommunication must be taken notice of in an ecclesiastical court:—indeed, it was taken notice of in that very case. I asked counsel whether there was any instance of a party, merely accused, being excommunicate ipso facto, except in the case of being present at a clandestine marriage—no other case has been pointed out. It is impossible to consult the authorities, and not see that sententia declaratoria is requisite; that there is no case in which excommunication can be incurred without a declaratory sentence. To turn to Lyndwood, in every passage in which excommunicatio ipso facto is said to be incurred, the expression used is "sententia declaratoria." (Lib. 1, tit. 2, pp. 11-15.) At p. 13 (B), "Et sic hæc est pœna sententiæ latæ, quam incurrit inobediens ipso jure. Executio tamen hujus pœnæ fieri non debet, nisi prius per ipsum, ad quem pertinet sententia declaratoria, super hoc fuerit promulgata." P. 15 (P), the gloss on the words "excommunicatio ipso facto," "Et sic est constitutio latæ sententiæ. Requiritur tamen sententia declaratoria." It is useless to quote passages in which it is laid down that a declaratory sentence is necessary before a party can be visited with the consequences of excommunication —he must be pronounced guilty of the offence by which he incurs this penalty; and when the declaratory sentence has been pronounced, the law has already defined the particular penalty, namely, excommunication; but the consequences of this penalty never can attach on any person who has had no opportunity of defending himself. What is the fact here? Three persons are included in this article; not one of them could be proceeded against in this matter. Again, what is the evidence to be produced against them? Are all these three persons to be declared heretics, and incompetent witnesses, without any charge brought against them personally, and without having any opportunity of defending themselves? I am of opinion the law is not so. Cases of this description are, fortunately, not very frequent; there is, however, one case to which the Court has had an opportunity of looking—Arthur v. Arthur (coram Delegates, 1717), before the case of Colt v. Colt, mentioned in Grant v. Grant. There the question was raised, whether a declaratory sentence was necessary. The passages from Lyndwood were cited, and, among other authorities, Farinacius (De Testibus, Quæst. 56, p. 264). Under these circumstances, can it be contended, that this article of the allegation, which pleads that these parties are ipso facto excommunicate, there being no declaratory sentence, is admissible? I am of opinion it cannot; and I am further of opinion, that the Act of Parliament to which I have referred has removed the incapacity, if ever it existed; and I am bound to take judicial notice of this Act of Parliament. This brings me to the consideration of the other parts of this allegation. The thirteenth article pleads—"That, by the rubric of the Book of Common Prayer prefixed to the order for the burial of the dead, and in and by the statute 14 Car. 2, c. 4, it is declared, 'That the office ensuing is not to be used for any that die unbaptized or excommunicate, or have laid violent hands on themselves.' And the party propounded doth allege that the said infant died unbaptized and excommunicate, according to the true intent and meaning of the rubric and statute, and of the articles, canons, and constitutions of the Church of England." I am of opinion, both on the argument in this case, and on principle, that this child was not unbaptized: indeed, this was the whole case of Mastin v. Escott. There is, consequently, no use in admitting this article, and I reject it. The fourteenth article pleads the 20th section of the Church Discipline Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, limiting the time of proceeding in this court to two years from the time of committing the offence. This question was before the Court on protest; and the Court then decided the point, holding that the offence was a continuing offence, and that, the second application and refusal to bury being within the two years, the case came within the statute. The fifteenth article pleads the third section of the same Act, which empowers the bishop of the diocese, if he shall think fit, to issue a commission, directed to certain persons, to inquire into the grounds of any charge or complaint against any clerk in holy orders charged with any offence against the laws ecclesiastical. I really am at a loss to conceive what is the meaning of this article. Grant that the bishop has the power of issuing such a commission; he may also (sec. 13) send letters of request instead thereof. I confess I do not understand the reason why this article was introduced. The sixteenth article pleads—[This article, in substance, pleaded, that, on Mr. Chapman informing the father of the infant that he could not conscientiously read the burial-service over the corpse, and inquiring of him why he did not have the child interred in the burial-ground of the chapel, the father replied, that it was on account of the very high fees demanded for a burial in the chapel-yard; upon which Mr. Chapman offered to pay the fees for him.] The seventeenth article pleads, that, on the 17th day of February, 1840, the said C. Moase complained to the Bishop of Ely of the refusal to bury the child. The eighteenth article, that, on the 26th March, 1840, Mr. Chapman received a notice in writing, signed by the secretary of the Committee for the Protection of the Rights of Dissenters, informing him that these proceedings would be taken against him. The nineteenth article exhibits this letter. How is this letter to be made evidence against the party promoting the office in this case? The writer of this letter is not the promoter of this suit; how, then, by possibility, can this letter affect the case of Mr. Titchmarsh? The twentieth article pleads, that, from and after the 17th February, 1840, until the 26th May, 1841, the said corpse was never on any occasion brought to the churchyard of the parish, nor was, during such period, any warning given to Mr. Chapman, according to the sixty-eighth canon. Now, in the citation, and in the articles of the libel, two distinct applications are stated to have been made, the one in the year 1840, the other in 1841: if these are not proved, the party cited will have all the benefit he can possibly have by admitting this article. These are all the articles given in in the first instance; certain additional articles have since been brought in, in supply of proof of the matters contained in the twelfth former article, pleading a certain document purporting to be written by Mr. Moase, the minister of the dissenting chapel in this parish. No doubt this document is most intemperate and improper, shewing a most indecent and intolerant spirit against the Established Church; but the fact of Mr. Moase having written this letter cannot have the effect of preventing another person, an infant of a few days old, from having the benefit of the offices of the Established Church. No doubt the most bitter spirit of intolerance against the Established Church is evinced in this letter, which is a printed letter, probably meant for circulation, but still this cannot be permitted to have any effect on this cause. The Court has now gone through the different articles of this allegation, and is of opinion, that no advantage could accrue to the party cited by admitting them, or any part of them. They do not appear to the Court to constitute any defence to, or any extenuation of, the offence charged to have been committed by this gentleman against the law, which makes it imperative on him to perform the burial-service over a parishioner who dies not unbaptized. It has been held, that a person not a member of the church may administer valid baptism, and if the baptism be valid, this child was not unbaptized. This child had no opportunity of supplying any defect in that baptism; for, by its death before arriving at years of discretion, it could not have desired or received the benefit to be derived by imposition of hands. No crime can be imputed to this child, as not having sought to supply this deficiency; and the fair presumption is, that, had it arrived at years of discretion, any deficiency would have been supplied. I am of opinion, that, even if I admitted this allegation, I should not in any manner benefit the party proceeded against; indeed, I think I am doing good to the party by arriving at the conclusion to reject it. I am saving him from great expense and interminable delay. I therefore reject this allegation; but, as it is stated that no case has occurred precisely of this description, if the party shall be advised to apply for leave to appeal, I shall not refuse leave. The case will stand over until next court-day, to ascertain whether the party shall wish or be advised to appeal.

On the succeeding court-day

Sir H. JENNER FUST said: Dr. Phillimore, do you intend to apply for leave to appeal against the judgment of the Court in this case?

Phillimore.—After the strong expression of the Court's opinion, I have advised the party not to appeal. I thank the Court for its permission, but we do not intend to avail ourselves of it.

The allegation was then formally rejected.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE business of the Session is about to close, and a multitude of important measures have been hurried through both Houses with a rapidity that would imply that law-making is not so difficult a work as hitherto it has been considered. This is the period of the Session at which vast good might be effected by two or three sturdy representatives. Ministers and members have but one object—to get through the business as fast as possible, little caring how it be done, so it be done quickly. They will make almost any concessions for the sake of peace. Now let some good man reserve himself for this busy time, and having well examined the various measures, announce his objections, propose his amendments, and let it be well understood that it is his firm purpose to fight them, though he stand alone, and he will be sure to succeed in carrying nine-tenths of his propositions; he will need but to hand them in and they will be adopted nem. con. Something of this has been done with great effect by Mr. Hawes, but it should be made a systematic business, and the country would soon reap the advantage. It will be seen that Sir James Graham entertains considerable doubt whether the County Courts Bill will be revived, and he hints at some minor measure for improving existing local Courts. The Post-office Committees have made their reports, and it appears that the practice of opening letters is a very ancient one. But it must be put under some regulation, although we think it a power with which it is necessary to arm a Government, to be exercised on its own responsibility; and when a letter is opened it should not be re-sealed with a forged stamp, but forwarded to the party in an envelope, stating that it had been opened by orders of the Secretary of State. The publicity thus given to the power would be the best security for its proper exercise.

Amongst the Bills hurried through at railroad speed is the one entitled "The Transfer of Property" Bill. A more important Act has not been passed for many years, altering some of the fundamental principles hitherto recognized in our law, especially that well-known principle, that contingent estates shall be construed, if possible, as a remainder rather than an executory devise. We think the public have a right to complain of such haste in so important a matter. True, the Bill was brought in at the suggestion of the Real Property Commissioners, but being first introduced into the House of Lords, there was no publicity given to its provisions. It is first ordered to be printed by the House of Commons July 30, on which day it is brought from the Lords and read the first time. It is read the second time on August 1st, committed on August 2nd, reported with amendments on the 3rd, passed the third time on the 5th, and receives the royal assent on the 6th! The Bill, as amended, is not yet printed, but we give, in another column, an abstract of the Bill as it stood previously. That such a Bill should have passed sub silentio is indeed strange. Some of its provisions are certainly excellent, but the effects of the others yet remain to be proved by their operation.

It will be seen by our report of the debates in the House of Commons, that, on Thursday night, Sir James Graham brought in a Bill to abolish the fees to clerks at sessions, and effect other material alterations in the administration of justice. He then also broached some important plans for the amendment of the Law of Settlement. The merits of both measures will in due time be canvassed in our columns.

Bills in Progress.

DEBTORS AND CREDITORS BILL.

An abstract of Lord Brougham's "Insolvent Debtors Bill" has already appeared. Another measure relative to the same subject has been since brought down from the Lords, and read a second time in the House of Commons. It is entitled, "An Act for facilitating arrangements between Debtors and Creditors," and contains sixteen clauses. The 1st enacts, that from and after the 1st of September next it shall be lawful for any debtor who is unable to meet his engagements with his creditors (not being a trader within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Acts now in force), with the concurrence of one-third in number and value of his creditors (testified by their signing his petition), to present a petition to the Court of Bankruptcy, setting forth a full account of his debts, the names, &c. of his creditors, his estate and effects, whether in possession, reversion, or expectancy; and also setting forth his inability to meet his engagements with his creditors, the true cause of such inability, and stating what proposal he is able to make for the future payment or compromise of such debts or engagements (one-third of the creditors having assented to the arrangement), and praying that such proposal, or a modification thereof, should be carried into effect, under the superintendence and control of the said Court; and that he, the said petitioning debtor, should meanwhile be protected from arrest, by order of the said Court. Upon this, a preliminary and private examination of the petitioner, and of the statements contained in the petition, &c. shall be made by one of the Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy, and if the said Commissioner be satisfied of the truth thereof, he may convene a meeting of the creditors, by notice in writing, not less than seven days previously. The petitioner will, it seems, be disqualified from taking the benefit of this Act if any of his debts shall have been incurred by reason of any fraud, breach of trust, or without any reasonable probability at the time of contract of being able to pay the same, or by reason of any judgment in any prosecution for breach of the revenue laws, or in any action for breach of promise of marriage, seduction, crim. con., libel, slander, assault, battery, malicious arrest, malicious trespass, &c. If, at the first meeting of the creditors, the major part in number and value, or nine-tenths in value, or nine-tenths in number whose debts exceed 20*l.* shall assent to the debtor's proposal, another meeting of the creditors shall be appointed, at which second meeting if three-fifths in number and value of all the creditors present, or nine tenths in value, or nine-tenths in number (whose debts exceed 20*l.*), shall agree to accept such arrangement or composition as was assented to at the first meeting, and shall reduce the same to writing and sign it, such resolution or agreement shall henceforth (if duly confirmed) be binding and of full force, both against the debtor and his creditors, provided, however, that such resolution or agreement shall not be valid unless the full third in number and value of all the creditors were present at such second meeting either in propriâ personâ, or by an authorized proxy. The resolution is to be submitted, within fifteen days of its passing, to the acting commissioner, who is empowered, if he shall think fit, to file and record the same, and to grant the debtor a certificate thereof, and from time to time to indorse thereon his protection of the said debtor from arrest or incarceration. The debtor will be henceforth free from arrest at the suit of any party who was a creditor at the date of his petition; but no such protection will be valid in case of a debtor who shall be proved to have been about to abscond beyond the jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy, or who has concealed, or is concealing, any part of his estate or effects. Temporary protection from arrest may be granted to such debtors during the discussion of their proposals, &c.; all the estate and effects of such debtors to vest in the trustee as fully as if the said trustee were an official assignee. The other clauses provide for periodical audits of accounts, examinations, and special meetings for special purposes. If any difficulty shall arise in the execution of the resolution or agreement, the commissioner may call another meeting of the creditors, who may either confirm, alter, or annul the whole or any part thereof, provided that at least one-third in number and value attend such meeting. The Act is to extend to aliens, denizens, and women; it is "to be construed beneficially to creditors," and if any doubts should arise in the construction thereof, it is to be construed by analogy to the laws now in force relating to bankrupts. The Act is not to extend either to Scotland or to Ireland.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY BILL.

A short Bill is lying on the table of the Lower House of Parliament (having been already passed by the House of Lords), entitled, "An Act to simplify the Transfer of Property." It contains fifteen clauses. The 1st clause defines the words "land," "freehold," "conveyance," "person," &c. The word "land" shall extend to manors, advowsons, messuages, lands, tithes, tenements, and hereditaments, whether corporeal or incorporeal, and to any undivided share thereof, and to any estate or interest therein, and to money subject to be invested in the purchase of land; the word "freehold" shall extend to customary freehold, or such customary land as will pass by deed, or deed and surrender, and not by surrender alone. The word "conveyance" shall extend to a feoffment, grant, release, surrender, or other assurances of freehold land; and the word "person" shall extend to a corporation as well as to an individual. All such freehold land may be conveyed by deed without livery of seisin, or prior bargain and sale, as might before the passing of this Act have been conveyed by lease and release. Partitions, exchanges, and assignments will not be valid at law, unless made by deed. Leases and surrenders in writing must also be by deed. Contingent interests may be conveyed by deed. No implied warranty to be created by "grant" or "exchange." No conveyances are to operate by wrong, or to have greater effect than a release or grant. By the 8th clause, contingent remainders are abolished; limitations, which would have taken effect as such, are to be executory devises or estates; and contingent remainders existing before the passing of the Act are not to be destructible by determination of any preceding estate, otherwise than by natural effluxion. The 9th clause empowers the executor or administrator of a mortgagee on discharge of a mortgage, to convey the legal estate vested in the heir or devisee. The remedies for the rent and covenants in a lease are not to be extinguished by the merger of the immediate reversion. The Act is to commence and take effect from the 1st day of December next, and will not extend to any deed, act, or thing executed or done, or any estate, right, or (except as regards the provisions respecting existing contingent remainders) interest created, before the 1st day of January, 1845. The Act is not to extend to Scotland.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

LAW COURTS (IRELAND).

MONDAY, Aug. 5.—A conference was requested by the Commons relative to the amendments made in the Law Courts (Ireland) Bill, which was agreed to. On the return of the Lords Managers, the Earl of LIVERPOOL reported that the Commons had dissented from their lordships' amendments, for reasons stated in a paper which was then handed in, and ordered to be printed.

POOR LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

Lord WHARNCLIFFE brought up the report upon this Bill, and on his motion the amendments made in committee were agreed to. The House went into committee on the Fisheries (Ireland) Bill, which was reported without amendments, and ordered to be read a third time on Tuesday. The Arms (Ireland) Bill also went through committee, and was reported without amendments, to be read a third time on Tuesday. The other Bills were forwarded their respective stages, and their lordships adjourned to Tuesday at four o'clock.

COUNTY CORONERS BILL.

THURSDAY, Aug. 8.—There was a conference with the Commons on the subject of this Bill.

POOR LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

On the motion of Lord WHARNCLIFFE, this Bill was read a second time.—Lord FEVERSHAM proposed two amendments: the object of the first being to enable boards of guardians to extend out-door relief to women who have had one bastard child only, and of the second, to allow them to grant relief to the families of married paupers, or widowers leaving their families in order to obtain employment in other parts of the country, instead of leaving such persons to be punished under the Vagrant Act, both of which were opposed by Lord WHARNCLIFFE, and negatived without a division.—The Bill then passed.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS BILL.

The Commons' amendments to this Bill were agreed to.

CORONERS BILL.

Lord WHARNCLIFFE moved that the Commons' amendments to this Bill be agreed to.—Lord BEAUMONT opposed the amendments.—After some conversation, the House divided, and Lord Wharncliffe's motion, that their lordships should not insist upon their objections to the Commons' amendments, was negatived, the numbers being the rule of the House in such cases deciding in favour of the non-contents.—The Joint-Stock Remedies (Law and Equity) Bill was read a third time and passed.—A message was brought from the Commons stating that that House had agreed to the Lords' amendments in the Poor-law Bill, the Duchy of Cornwall Bill, and the Dublin Grand Jury Presentments Bill. A message was sent to the Commons, desiring a present conference on the subject of the amendments made by their lordships in the County Coroners Bill, and, on the motion of Lord WHARNCLIFFE, a committee was appointed to conduct the conference on the part of their lordships. On the motion for the third reading of the Joint-stock Banks Bill, Lord MONTEAGLE pointed out the discrepancy between the provision of this Bill and those of the Joint-stock Regulation Bill. In the latter, directors going out annually were re-eligible, while in the Joint-stock Banks Bill such re-election was prohibited for at least a year. He thought it would be better that that restriction should not exist; and he, therefore, moved as an amendment the omission of the words in the fourth rule, which provided against the re-election of the retiring directors for at least twelve calendar months. —The LORD CHANCELLOR and the Earl of RIPON defended the clause as it stood. The amendment was negatived without a division. The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

JOINT-STOCK REGULATION AND REGISTRATION BILL.

This Bill was read a third time and passed.

CONFERENCE WITH THE COMMONS.

The managers on the part of the Lords withdrew for the purpose of holding a conference with the Commons upon the County Coroners Bill, and upon their return stated that they had submitted to the Commons their reasons for persisting in their amendments to this Bill. The Fisheries (Ireland) Bill, the Arms (Ireland) Bill, and the Protection of Purchasers, &c. (Ireland) Bill were severally read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS BILL.

MONDAY, Aug. 5.—On the motion of Sir JAMES GRAHAM, the report of the resolutions on compensation was brought up and agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee on the Bill. Sir JAMES GRAHAM brought up several new clauses, giving increased facilities to creditors over the property of debtors. On the clause abolishing imprisonment for debt for sums under 20*l.* Mr. M. PHILIPS remarked that great alarm had been created by this clause among the shopkeepers and trading classes, who were of opinion that it would put an entire stop to credit.—Sir J. GRAHAM observed that the Bill now presented a very different aspect from that which it wore when it was last discussed. Clauses had been introduced for the summary punishment of fraud, and for the protection of bailiffs in the seizure of goods, which gave greatly increased command over the property of the debtor. He was quite satisfied that the power of imprisonment for debt, for sums under 20*l.* without fraud, ought to be done away with; but it was impossible for the Legislature to guard the rights and interests of creditors more carefully than was now done by the Bill.—Sir W. CLAY supported the clause. It was true that alarm respecting the Bill had been expressed, but those who did so were probably not aware of the provisions contained in it for the punishment of fraud. It would do away with spurious credit, while it would not impair sound and useful credit, and would increase the value attaching to uprightness of character.—After some further conversation, Sir J. GRAHAM remarked that the clause was the essence of the Bill. He would suggest that the better course would be to agree to the various clauses, and take the discussion on the third reading.—The clause was then agreed to, as were the remaining clauses of the Bill, and the report ordered to be brought up on Tuesday at twelve o'clock.

COUNTY COURTS BILL.

Captain PECHELL wished to know whether the right honourable baronet intended to renew the County Courts Bill next session.—Sir J. GRAHAM was not prepared to give any direct pledge on the subject. He thought it not improbable that some bill for the better regulation of small debt courts might be required even after the present change had been introduced, but he wished first to see the effect of this measure.

COUNTY CORONERS BILL.

The Lords' amendments to this Bill were agreed to with the exception of one, which reduced the mileage from one shilling to ninepence. A committee was appointed to draw up reasons for disagreement on this point, which, having been done, the reasons were read, and ordered to be communicated to the Lords. —Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL presented 202 petitions from various parts of Ireland against the Charitable Donations and Bequests Bill.

THE WRIT OF ERROR.

TUESDAY, Aug. 6.—Mr T. DUNCOMBE inquired on what day the right honourable baronet would propose the adjournment of the Houses, and when the decision was likely to be given in the case of the Queen v. O'Connell?—Sir R. PEEL said he was only enabled to state that no decision would be taken till the judges came to town, as on account of the great importance of the subject the judges were decidedly of opinion that they ought to have an opportunity of private and confidential communication before they formed their judgment on the points in question. There would be no prorogation of Parliament until that took place. It was his belief that on the next day or on Thursday he should be able to move that the House do adjourn.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS BILL.

WEDNESDAY, August 7.—On the third reading of this Bill, Mr. M. MILNES moved the following clause:—"And whereas since the 11th day of November, 1842, the duties of taxing-master in the Court of Bankruptcy have been performed by one of the deputy-registrars of the said court, and the duties of such deputy-registrar have been performed by Thomas Acton Warburton, esq. barrister-at-law; be it enacted that such person shall be paid by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, out of the fund placed to the credit of the Accountant in Bankruptcy, entitled, 'The Secretary of Bankrupts' Account,' such remuneration for his services, not exceeding 800*l.* as the Lord Chancellor shall think reasonable, and by his order in writing shall direct."—Sir J. GRAHAM said, that he would not oppose the clause proposed, as the gentleman therein referred to had performed the duties which he had undertaken in a very efficient manner. Since the subject had been last under discussion he had seen the Lord Chancellor, by whom he was told, that the office of registrar had been disposed of in a manner satisfactory both to the House and the country. In the year 1842 the Bankruptcy Amendment Act was passed; and at that time there were certain officers who had not received compensation for the duties of which they were deprived by that Bill. He had mentioned his feeling on the subject to the Lord Chancellor, and the Lord Chancellor, conceiving the present to be a proper occasion for exercising the patronage of the Crown on behalf of those persons, had made such arrangements that the office of registrar, as far as Mr. Warburton was concerned, must be considered as having been forestalled.—Mr. R. YORKE opposed the clause. He considered that Mr. Warburton had entered upon the duties for which he sought compensation upon speculation and without sufficient authority; and as a claim of the kind would, if recognized, become a very dangerous precedent, he would take the sense of the House on the subject.—Mr. WAKLEY was of opinion that the speech of the right hon. baronet (Sir James Graham) furnished unanswerable arguments against the present motion. He would oppose it, as furnishing a most dangerous precedent for speculators in Government business generally. Mr. Warburton, as a lawyer, should have known that under the Act he could not claim a recompense.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL said, that his first impression on looking at the subject was, that as Mr. Warburton had entered upon the duties of deputy-registrar merely as a speculation, he was not entitled to compensation; but upon further consideration, he was not prepared to accede to the views of the hon. member for Finsbury, that Mr. Warburton, as a lawyer, must have been aware that by the construction of the Act he was not entitled to claim compensation, and that he must therefore take the consequences.—Mr. HENLEY opposed the clause; and after a few words from Mr. M. MILNES, the House divided, when there appeared—

For the clause	44

The clause was then added to the Bill by way of rider.—Mr. SPOONER moved that clauses 54 and 55 be postponed in their operation until the 25th of March. He knew that he would be met with the statement that the condition of the debtors' prisons must meet with a revision, and he felt that that system of things ought to be altered; but surely such was not a ground for general legislation on so large a subject as the law of debtor and creditor. The right hon. baronet (Sir J. Graham) had nothing more to do upon that question than to ask that all debtors' prisons throughout the kingdom should be transferred to his care, in order to terminate the evils complained of therein. He (Mr. Spooner) did ask his right hon. friend to beware lest, in abolishing such evils, he created others of a more extensive kind. Why, the effect of the Bill upon the working classes themselves would be, that they would not be able to get any credit at all.—Mr. KEMBLE seconded the motion. As the Bill would have a retrospective effect, he considered that its operation would be accompanied by great hardships. He thought that debtors were not entitled to monopolize all the consideration of the House, and that creditors had a right to come in for a share.—Sir J. GRAHAM thought it clear that the principle had been conceded that imprisonment for debt ought to be abolished, and that the question now raised was whether it was the interest of the retail shopkeepers on the one side, and of their debtors on the other, to postpone the operation of the Bill, or to bring it at once into effect. First, then, as to the working classes: they were defenceless and unprotected, and to their interests he looked. Only one argument had been adduced with regard to them, viz. that they might be damnified by the abolition of all credit. It was a matter of indifference to the labouring classes when the clauses might be brought into operation. He did not believe that legitimate credit would suffer by the alteration. Under the present system much moral damage was done, and a cruel hardship, to which, under it, the labouring classes were exposed, would by the Bill be removed. What, however, would be the effect of the suggested postponement? Why, that every creditor during six months would oppress and imprison their debtors to such an extent that all the gaols in the country would not contain them. He believed that such a scene of cruelty and confusion would be presented to the country as was never before witnessed. From the remedies provided (except in cases of fraud), every legitimate purpose would be answered as regards recourse against the property of the debtor; and what more than that could the creditor require? The effect of the present Bill would be, to check any propensity to give credit upon the mere security of personal restraint when there was no property, and yet to protect relatives and friends who, under the present system, were often induced, by feelings of kindness and humanity, to pay the debt in order to avoid the last extremity of punishment to which the law rendered their friends liable. In support of these principles he could quote the opinions of lawyers the most able. The present Lord Chancellor gave to them his unqualified support. Lord Cottenham was prepared to go even further; and Lord Brougham had also sanctioned the measure, which had likewise received the careful consideration of his learned friend the Attorney-General. The ancient law of Scotland was the same as our own, and there the change was effected with perfect safety. Indeed, he had the authority of a solicitor in Glasgow, employed in the small debt courts, for saying that the abolition of imprisonment in that country was a great boon. He was quite willing to wait till the table of the House was loaded with petitions against the Bill, before refusing to advocate its principle, and he thought that the House should do the right thing now and do it at once. While, therefore, he felt that the labouring classes had no right to be protected by the House by injustice to the retail dealers, yet he considered that on the whole he was bound to oppose the motion of his hon. friend.—Mr. BROTHERTON opposed the motion.—Mr. HAWES was sure that, if the motion was carried, wherever there was a relentless creditor, he would at once put his power into operation. It was the hard measure of coercion upon which a large proportion of creditors relied for securing their debts. The Bill was one upon which the Government were entitled to the strenuous support of all hon. gentlemen representing large constituencies. He gave his support to it because he conceived that it would be a boon, not only to the labouring classes, but to the shopkeepers and retail dealers themselves. Mr. HARDY did not see why, if the power of imprisonment was to be taken from the hands of creditors as to all claims under 20*l.* the same rule should not be carried out as to debts of 30*l.* or 50*l.* He would support the motion of the hon. member for Birmingham.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE said, that he had only heard feelings of gratitude among his constituency to the Government for the measure which was now under consideration, and he hoped the hon. member would not press the House to a division.—Mr. SPOONER withdrew his motion.—Some verbal amendments were then introduced, and the Bill was passed.

LAW COURTS (IRELAND) BILL.

Sir T. FREMANTLE appeared at the bar, and stated that he had been to the House of Lords with a message, requesting a conference with them on this Bill, which their lordships had agreed to.—Managers were then appointed to conduct the conference on the part of this House, and on their return, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER reported that they had delivered the reasons of the Commons for disagreeing with the Lords' amendments, and had left the reasons and amendments with their lordships.

LAW OF SETTLEMENT.

THURSDAY, Aug. 8.—Sir J. GRAHAM brought in a Bill for the alteration of the law of settlement, and, in doing so, stated its purport and objects. The Bill, which effects another important improvement in the existing poor law, is to be printed with the view of deliberate consideration during the recess being given to it by all interested in the measure, which constitutes the public at large.

APPOINTMENTS OF CLERKS OF THE PEACE, &c.

Sir J. GRAHAM said he was happy to announce to the House that he had now arrived at the last Bill which he had to lay before them at the close of the session. It was a Bill to which he attached great importance. It was a measure for regulating the duties, and the amount of fees, to be discharged and received by clerks of magistrates, clerks of the peace, and clerks of assize. He would take them in order;—clerk of the arraigns, clerk of the indictments, and clerk of the assize, and various other officers who go with the judges on the circuit. The great object with respect to the two first classes, namely, clerks to magistrates and clerks of the peace, was to substitute salaries in lieu of fees. Another object of the greatest importance was, that the magistrates in petty sessions should hold their courts in public—that they should meet in a fixed place, and on fixed days, instead of meeting, as they now often did, in their own houses, where the business was conducted in private. By this Bill that object would be obtained. He further proposed, that the clerk of the magistrates should be an attorney of a certain standing. He knew that the honourable member for Finsbury would object to this, because it was the opinion of that honourable gentleman that the law was not best executed by lawyers, and that professionally educated men were not the best practitioners. The county would be divided into petty session divisions, and each division would have a clerk and the salary of each clerk would be fixed by the magistrates in quarter sessions. Any fees legally payable to the clerk would be carried to the county stock. This, he thought, would secure regularity in the despatch of the public business, and impartiality to the parties seeking justice. With regard to the clerks of the peace, they would be required to make out an account of the fees which they had received for the seven years preceding the 1st of January, 1844, and he proposed to legalize all fees which had been received for fifty years previously. These lists of fees were to be sent to the Secretary of State, who would require them to be tested by the proper parties. The salary would be paid upon an average of the fees received during the last seven years. But fees received that were not found to be legal would not be included in the average. The lawful fees would still be received by the clerk of the peace; if they amounted to more than the salary assigned to him, the surplus would be paid to the county stock; and if they fell short of the amount of his salary, the difference would be paid to the clerk of the peace out of the county fund. Power would be given to the Secretary of State to prepare a uniform scale of fees to be received by the clerks of the magistrates, clerks of the peace, clerks of the assize, clerk of the arraigns, clerk of the indictments, and the associates of the judges, and all other officers attending the administration of justice. He proposed to abolish all fees on traverses, as well as upon proclamations and the discharge of prisoners. (Hear, hear.) And if any person should take fees which were not allowed and fixed by the Secretary of State, he should be liable to a penalty of 5*l.* The right honourable baronet then moved for leave to bring in a Bill to regulate the appointment and payment of clerks and other officers of the courts of petty and quarter sessions of the peace, oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery. It was not his intention to prevent attorneys practising in their profession while they should hold the office of clerks to the magistrates.—Mr. ESCOTT expressed his sense of gratitude to the right honourable baronet for having introduced this measure; the main object of which he considered to be to purify the courts of justice of this country from a gross system of extortion.—Mr. WAKLEY highly approved of the nomination of a lawyer to be clerk to the magistrates, for as justices proverbially had little knowledge of law, it was fit some person who at least pretended to an acquaintance with the science should assist them.—Leave was given to bring in the Bill. It was immediately afterwards laid upon the table by Sir J. Graham, read a first time, and the second reading fixed for this day three months.

NEW STATUTES.

Of the Session 8 Victoria.

CAP. XXII.

An Act to amend the Laws now in force for Preventing Frauds and Abuses in the Marking of Gold and Silver Wares in England. (July 4, 1844.)

THE first section of this statute, after reciting the several laws relating to the marking of gold and silver wares, and that it was expedient to simplify them and alter the punishments thereby imposed, repeals 13 Geo. 3, c. 59, and sec. 7 of 38 Geo. 3, c. 69, except as to offences already committed.

The following sections, as comprehending the new law upon the subject, it will be necessary to extract verbatim:—

2. Forging or counterfeiting any die for marking gold or silver wares, or knowingly uttering the same; marking wares with forged die, or uttering; forging any mark of any die, or uttering; transposing or removing marks, or uttering; having in possession any such, knowing, &c.; cutting or severing marks with intent to affix upon other wares; affixing any mark cut or severed from any other ware; or fraudulently using genuine dies. Felony: punishment.—And be it enacted, that every person who shall forge or counterfeit, or shall utter, knowing the same to be forged or counterfeited, any die or other instrument, or any part of any die or other instrument, provided or used or to be provided or used by the Company of Goldsmiths in London, or by any of the several companies of goldsmiths in the cities of York, Exeter, Bristol, Chester, or Norwich, or the town of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, or by the companies of guardians of the standard of wrought plate in the towns of Sheffield or Birmingham respectively, for the marking or stamping of any gold or silver wares; and every person who shall mark with any such forged or counterfeit die or other instrument, or with any part of such forged or counterfeit die or other instrument as aforesaid, any ware of gold or silver, or any ware of base metal, or shall utter any such ware of gold or silver, or any such ware of base metal, so marked as aforesaid, knowing the same to be so marked as aforesaid; and every person who shall forge or counterfeit, or by any means whatever produce an imitation of, or shall utter, knowing the same to be forged or counterfeit or an imitation, any mark or part of any mark of any die or other instrument provided or used or to be provided or used as aforesaid, upon any ware of gold or silver, or any ware of base metal; and every person who shall transpose or remove, or shall utter, knowing the same to be transposed or removed, any mark of any die or other instrument provided or used or to be provided or used as aforesaid, from any ware of gold or silver to any other ware of gold or silver, or to any ware of base metal; and every person who shall without lawful excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused) have in his possession any such forged or counterfeit die or other instrument as aforesaid, or any ware of gold or silver, or any ware of base metal, having thereupon the mark of any such forged or counterfeit die or other instrument as aforesaid, or having thereupon any such forged or counterfeit mark or imitation of a mark as aforesaid, or any mark which shall have been so transposed or removed as aforesaid, knowing the same respectively to have been forged, counterfeited, imitated, marked, transposed, or removed; and every person who shall cut or sever from any ware of gold or silver any mark or any part of any mark of any die or other instrument provided or used or to be provided or used as aforesaid, with intent that such mark or such part of a mark shall or may be placed upon or joined or affixed to any other ware of gold or silver, or to any ware of base metal; and every person who shall place upon or join or affix to any ware of gold or silver, or any ware of base metal, any mark of any die or other instrument provided or used or to be provided or used as aforesaid, which shall have been cut or severed from any ware of gold or silver; and every person who shall, with intent to defraud her Majesty, or any of the said several companies of goldsmiths and guardians respectively, or any person whatever, use any genuine die or other instrument provided or used or to be provided or used as aforesaid, and every person counselling, aiding, or abetting any such offender, shall be guilty of felony, and shall, at the discretion of the court, either be transported beyond the seas for any term not exceeding fourteen years nor less than seven years, or be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding three years.

3. Penalty on dealer selling, &c. or having in his possession any wares with forged marks.—And be it enacted, that every dealer in gold or silver wares who shall sell or exchange, or expose or keep for sale, or shall export or import, or attempt to export or import, from or to England, or who shall have in his possession without lawful excuse (the proof whereof shall lie upon him) any ware of gold or silver, or any ware of base metal, having thereupon any mark of any forged or counterfeit die or other instrument as aforesaid, or any forged or counterfeit mark or imitation of a mark of any die or other instrument provided or used or to be provided or used by any of the several companies of goldsmiths and guardians aforesaid for marking gold or silver wares, or having thereupon any mark which shall have been transposed or removed thereto from any other ware of gold or silver, shall for every such ware so sold or exchanged, or exposed or kept for sale, or exported or imported, or attempted to be exported or imported, or which shall so be in his possession as aforesaid, forfeit and pay the sum of ten pounds, which may be sued for and recovered by any of the several companies of goldsmiths and guardians aforesaid in manner hereinafter provided.

4. Dealers to be exempted in certain cases. Not to exempt persons from the consequences of uttering with guilty knowledge.—Provided always, and be it enacted, that every such dealer in gold or silver wares who shall have sold or exchanged, or exposed or kept for sale, or exported or imported, or attempted to export or import, or had in his possession, any such ware of gold or silver, or any such ware of base metal, having thereupon any mark of any such forged or counterfeited die or other instrument as aforesaid, or any such forged or counterfeit mark or imitation of a mark as aforesaid, or any mark which shall have been so transposed or removed thereto as aforesaid, and shall within twenty-one days next after notice thereof to him given by any of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians as aforesaid, or left at his usual place of abode, or at any house, shop, or place where he shall carry on or transact his said trade or business, discover and make known to the company of goldsmiths or guardians in or nearest to the city, town, or place in which such person shall reside, or shall carry on or transact his said trade or business, the name and place of abode of the actual manufacturer of any such ware of gold or silver, or ware of base metal, or of the person or persons from whom such dealer in gold or silver wares bought, had, or received the same respectively, then such dealer in gold or silver wares shall be and he is hereby exempted and discharged from any penalty or forfeiture incurred by reason of his having so sold or exchanged, or exposed or kept for sale, or exported or imported, or attempted to export or import, or having in his possession, any such ware of gold or silver, or ware of base metal, as aforesaid, any thing hereinbefore contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to exempt any person from the legal consequences of uttering or of having in his possession any such ware as aforesaid, knowing the same to be marked with a forged or counterfeit die or other instrument, or knowing the mark thereupon to be forged, counterfeited, imitated, transposed, or removed, if such knowledge shall be duly proved in any criminal prosecution or proceeding against such person for any such offence.

5. Where any alterations or additions are made, the ware so altered or added to shall be again assayed and marked as new, and duty paid upon the whole. Proviso for cases where an addition only is made to any ware. Penalty upon any dealer altering or adding to any ware without bringing same to be re-assayed and re-marked, or if only of a certain weight, without procuring the assent of any company thereto; and upon every dealer selling such ware without the same being marked, and such ware to be seized.—And be it enacted, that if any ware of gold or silver which shall have been duly assayed and marked at any assay office of any of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid shall at any time after the passing of this Act be altered, either by any addition made thereto or otherwise, so that the character or denomination of such ware, or the use or purpose for which the same was originally made or designed, shall be changed, or if any such ware of gold or silver shall at any time after the passing of this Act, have any addition made thereto (although its character, denomination, use, or purpose shall not be changed by reason of any such addition), the weight of which said addition shall bear a greater proportion to the original weight of such ware than four ounces weight of such addition to every pound troy weight of such original ware, every such ware so altered or added to as aforesaid shall be again brought to the assay office of some one of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, and shall be assayed and marked as a new ware, and as if no part thereof had been before assayed, and notwithstanding any former assay thereof, or the marks of any such former assay thereupon, and the duty shall be paid upon the whole weight of every such ware, and of every addition thereto (if any shall be made or intended to be made), without any allowance for the duty which may have been before paid upon any such ware, or any part thereof: Provided always, that if any ware of gold or silver shall have any such addition made thereto as last aforesaid, and the whole weight of such addition made thereto shall not bear a greater proportion to the original weight of such ware than four ounces weight of such addition to every pound troy weight of such original ware, and so that the character or denomination, use or purpose of such ware, shall not be changed, it shall be lawful for the company of goldsmiths or guardians at any such assay office to allow the addition thereto only to be assayed and marked, and to receive and take the duty on the weight of such addition thereto only; provided that before any such addition shall be made thereto the said ware shall be brought to such office for the inspection of such company of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, and the nature and extent of the intended additions thereto shall be fully explained to such company, and such company shall signify their assent to the making of such addition thereto; and every dealer in gold or silver wares who shall by any means whatever alter or change the character or denomination of any ware of gold or silver which shall have been before assayed and marked by any of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, so that the use or purpose for which the same was originally made or designed shall be changed, and every dealer in gold or silver wares who shall make or affix, or cause to be made or affixed, to any ware of gold or silver which shall have been before assayed and marked at any assay office of any of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, any addition of gold or silver, or any addition of base metal, the weight of which said addition thereto shall bear a greater proportion to the original weight of such ware than four ounces weight of such addition to every pound troy weight of such original ware, without bringing or sending such ware of gold or silver, so altered, changed, or added to as aforesaid, with every addition made or intended to be made thereto, to the assay office of some one of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, to be assayed and marked as a new ware, and every dealer in gold or silver wares who shall make or affix to any ware of gold or silver, which shall have been before assayed and marked as aforesaid any addition of gold or silver, or any addition of base metal, the whole weight of which said addition shall not bear a greater proportion to the original weight of such ware than four ounces weight of such addition to every pound troy weight of such original ware, without bringing or sending such last-mentioned gold or silver ware so added to as last aforesaid, with every addition intended to be made thereto, to the assay office of some one of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, for the inspection of the said company, and fully explaining the nature and extent of the intended addition thereto to the said company, and obtaining and procuring the assent of the said company to the making of such addition before any such addition shall be made thereto; and every dealer in gold or silver wares who shall sell or exchange, or expose or keep for sale, or export or attempt to export from England, or shall have in his possession, any such ware of gold or silver which shall have been so altered, changed, or added to as aforesaid, the same, or the addition thereto, not having been so assayed and marked as aforesaid, shall for every such ware forfeit and pay the sum of ten pounds, which may be sued for and recovered by any of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid respectively in the manner hereinafter provided; and every such ware of gold or silver, if found at any house, shop, or place where any such dealer in gold or silver wares shall carry on or transact his trade or business, shall and may be lawfully seized by any of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, and by them be dealt with as hereinafter is directed.

6. Dealers to be exempted in certain cases.—Provided always, and be it enacted, that every such dealer in gold and silver wares who shall have sold or exchanged, or exposed or kept for sale, or exported or attempted to export from England, or had in his possession, any such ware of gold or silver which shall have been so altered, changed, or added to as aforesaid, the same or the addition thereto not having been so assayed and marked as aforesaid, and shall within twenty-one days next after notice thereof to him given by any of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, or left at his usual place of abode, or at any house, shop, or place where he shall carry on or transact his said trade or business, discover and make known to the company of goldsmiths or guardians in or nearest to the city, town, or place in which such person shall reside or shall carry on or transact his said trade or business, the name and place of abode of the actual manufacturer of any such ware of gold or silver as last aforesaid, or of the person or persons from whom such dealer in gold or silver wares bought, had, or received the same respectively, then such dealer in gold or silver wares shall be and he is hereby exempted and discharged from any penalty or forfeiture incurred by reason of his having so sold or exchanged, or exposed or kept for sale, or exported or attempted to export, or having in his possession, any such ware of gold or silver as last aforesaid, any thing hereinbefore contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

7. If any officer of any of the halls shall mark any base metal with any die, &c. such company to be liable to penalty of 20l., the officer to be dismissed; and every such ware to be seized.—And for the further prevention of abuses in the marking and assaying of gold and silver wares, be it enacted, that if any assayer or other officer of or person employed by the Company of Goldsmiths in London, or any of the several companies of goldsmiths of the cities of York, Exeter, Bristol, Chester, or Norwich, or of the town of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, or either of the companies of guardians of the standard of wrought plate in the towns of Sheffield or Birmingham respectively, shall mark, or permit or suffer to be marked, any ware of base metal with any die or other instrument used or to be used by any such company for marking gold or silver wares to denote that the same is of the standard allowed and required by law, every such company of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid to which any such assayer or officer shall belong or by whom such person shall be employed shall for every such offence forfeit and pay to her Majesty the sum of twenty pounds, which may be sued for and recovered in such and the like manner as penalties recoverable under any Act in force relating to stamp duties are to be sued for and recovered by law; and every such assayer or other officer or person employed as aforesaid, upon complaint or information made thereof by any officer of stamp duties to any justice of the peace having jurisdiction where any such offence shall be committed, upon the oath of one or more credible person or persons (which oath such justice is hereby empowered and required to administer), and upon being convicted thereof by or before such justice, shall be by him forthwith dismissed and discharged from his said office and employment of or in the company of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid to or in which he shall have so belonged or been so employed as aforesaid, and shall be incapable for ever afterwards of holding any office or employment either in or under the same or any other of the companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid; and every ware of base metal so marked as last aforesaid, when found in the possession of any dealer, or of any officer of the companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, shall and may be lawfully seized by any of the said companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, other than the company to which the offending officer belongs, or by whom he is employed, and shall be dealt with as hereinafter is provided.

8. Dealer to enter every place wherein he shall carry on his business or deposit wares, &c. Penalty 5l.—

And be it enacted, that every dealer in gold or silver wares who shall enter his private mark under the laws now in force with any of the companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, shall at the time he so enters his private mark at the hall or office of any such company give to the officer there appointed to take the entry of his said private mark the particulars of every house, shop, and other place in which he shall or may carry on or transact any part of his said trade or business, and in which he shall or may deposit or keep any gold or silver wares, as well as the place of his abode, in order that an entry may be made at such hall or office of every such house, shop, and other place as aforesaid; and every such dealer in gold or silver wares shall from time to time enter in like manner at such hall or office of any of the companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid where his private mark has already been or may hereafter be entered, the particulars of every house, shop, and other place in which he shall or may from time to time transact or carry on any part of his said trade or business, or in which he shall or may from time to time keep or deposit any gold or silver wares, in order that an entry may from time to time be made at such hall or office of every such house, shop, and other place as aforesaid; and every such dealer in gold or silver wares who shall fail, neglect, or refuse to give any such particulars as aforesaid, and to cause such entry of the same to be made as aforesaid, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of five pounds, which may be sued for and recovered in the manner hereinafter provided by the company of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid in respect whereof such default shall have been made.

9. Penalty for any dealer erasing, obliterating, or defacing any mark.—And be it enacted, that every dealer in gold or silver wares who shall fraudulently erase, obliterate, or deface, or fraudulently cause to be erased, obliterated, or defaced, from any ware of gold or silver, any mark of any die, punch, or other instrument used or to be used by any of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid for the marking or stamping of gold or silver wares, or any private mark of any dealer in gold or silver wares, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of five pounds, which may be sued for and recovered by any of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid respectively in the manner hereinafter provided.

10. Recovery and application of penalties.—And be it enacted, that the several pecuniary forfeitures and penalties imposed by this Act shall and may be sued for and recovered, with full costs of suit, in any of her Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information in the name of any master, warden, assayer, clerk, or other officer of any of the said several companies respectively entitled to sue for or recover the same, or where the penalty shall be forfeited to her Majesty in the name of the Attorney-General, or by information in the name of any such officer, or where the penalty shall be forfeited to her Majesty in the name of an officer of stamp duties, before a justice of the peace, in like manner as any penalty may be recovered before any such justice by any officer of stamp duties; and every such penalty which shall be sued for and recovered in the name of any officer of the said several companies respectively shall go and be paid wholly to the company to which such officer shall belong, to be applied by such company in defraying the expenses of their assay office, and of detecting and prosecuting offenders against this Act.

11. Upon information given upon oath against persons suspected of having in possession illegal wares, &c. justices may grant search warrants. Nothing herein to authorize the search for or seizure of wares not required to be marked. And be it enacted, that whenever any of the said several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid shall have reasonable or probable cause to suspect that any dealer in gold and silver wares hath concealed or deposited in any house, shop, or place, or hath possession of any wares of gold or silver which ought to be marked with any of the marks provided or used or to be provided or used by any of the said companies of goldsmiths or guardians respectively, for marking or stamping gold or silver wares, and not so marked, or hath concealed or deposited as aforesaid, or hath possession of any such forged or counterfeit die or other instrument, or any ware of gold or silver, or ware of base metal, having thereupon any mark of any such forged or counterfeited die or other instrument as aforesaid, or having thereupon any forged or counterfeited mark of any die or other instrument provided or used or to be provided or used as aforesaid, or any mark which shall have been so transposed or removed thereto as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace having jurisdiction where any or either of such offences shall be suspected to be committed, and such justice is hereby required, upon information or complaint made of any such reasonable or probable cause of suspicion, by or on behalf of any of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, and upon the oath of one or more credible person or persons (which oath such justice is hereby empowered and required to administer), to grant a warrant under his hand directed to any one or more of the officers of any of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, together with any constable or other peace officer named in such warrant, authorizing and empowering such officer of the said companies respectively, and such constable or other peace officer as aforesaid, with necessary and proper assistance, to enter in the daytime into any such house, shop, or place as aforesaid, or any other house, shop, or place of any such suspected person, and to search the same, and to seize and take away every such forged or counterfeited die or other instrument, and every such ware as aforesaid, which shall there be found; and all constables and other peace officers shall and they are hereby required to be aiding and assisting in the execution of every such warrant as aforesaid; and every such forged and counterfeited die or other instrument, and every such ware as aforesaid, so there found, seized, and taken, shall and may be dealt with as hereinafter is provided. Provided always, and it is hereby declared, that nothing in this Act contained shall authorize the search for or seizure of any wares which by the laws now in force are not required to be marked or stamped by any of the companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, or any of the wares following; namely, watch rings, watch keys, watch hooks, earrings, necklaces, eyeglasses, spectacles of gold, shirt pins or studs, bracelets, head ornaments, waist buckles.

12. False dies and wares seized, how to be disposed of. —And be it enacted, that every die, punch, or other instrument which shall or may be lawfully seized or taken under this Act by the said Company of Goldsmiths in London, or by any of the several companies of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid, or by any officer of any of the said companies respectively, shall be broken, detained, and destroyed by such company; and every such ware so seized or taken as aforesaid, if it shall be shewn to the satisfaction of the court or justice or justices before whom proceedings shall be had in respect of such ware that the same has been lawfully seized and taken under the provisions of this Act, shall be broken and defaced; and in case it shall be shewn to the satisfaction of such court or justice or justices that the dealer from whom the same shall have been so seized or taken had such ware in his possession, knowing the same to be marked with a forged or counterfeit die or other instrument, or knowing the mark thereupon to be forged, counterfeit, imitated, transferred, or removed, or knowing such ware to have been altered, changed, or added to as aforesaid (the same or the addition thereto not having been assayed or marked as required by this Act), or knowing such ware to be of base metal, then and in every such case, and likewise in every case in which such ware has been seized or taken from any officer of any company of goldsmiths or guardians aforesaid as being of base metal, and fraudulently marked, every such ware so broken and defaced shall be melted and the metal thereof shall be sold and disposed of, and the produce thereof shall be entered in the book of account of receipts and payments relating to the assay office belonging to the said company by whom or by whose officer such ware shall have been so seized or taken, and shall be applied towards defraying the general expenses of the assay office of such company, and in the prosecution of offenders under this Act; and, save and except as aforesaid, every such ware so seized and taken, or broken and defaced, shall be given back to the dealer from whom it shall have been so seized and taken.

13. Limitation of actions. Venue local. Notice of action. General issue. Tender of amends. Costs.—And be it enacted, that all actions and prosecutions which shall be brought or commenced against any person for any thing done in pursuance or under the authority of this Act shall be commenced and prosecuted within three calendar months next after the fact committed, and not afterwards, and shall be brought and tried in the county or place where the cause of action shall arise, and not elsewhere; and notice in writing of such action, and of the cause thereof, shall be given to the defendant one calendar month at least before the commencement of the action; and the defendant in such action may plead the general issue, and give this Act and any other matter or thing in evidence at any trial to be had thereupon; and if the cause of action shall appear to arise from any matter or thing done in pursuance and by the authority of this Act, or if any such action shall be brought after the expiration of such three calendar months, or shall be brought in any other county or place than as aforesaid, or if notice of such action shall not have been given in manner aforesaid, or if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made before such action commenced, or if a sufficient sum of money shall have been paid into court after such action commenced, by or on behalf of the defendant, the jury shall find a verdict for the defendant; and if a verdict shall pass for the defendant, or if the plaintiff shall become nonsuit, or shall discontinue any such action, or if, on demurrer or otherwise, judgment shall be given against the plaintiff, the defendant shall recover his full costs of suit as between attorney and client, and shall have the like remedy for the same as any defendant may have for cost of suit in other cases at law; and, although a verdict shall be given for the plaintiff in any such action, such plaintiff shall not have costs against the defendant, unless the judge before whom the trial shall be had shall at the time of such trial certify in writing his approbation of the action, and of the verdict obtained thereupon.

14. Construction and interpretation of terms: Base metal—Dealer—Die—Her Majesty—Mark—Ware.—And for the better interpretation of this Act, and to avoid the frequent use of divers terms and expressions, be it enacted, that the following terms and expressions shall have the several interpretations hereinafter respectively set forth; (that is to say,) the term "base metal" shall mean any metal whatsoever other than gold or silver of the respective standards required by law; and the term "dealer in gold or silver wares" shall mean and include every goldsmith and silversmith, and every worker, maker, and manufacturer of and trader and dealer in gold or silver wares; and the term "die" shall mean and include any die, plate, tool, or instrument whatever, by means whereof any mark can or shall be made upon any metal whatsoever; and the term "Her Majesty" shall mean and include her Majesty, her heirs and successors; and the term "mark" shall mean and include any mark, stamp, or impression of and made with any die or other instrument, or produced by any other means whatsoever upon any metal whatsoever; and the term "ware" shall mean and include any plate, vessel, article, or manufacture of any metal whatsoever; and whenever in this Act, with reference to any person or matter or thing, or to any persons or matters or things, the singular or plural number or the masculine gender only is expressed, such expression shall be understood to include several persons or matters or things as well as one person or matter or thing, and one person, matter, or thing as well as several persons or matters or things, females as well as males, bodies politic or corporate as well as individuals, unless it be otherwise specially provided, or the subject or context be repugnant to such construction.

15. After 1st Oct. 1844, gold wares of a certain standard to be marked with a crown and the figures 22 instead of the lion passant.—And whereas all gold wares of the standard or fineness of twenty-two carats of fine gold in every pound troy assayed by any of the said companies of goldsmiths and guardians are by certain statutes now in force required to be marked with the same mark as that with which all silver wares of the standard or fineness of eleven ounces and two pennyweights, assayed as aforesaid, are required to be marked; (that is to say) with the figure of the lion passant, in order to denote the standards thereof respectively, whereby great facilities to frauds are afforded, and extensive frauds have been committed by dealers in gold and silver wares; and it is expedient that all gold wares of the standard or fineness aforesaid, and so assayed as aforesaid, should be marked by a different mark, to denote the standard thereof, from the mark so used for the said silver wares as aforesaid; be it therefore enacted, that from and after the first day of October one thousand eight hundred and forty-four there shall be struck or marked by the said Company of Goldsmiths in London, and by the several companies of goldsmiths in the cities of York, Exeter, Bristol, Chester, and Norwich, and the town of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and the company of guardians of the standard of wrought plate in the town of Birmingham, upon all gold wares of the standard or fineness of twenty-two carats of fine gold in every pound troy, brought to them respectively to be assayed, the mark of a crown and the figures 22, instead of the mark of the lion passant.

16. Extending the powers, penalties, and provisions concerning the marks formerly used to the marks directed to be made use of by this Act.—And be it enacted, that the rules, directions, powers, privileges, pains, penalties, forfeitures, causes, matters, and things enacted or provided in and by any of the laws and statutes of this realm now in force in relation to the mark of the lion passant on gold wares of the standard or fineness of twenty-two carats in the pound troy, and assayed as aforesaid, and also in relation to the die used for making the said mark of the lion passant, shall extend to, and be continued, applied, practised, and put in execution in all cases relating to the said mark of a crown and the figures 22 hereby directed to be used for the gold wares aforesaid, and also relating to the said die to be used for making the said mark, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if the same rules, directions, powers, privileges, pains, penalties, forfeitures, causes, matters, and things were again particularly repeated and enacted in and by the present Act, any thing in the statutes now in force or any of them contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

17. Limitation of Act.—And be it enacted, that this Act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland.

18. Commencement of Act.—And be it enacted, that this Act shall come into operation on the first day of October, one thousand eight hundred and forty-four.

19. Act may be altered this Session.—And be it enacted, that this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed during this present session of Parliament.

The Existing Parliament.—At the close of this present protracted session, Parliament will nearly have entered its fourth year of existence, having already lasted about three years- viz. from August 1841 (on the 19th of which month it first assembled) to August 1844. In order "to die a natural death," the actual Parliament must, of course, linger until the expiration of the session of 1848, four years in prospective. Since the era of the Reform Act, the average duration of Parliaments has been generally less than three years. The first reformed House of Commons, elected in October 1832, was summarily dissolved by William IV. in December 1834 ; the second reformed Parliament had its existence cut short by the demise of that sovereign in 1837 ; but the third, which was elected on on the accession of Queen Victoria to the throne of Great Britain, lasted nearly four years, and was finally dissolved by the Melbourne Ministry in June 1841. Of these three defunct Parliaments, only one, therefore, was extinguished by an inevitable, or constitutional, as contradistinguished from a party, or political, cause. Of the other two, one was dissolved by a Whig, and the other by a Conservative Government ; and it is curious that in both instances the attempts to gain a majority proved a failure The longest Parliament immediately preceding the passing of the Reform Bill was that elected in 1826, which lasted till the death of George IV. in 1830, put a period to its existence. The shortest was the very next, which was elected in the summer of 1830, and suddenly dissolved by the Grey Administration in the spring of 1831, amidst the alarm and excitement attendant on the introduction of the first Reform Bill. It is worthy of remark that of the Parliaments which were chosen for some time after the passing of the Septennial Bill in the year 1716, not a few died a natural death that is to say, lasted their full period of seven years.

Public Petitions to Parliament.—The 43rd report relative to public petitions on various subjects presented to the House of Commons has just made its appearance. It hence appears that the present gross total number of petitions and petitioners on the following measures stands as follows :- viz. in a repeal of the (legislative) Union with Ireland 528 petitions, signed by 1,067,545 individuals ; for encouragement to the system of the Church Education Society in Ireland, 11 petitions, signed by 783 individuals ; for legalizing marriages solemnized in Ireland by Presbyterian ministers 457 petitions, signed by 172,381 individuals ; against any alteration whatever in the existing corn-laws 3,837 petitions, signed by 288,321 individuals ; for an alteration of the Property Tax Act (will expire next April) two petitions only, signed by 71 persons ; against a reduction in the differential duties on sugar and coffee one petition (from the landed proprietors, planters, merchants, agricultural labourers, and other inhabitants of the parish of Trelawney, in the island of Jamaica), signed by 975 individuals ; for a tax upon steam machinery, and upon wood sawed by steam, 10 petitions, signed by 2,*75 persons ; in favour of the Art-Unions' Bill one petition (from the members of the Glasgow and West of England Association for the promotion of the Fine Arts, &c.) ; against a renewal of the Bank of Ireland Charter 25 petitions, signed by 88,291 persons ; for an alteration of the laws relating to blasphemy eight petitions, signed by 1,639 persons ; against the Charitable Donations and Bequests (Ireland) Bill nine petitions, signed by 8,928 persons ; for encouragement of the Fine Arts two petitions, signed by 180 persons ; for extending the Small Debts Bill to Ireland three petitions signed by 716 persons, &c. Independent of the above there are 2,661 petitioners, whose names (or marks) are recorded on parchment, praying the House to "do its utmost endeavours for the immediate liberation of Daniel O'Connell, esq. and the traversers with him." There are, moreover, 22 petitions, signed by 619 individuals, complaining of letters being opened at the post-office, one party, Mr. Hugh Craig, a cloth merchant of Kilmarnock, in Scotland, complains of the loss of a letter sent through the General Post-office, containing "a considerable amount of money," and prays for inquiry.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

No occurrence in the administration of the law calls for notice.

EXCLUSIVE AUDIENCE TO BARRISTERS AT QUARTER SESSIONS.

(From the Justice of the Peace.)

In a very recent number of the Glamorganshire Guardian, we stumbled upon a paragraph, of which the following is a copy :—"Exclusive Audience to Barristers.—Conformably with the resolution of the magistrates at the last quarter sessions for giving exclusive audience to barristers in the business of the court, no less than nine barristers, arrayed in the imposing professional costume of gown and wig, made their appearance at the Neath sessions, held this week. This arrangement cannot be otherwise than gratifying to all parties. Independent of precision and despatch in the different causes, which superior professional attainments and experience must necessarily promote, the mere appearance of these gentlemen invests the proceedings of the court with a solemnity little short of that with which the judge of assize is surrounded. There is above all an assurance, that the suitor in a court so constituted will have the benefit of legal knowledge of a very efficient and respectable order. The entire of this Bar would appear to have their hands pretty full of business."

We beg to congratulate the magistrates and inhabitants in general of the rich and rapidly improving county of Glamorgan, upon the event notified in the foregoing paragraph ; and to the former body the thanks of the public are especially due for the steps they have taken to improve the character and appearance of the courts of quarter sessions. No court of justice can maintain that high position in the estimation of the public, so necessary to the efficient administration of justice, in which professional advocates are precluded from practising. Every civilized country upon the face of the globe has recognized the importance of, and necessity for, a distinct class of lawyers, whose province it is to espouse the cause of clients in court ; and to the honour of the English Bar be it spoken, there is no class of professionals whose services are more esteemed, or more readily accepted, or handsomely (though voluntarily) remunerated, than that of English barristers. Whatever scandal may at times be levelled at the law's delay, or its ruinous expense, however much some particular branches of the legal Profession may be the subject of reproach—the Bar has ever maintained, in the estimation of the public at large, a repute and a character of the highest and most unblemished nature. Thus it is, that in the Welsh county of Glamorgan, the admission of a Bar to the sessions, with the usual privilege of exclusive audience, is hailed as an event fraught with the greatest public and individual benefits. The paragraph we have copied succinctly points out several of the more conspicuous advantages attendant upon the new order of things, and not the least gratifying circumstance, as stated, is, that the entire Bar of nine barristers (rather a considerable number for a Welsh county) had their hands pretty full of business! We hope, and indeed doubt not, that the satisfaction thus early given will continue unabated ever after ; and we trust that the example thus set in Glamorganshire, will be followed by every county of the principality, where the amount of business can in anywise tempt the Bar to penetrate ; for notwithstanding the able manner in which, in those remote parts which have not as yet been professionally visited by counsel learned in the law, the business of the suitors has been conducted by the attorneys, it cannot be disputed, that in such courts an air of dignity and solemnity is wanting, which is to be met with alone in courts graced by the presence of the Bar. We hope that the increase of the members of the Bar, and the extension and cheapening of internal means of transit through the medium of railroads, will speedily supply to all the Welsh courts the commodity so joyously received in Glamorganshire ; and that whether it be in Cornwall (in which county as yet, we believe, no Bar attends) or in the remotest county of the principality, we shall speedily have in each court of quarter sessions an array of gowns and wigs, which, whether or not they may be in themselves more ornamental than useful, are ever worn by gentlemen whose attainments and position in society must add dignity to the sphere in which they may move. We have thus particularly drawn attention to the importance of having a Bar at each court of quarter sessions, because we fear that the magistracy in general are not alive to the true value of the attendance of these professionals, and in many instances appear to be rather disposed to discountenance than to encourage their attendance. We can only view the very stringent rules as regards costs, which in effect preclude prosecutors from availing themselves of the assistance of counsel, as proceeding mainly from a belief that justice can be as efficiently administered without as with the intervention of members of the Bar. Such a belief is founded in error ; and we hesitate not to assert that the more the attendance of a reasonable Bar is encouraged, the more dignified must be the proceedings of the court, and the more healthful and vigorous the administration of justice. The Glamorganshire magistrates have pursued a judicious course, and the most satisfactory results cannot but follow.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

There is a very heavy arrear of matter in type, but the vacation will speedily absorb it.

Some days since there was a rumour that the Lord Chancellor proposed resignation. It is, we understand, wholly without foundation. The Attorney-General has repaired to the Continent, where we earnestly hope that rest and recreation will restore the health to which he has been so long a stranger.

We omit many leading articles, letters, and other matters of no very pressing urgency, to make room for long-standing arrears.

ATTORNEYS' LIEN.

No. I.

There is, perhaps, no subject of more practical importance than the rights of lien possessed by attorneys and solicitors. In our review of Michaelmas Term (2 Law T.) we incidentally referred to the case of Blunden v. Desart, decided on appeal before Sir Edward Sugden (2 Drury & Warren, 405), and we have been induced, from perusing that judgment, to consider the whole subject, and we now purpose to devote two or three articles to its illustration.

At the outset, we must carefully distinguish between the two species of lien possessed by attorneys and solicitors, the one being a general lien upon the papers of their clients for their costs ; the other, the more narrow lien upon judgments and sums recovered in the course of a cause.

General liens, as is well known, are not favoured in law, but can only exist by virtue of an express contract, or a contract implied from the custom of trade, which must be clearly established by the party claiming the lien. (Scarfe v. Morgan, 4 M. & W. 285.)

Such, however, is the clear undoubted lien of an attorney. It is firmly established by practice, and attaches upon all deeds, papers, and documents of his client coming into his possession in his professional character, and not specially exempted by agreement, for the amount of his debt to him in his professional character. By this lien he is entitled to withhold the deeds, to lock them up in his box until his claim is satisfied, but he can take no active means to enforce his demand ; he cannot part with their possession ; he cannot pledge or raise money upon them. In fact the lien, though resulting from a contract, is only a quasi contract, it is not an incumbrance. The possessor can do nothing with it, but he can effectually, and without any restriction from the Statute of Limitations, prevent the client from receiving any advantage from the deeds.

To illustrate these general propositions, we will refer to a few decisions. In Ex parte Sterling (16 Ves. 258), Lord Eldon said, "In an ordinary case of lien, I never heard of a question upon what occasion particular papers were put into the solicitors' hands."

So, in Stevenson v. Blakelock (1 M. & Sel. 535), the lien attached to a lease which was handed to the attorney by the depositee on his paying, at the request of his client, the debt for which it had been deposited as security, and for the amount of which execution had issued ; it was said to be incident to his duty as attorney to do that for his client which the client, if well advised, would have done himself, and therefore to receive the lease.

In Rex v. Sankey (5 Ad. & Ell. 423), the distinction between papers coming into the hands of the attorney professionally, and others, was clearly marked out. There a town-clerk, being also an attorney, was held entitled to a lien for business done as attorney, and not as town-clerk, on papers belonging to the corporation, which had come into his hands as attorney, but not on those which had come to him as town-clerk. So papers delivered to him as steward are not subject to lien. (Champernoun v. Scott, 6 Madd. 93.)

A special agreement or a special purpose excludes the lien, because it cannot be acquired by a restricted possession, any more than by wrongful or unauthorized possession. Such possession would exclude a specific lien for labour and skill expended in improvement of a chattel, as in the case of the livery-stable-keeper, who has no lien by law. (Judson v. Etheridge, 1 C. & M. 473 ; and see Jackson v. Cummins, 5 M. & W. 342.) A fortiori, will it exclude a general lien. If, however, the special purpose be fulfilled, and the papers be allowed to remain in the hands of the attorney, they will be liable to the general lien. (Ex parte Pemberton, 18 Ves. 282.) As a corollary, it follows that there is no lien where the client or party depositing the deeds has no right to them ; the right to the detention of the deeds will only be commensurate with the client's right to deal with them. Numerous cases illustrate this, and it will be found to be the principle upon which Blunden v. Desart rested.

In Hollis v. Claridge (4 Taunt. 807) the plaintiff wishing to raise money, gave some title-deeds, which he proposed as a security, to be inspected by the person who was to make the advance; the latter handed them to his conveyancer, and the conveyancer, on the negotiation going off, claimed a lien upon the deeds as against the plaintiff for his bill of costs. But the Court of Common Pleas held, that the conveyancer had no better title to retain them than the party from whom he received them, and was therefore liable in trover for the deeds at the suit of the plaintiff.

Similar to this was the case of Pratt v. Vizard (5 B. & Ad. 808; 2 N. & M. 455):—A, wishing to borrow money on a mortgage of land, delivered the title-deeds to B, the intended mortgagee, for examination, and said that he would pay all expenses. B handed the deeds to his own attorneys to be investigated. The negotiation went off, and the attorneys being requested by A to return his deeds, refused to do so till he paid their bill of costs. He paid the bill and then sued the attorneys to recover it back. It was held that the defendants could not be considered as having acted for both parties in the negotiation, and, therefore, had not a lien against A as his attorneys; that, supposing A liable to B for the costs incurred, B could not communicate to his own attorneys a lien upon A's deeds by handing them to the attorneys for investigation; that the undertaking of A to B, if it amounted to a promise to pay these costs, did not entitle B's attorneys to detain the deeds, as it established no privity between them and A, and that A might have brought trover for the deeds, and was entitled to recover in this action.

Lightfoot v. Keane (1 M. & W. 745) shews the same rule in a somewhat different manner. Estates were devised to trustees to pay part of the rents and profits to the widow of the testator, and the residue towards the maintenance and education of the son, until he reached twenty-one, and then to him during the life of the widow, and upon her death they were devised in fee to the son. The trustees incurred costs in the management of the estates, and deposited the deeds with the attorney, who claimed to retain them by virtue of his lien against the son after the death of the mother. But the Court of Exchequer held clearly that there was no lien, for the trustees had no power to incumber the estate.

Lord Abinger called the lien an equitable mortgage; but, as already observed, it is materially different, being neither jus in re, or ad rem—not a right which can be enforced, but only a right to detain. It resembles a mortgage only in the power possessed by the holder of the deeds to transfer any right being limited to the right vested in himself.

The cases in bankruptcy, which shew that the solicitor has no lien against the assignees for costs incurred subsequent to the bankruptcy, or the act of bankruptcy where he has notice thereof, rest, we apprehend, on the same principle, that the papers cease to be the property of the bankrupt, and consequently, his power to transfer any right in them, directly or indirectly, to another person is at an end. (Ex parte Lee, 2 Ves. jun. 285; Re Dean, 2 Mont. D. & De Gex, 438; Ex parte Swinburne, 3 Dea. 396.)

But the established rule of law is, that the legal owner of the property is the party entitled to the possession of the deeds and muniments of title. (Philips v. Robinson, 4 B. 106; Harrington v. Price, 3 B. & Ad. 170.) Hence it follows that a mortgagee is entitled to possession of the title-deeds of the mortgaged estate, and no lien can be acquired under the mortgagor subsequent to the mortgage. This point was discussed at length in Smith v. Chichester (2 Dru. & Warr. 393), before Lord Chancellor Sugden. A was entitled to a leasehold interest in 1814, which he assigned by way of mortgage to B. In 1826 A obtained from the landlord a lease for lives renewable for ever, in lieu of the former interest, and in 1835 deposited the new lease with his solicitor, to whom he was indebted for costs. By the decree pronounced at the original hearing, the new lease was declared to be a graft upon the old one, and that the mortgagee was entitled to the benefit of it, and that, consequently, the solicitor gained no lien by the act of A. In Young v. English (13 L. J. 76, Ch.) the client had fraudulently obtained his title-deeds for the equitable mortgagee, and handed them to his solicitor for the purpose of completing a sale. The solicitor claimed a general lien against the equitable mortgagee for costs due from his client, but it was refused. In fact, wherever the client holds the deeds subject to an incumbrance, the attorney takes them subject to the same incumbrance.

This brings us to the question of the rights of the attorney to a lien against persons claiming after the delivery of the deeds to him. This was the case of Blunden v. Desart (2 Drury & Warr. 405). A judgment creditor, prior to the late Acts, claimed by virtue of his judgment to oust the attorney from any lien for costs accrued from the client subsequent to the judgment. The Master of the Rolls (Irish) had decided in favour of the lien (1 Flan. & Kelly, 572), and the question was argued with great ability on both sides. Sir Edward Sugden, at the hearing, was strongly inclined to decide against the lien, but took time to look minutely into the authorities, and then, in an elaborate judgment, reversed the decision of the Master of the Rolls. He considered it clear that a purchaser, or mortgagee, could prevail over the lien as to costs after the sale or mortgage, or, at all events, after notice of the transfer; and equally clear, that as an incumbrance upon the estate, a prior judgment creditor would take precedence of such purchaser or mortgagee against the estate. In Henry v. Smith (2 Dru. & Warr. 381), he had previously given his opinion on the nature of a judgment thus:—

"It is clear, that as a mortgage is an actual charge, so a judgment is a potential charge, and the judgment-creditor has a right to recover his debt against the lands. This is so fixed a right, that the person to whom the lands belong cannot, by any act of his, discharge them from the liability; he cannot settle, he cannot mortgage, he cannot sell them, discharged from the judgment; he can do no act by which he can defeat the right of the judgment-creditor to come against the lands for the amount of his demand. This looks very like a charge, call it what you will. The liability of the lands can only be discharged by satisfaction or release. I therefore need not trouble myself to consider whether it is a lien or a charge. Under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105 (following our 1 & 2 Vict. 110), it clearly became an actual charge—before it was a potential one."

He now observed that he was still of the same opinion, and did not consider that it was at all impeached by the case of Walford v. Marchant (2 Barn. & Ad. 315), decided on the Annuity Acts, and relied on by the Master of the Rolls; and "that the judgment-creditor, as standing alone, has a right to bind the estate specifically, which cannot be defeated. He may sue out an elegit, he may obtain a receiver independently of the Receiver Act in this country, he may maintain an ejectment, he may redeem a prior mortgage, and, after the death of the conuzor, he may here file a bill for a sale." He considered the assimilation of a lien to an equitable mortgage could not be supported. We would observe that this argument would have proved too much, for it has been decided both here and by Sir Edward Sugden, that a security given to an attorney for future costs is certainly bad as to these costs. (Jones v. Tripp, Jac. 322; Uppington v. Bullen 2 D. & War. 184.) He referred to the cases quoted in favour of the lien thus:

"No authority was cited to prove that this right would enable the solicitor to claim costs subsequently incurred, except Lambert v. Buckmaster (2 B. & C. 616); Ogle v. Story (4 B. & Ad. 735), and Turwin v. Gibson (3 Atk. 720). The last case only decides that the lien would prevail, after the client's death, over his bond debts: that cannot touch the question as to the judgment-creditor. The case of Lambert v. Buckmaster extended the lien to the costs of actions by the solicitor against the client after bankruptcy, but that was on the plain ground that the solicitor had the same rights of lien against the assignees that he had against the bankrupt, and therefore it is no authority for the lien in this case.(a) The case of Ogle v. Story was a very simple case, and the whole difficulty arises from the reasons which, according to the report, were given by the judges. The purchaser of an equity of redemption sold the estate; the costs of a mortgagee solicitor were not produced until the last sale was about to be concluded; they were paid by the seller, under protest. It afterwards appeared that they contained charges which a mortgagor could not be compelled to pay, although, as between the mortgagee and his solicitor, they might be proper, and this solicitor claimed a lien for all his costs upon the deeds. Lord Denman said, it was not contended that the mortgagee had not a right to pledge those deeds. Then, a party who takes property subject to a mortgage must ask where the title-deeds are, he must take care to secure himself. It made no difference that the person with whom they were pledged was the mortgagee's attorney. Littledale, J. added that the first purchaser of the equity of redemption should have ascertained before in whose hands the deeds were. These opinions were relied upon before me to shew that the solicitor's lien, for all his costs, would bind third persons; but it could hardly be held that a mortgagee can give to his solicitor a lien over the mortgagor's title-deeds beyond the amount due to himself. No such point was decided in the case referred to, although the language of the two judges already quoted was somewhat general. The costs, it is manifest, were less than the mortgage-money, and it was indifferent to the solicitor that the mortgagor thought fit to pay both. Parke, J. seems to have put the case on the right grounds. He said that the solicitor had a lien for the amount to which he was entitled as against the mortgagee; the latter as mortgagee of the property was competent to pledge the deeds with the defendant for that sum. The fact was, that the mortgagor had overpaid the mortgagee, and he should have taken his remedy against him. Thus explained, the case is not an authority against the judgment creditor."

He proceeded to comment upon the judgment below:—

"I was not referred, in the argument, to the grounds upon which this case was decided in the court below; but I have been furnished with the printed report, which is about to be published, of the elaborate judgment of the late Master of the Rolls. After the full review of the arguments before me, which include most of the points relied upon in the judgment, I would only observe, that the learned judge said he was not called upon to determine whether the lien would prevail against a mortgage of which the solicitor had notice beyond the amount of the costs due when the mortgage was executed. As an equitable mortgage by a deposit of deeds would prevail over a subsequent mortgagee who had notice of the deposit; and as in his view, if the deposit covered further advances, the second mortgagee would be bound by future advances, the principle would, he thought, apply to a mortgagee having notice that the title-deeds were in the hands of a solicitor; or, having notice of that fact, he would have notice that, according to the practice of the profession, the solicitor would be entitled to hold them as security for future advances; and it would be his own folly to lend money on such security. It is not part of the proposition that the mortgagee in the supposed case of the equitable deposit, covering future advances, had notice at the time of advancing further sums on the second mortgage. The learned judge was, however, manifestly prepared to go much further than the point which he actually decided; but it was admitted before me that if the solicitor, having a lien, which of course, undisturbed, would cover future costs, had notice of a mortgage, he could recover no subsequent costs under his lien; that must be so, for here there is no contract but a lien by law, and the law cannot give a lien on deeds which belong to one man for the debt of another. Even in the case of a first mortgage, whether legal or equitable, covering future advances, it deserves further consideration whether it would be safe in all cases to rely on Gordon v. Graham (Vin. Abr. tit Cred. & Debt. E. 3; 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 598), referred to in the judgment as an authority that advances may be safely made after the first mortgagee has notice of the second mortgage. Here it is assumed that neither party had notice; the judgment-creditor was not likely to know of the deposit of the deeds; but looking at the dealings of the estate, the solicitor probably was aware of the judgment. I assume, however, that there was no notice to either party. Upon the whole, I must reverse the order complained of, and direct the Master to review his report as far as regards the judgment-creditor; and with that view I shall preface the order with a declaration that the solicitor's lien in this case cannot prevail over the judgment-creditor beyond the sums due at the time the judgment was entered."

The practical bearing of this decision is plainly most important. The solicitor who, relying on the possession of his client's deeds, allows his bill of costs to go on increasing, may, in numerous cases, find himself deprived of his supposed security in consequence of some outstanding judgment, perhaps entered up on a secret warrant of attorney. Further, the increase of judgments under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, renders this lien still more insecure; for it appears to have been the opinion of Sir E. Sugden, that the client, or other third party against whom the lien, but for the judgment, would have been valid, might, through the judgment, get rid of the lien. His words were:

(a) We must observe, in passing, that this case seems somewhat anomalous. Liens arise upon work done for or at the request of the party, or for his benefit; but here it was said to exist for the costs of actions against the client, which could by no possibility be said to have been incurred for him. They were a debt to the attorney as judgment-creditor, not as attorney: and it is clear, that no lien exists for a debt not arising from his professional character.

"The person entitled to the prior claim may come into a court of justice and enforce that claim, and may compel the production of the deeds, in order to enable him to raise the amount of his incumbrance, and the solicitor, although he may have a right to retain them as against his client, cannot have a right superior to that of his client; when, therefore, the deeds are produced, may not a third person derive a benefit from this production? and then the question is, can that benefit thus incidentally obtained be taken away from him?"

We pause here for the present. On another occasion we shall advert to the modes by which a lien may be lost, and to the effect of taking a security for the same costs covered by it, and then consider the second and more limited species of lien to which an attorney or solicitor is entitled.

THE PROPERTY LAWYER.

Williams, J.—My lords, the question in this case is, whether a certain lease, to be shortly noticed hereafter, is or is not made in conformity to the following leasing power contained in the will of Benoni Mallett, bearing date the 28th day of January, 1780. "Provided always, and his will was, that it should and might be lawful to and for his said grandson, Philip Mallett Case, and all his sons, and all other person or persons respectively, as and when they should respectively come into and be in the actual possession of the said tenements, with the appurtenances, or any part thereof, or be actually entitled to the rents and profits thereof, by indenture under their respective hands and seals, to demise and lease the same, or any part thereof, unto any person or persons, for any term or number of years not exceeding twenty-one years, in possession, and not in reversion, remainder, or expectancy, so as upon every such lease there should be reserved and made payable during the continuance thereof respectively the best improved yearly rent that could be reasonably had for the same, without taking any sum or sums of money by way of fine or income for or in respect of such lease or leases, and so as none of the said lease or leases were made dispunishable of waste by any express words therein, and that in every such lease there should be contained a clause of re-entry for non-payment of the rent or rents to be thereby respectively reserved, and so as such lessee or lessees to whom such lease or leases should be made, sealed, and delivered counterparts of such lease or leases." And in considering this question, I shall assume that the power is to be construed in the same manner and by the same rules that regulate courts of law in their interpretation of any other document or writing; by which I mean that any strictness or laxity which may have been supposed to belong to the construction of instruments of this description is alike inadmissible, and that the true intent and meaning in this, as in other instances, are to be sought for. The indenture of lease in question bears date the 14th December, 1833, and is made between Philip Mallett Case, the tenant for life under the said will, of the one part, and the plaintiff in error of the other, whereby the said Philip Mallett Case, in exercise of the power of leasing above set forth, demised to her, her executors, &c. the said tenements, with the appurtenances, to hold the same from the 11th day of October then last for and during the term of twenty-one years then next ensuing, yielding and paying therefore to the said Case and his assigns during such part of the term as he should live, and after his decease unto such person or persons as for the time being should be entitled to the reversion of the said premises under the said will, the yearly rent of 903*l.* by equal half-yearly payments, i. e. on the 6th April and the 11th October in every year, in equal portions, except the last half-year's rent, which was thereby reserved and agreed to be paid on the 1st day of August next before the determination of the said term. Then follow some other provisions which it is not material to notice, the question arising upon the reservation of rent in the last year of the term. The said Philip Mallet Case, the tenant for life, died on the 4th of July, 1834, without issue, and the defendants in error, in right of the said Mary, claim title to the said tenements under the said will, and contend that the said lease is not a good execution of the said leasing power. Now, upon adverting to the terms of this power, it is observable that the only limitation or restriction as to the reservation of rent is "that it should be the best improved yearly rent that could be reasonably had for the same." Whether the rent should be made payable yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly, or at any other stated period, is not specified. To hold that at any particular time in the year for the payment is required, is, as it seems to me, to introduce a new term, and to add a further restriction, unless indeed the words "the best improved yearly rent" necessarily imply that it should be made payable at once, in one sum, the whole amount. That, however, is not, in my opinion, the fair interpretation. The plain and obvious meaning, I think is, that the rent should "be reserved and made payable," during each year of the term, or, as the language of the reddendum in leases so usually is, "yielding and paying therefore yearly and every year during the continuance of the term" so much, whatever the amount of rent in the particular case may be. This indeed seems to be so clear, that the citation of any authority in support of this construction may perhaps be superfluous. The point, however, has been brought expressly under the consideration of the Court of Queen's Bench in the case of Doe dem. The Earl of Shrewsbury v. Wilson (5 B. & Ald. 363). There the language of the power was, "so as upon all and every such lease and leases there be reserved and made payable yearly during the continuance thereof the usual and accustomed yearly rents, boons, and services for the same." The objection there was, that the rent was reserved half-yearly, whereas it was contended that the words of the condition contained in the leasing power could not be satisfied unless the rent reserved be payable once a year only, viz. at the end of the year after the making of the lease. Upon this point Lord Chief Justice Abbott is reported to have delivered his opinion as follows:—"The observation I have already made, that a yearly rent payable at Lady-Day and Michaelmas was the usual and accustomed yearly rent, applies also to this objection. It is admitted, that, if the words of the power had been, 'so that there be reserved and made payable during the continuance thereof the usual and accustomed yearly rent,' without the word 'yearly' immediately following the word 'payable' (and in the case before your lordships the word 'yearly' does not immediately follow the word 'payable'), a rent reserved half-yearly would have been sufficient; that is, that a payment by portions at the end of each half-year, or at the end of each quarter of the year, does not prevent the rent from being, in the common understanding of mankind, and in common parlance, a yearly rent. I cannot see any reason why the words 'payable yearly during the continuance thereof' should make any difference." He then adverts to the usual language of leases, which has been before noticed, and, observing that the Court ought to construe those words "payable yearly" with reference to that language, concludes against the validity of the objection, and in this view of the subject Bayley and Holroyd, Justices, fully concurred. But it is said, that, even if the half-yearly payments be unobjectionable, the reservation of the rent on the 1st of August in the last half-year of the term is contrary to the power, and avoids the lease; and this objection, it was argued, is sustained, as well upon the authority of decided cases, as also by the injurious effects necessarily produced by such reservation upon the party in remainder. And upon the first point, if I had thought that the question had been already decided, that would have been with me a strong, if not sufficient, reason for holding the lease to be invalid; but I cannot consider that to be the case. The authorities alluded to are, Doe v. Giffard, cited in the case of Doe dem. The Earl of Shrewsbury v. Wilson (5 B. & Ald. 363), and Doe dem. Harris v. Morse (2 C. & M. 247). In the case of Doe v. Giffard, the lease (made under a power of leasing for twenty-one years, reserving the best and most approved yearly rent) bore date the 14th September, 1809, and was for the term of twenty-one years, the rent to be payable the 29th September and the 25th March, and the first payment to be made on the next 25th March. Lord Ellenborough is reported to have held the lease invalid. There, however, it was obvious that the rent was not reserved during the whole term, for by the mode of reservation no rent was payable at all for the last half-year; but in the present instance no such objection exists, for the rent is reserved, payable during the term, and for the last half-year, as well as for every other, though not made payable at the end. The other case is that of Doe dem. Harris v. Morse. There the power required the rent to be reserved half-yearly, and in the lease the rent was made payable on the 1st of May and the 29th of September. There was, therefore, a manifest departure from the direction in the power, and upon that the judgment of the learned judges mainly depended. That of the Lord Chancellor (then Lord Chief Baron) proceeded upon that ground exclusively. It is true that Mr. Baron Bayley does intimate an opinion that the rent ought to have been made payable at the end of the year, upon which so much reliance has been placed. It is obvious, however, that the unequal division of the year is the circumstance chiefly relied upon by him; for he points out the disproportion by actually numbering the days, and shewing that 151 days were allotted to one supposed half-year, and 214 to the other. The decision in this case, therefore, is clearly sustainable, without having recourse to any other consideration, upon the sure ground that the lease was not according to the plain and unambiguous language and meaning of the power. But it was further contended, that the lease is void from the injurious effect which the reservation of the last half-year's rent is calculated to produce upon the party entitled in remainder, inasmuch as, if the tenant for life should die after the 1st of August and before the end of the year, there would be an occupation of the premises without any rent payable to those in remainder. Upon this part of the case it seems to me, that, unless the reservation of rent be upon the face of the lease itself inconsistent with the terms of the power, it is an unsafe and precarious rule of construction to make its validity to depend upon any other consideration. To ascertain the balance of advantage or disadvantage in each particular case may, and in many instances probably would, be at least as difficult as to discover the intent and meaning of the creator of the power, which, as I have already said, I take to be in every instance the true question. If, however, such inquiry into loss or benefit be admissible, I cannot help thinking that the advantage of being entitled to distrain for rent, if in arrear on the 1st of August, when the produce of the farm is upon the ground, contrasted with the right to distrain on the 11th of October, is at least equivalent to the contingent loss of rent upon the event which this objection supposes. It is true, that, in the case of Isherwood v. Oldknow (3 M. & Selw. 382), a lease (under a power requiring the reservation of rent "during the continuance of the term") wherein no rent was reserved during the last half-year of that term was sustained. I do not wish, however, to place much reliance upon the decision in that case; because that particular objection does not appear to have been taken, and the attention of the Court was drawn to another, whether, the first half-year's rent having been made payable twenty-seven days after the execution of the lease, that in itself amounted substantially to a foregift prohibited by the power. I rest my opinion upon the language and (as I think) the meaning of the power in this particular case, and the manner in which it has been executed. Seeing, therefore, that the lease has been made "for a term or number of years not exceeding twenty-one," and that "the rent has been reserved and made payable during the continuance thereof," forasmuch as the last payment (which raises the objection) is, I think, clearly for the last half-year, though made before the end of it, and that such reservation (if that consideration ought to be entered into) is, at least, as beneficial to the party in remainder as if made at the end of the term, it seems to me that the power has been in the letter and spirit complied with, and that therefore the indenture of lease in this case has been duly executed.

Patteson, J.—My lords, the single question in this case is, whether the rent reserved payable on the 1st of August, in the last year of the term, which was to end on the 11th of October, can be said to be reserved and made payable during the continuance of the term, within the true meaning of the power under which the lease was made. No case exactly the same as this has been cited, nor does any such appear to exist in those which have been cited. Objection was taken to the reservation of the rent from the beginning to the end of the term, whereas here it is admitted that the proper rent is reserved, and at the proper times, until the last half-year's rent. The reason for this reservation is said to be, that the lessor may have an opportunity of distraining for the last half-year's rent, if necessary; and in that respect it is beneficial to the landlord for the time being, equally whether he be the tenant for life or the remainder-man; on the other hand, it is obvious, that if the tenant for life should happen to die between the 1st of August and the 11th of October in the last year, the remainder-man would succeed to an unproductive estate until the 11th of October, and would be, to some extent, injured. The improbability of such an event, and the apparent reason for the reservation, seem to have been taken into consideration in the Court of Exchequer, but not so in the Court of Exchequer Chamber, where the objection appears to have been treated as being the same as would have arisen if a beforehand rent had been reserved from the beginning of the term. I will first consider the case upon the latter supposition. It appears to me that the person who created the power intended that the person exercising it should take no exclusive benefit for himself to the prejudice of the remainder-man, but should reserve the best yearly rent during the continuance of the term; by which word "rent," I understand a compensation for the actual occupation; not a sum of money covenanted to be paid by anticipation in respect of a future occupation, which a beforehand rent in truth is. Such a reservation, namely a sum of money to be paid at the beginning of the term as for the first year's rent, and so at the beginning of each succeeding year as for that year's rent, must be prejudicial to the remainder-man, at whatever time the tenant for life may happen to die, unless, indeed, he should die on the very last day of the year. Independent of authorities, therefore, I should consider that a lease, stipulating for the payment of such sum of money at the beginning of a year by anticipation, did not reserve rent at all, and certainly that it did not reserve rent made payable during the continuance of the year. The case of Doe dem. Harris v. Morse (2 C. & M. 260) seems to me to be an authority for such a view of the question. It is true, that the question there was, whether the rent was reserved half-yearly, but as it was reserved in two payments in respect of the intended occupation for two half-years, and the second payment was to be after the expiration of the first half-year, I cannot see why it should have been held a bad reservation upon any other ground than that a beforehand reservation is bad. What fell from Mr. Justice Powell, in Reg. v. Weston (Ld. Raym. 1197), was by way of illustration of the question in that case, and is not entitled to the same weight as if it had related to the point actually before the Court; and what was said by Lord Ellenborough, in Isherwood v. Oldknow (3 M. & Sel. 393), when taken, as it must be, with the context, is nothing like a decision upon this point. The case of Isherwood v. Oldknow turned on a totally different matter, namely, that the first payment of rent as for half a year, although payable in a short time after the execution and date of the lease, was in truth for half a year, because the holding was made to be from a bygone day, and the tenant had occupied during the interval. The case of Doe dem. Earl of Shrewsbury v. Wilson (5 B. & Ald. 363) was decided on the ground that the rent was reserved at the usual and accustomed times, according to the power, and in no way trenched upon the authority of Doe v. Giffard, there cited; but I do not consider the last-mentioned case to be any direct authority upon the present occasion, inasmuch as there was in that case an actual loss of rent for a whole half-year. For these reasons I am of opinion, that under such a power as that contained in the lease now in question, it was not competent to the person executing that power to reserve what is commonly called a beforehand rent. The only difficulty that I feel is in determining, whether it makes any difference that the reservation is here confined to the last half-year's rent. I see fully that such reservation may be, and probably is, beneficial generally, and that it is highly improbable that the remainder-man should be prejudiced by it; but still it is a stipulation for the payment of a sum of money in anticipation of a future occupation for the residue of the half-year, and therefore, according to my view of the effect of such a stipulation, I cannot say that it is a reservation of rent during the continuance of that half-year, but am obliged to say, that there is a portion of the term during which there is no reservation of rent. I am therefore of opinion, that the indenture of lease stated in the special verdict, to which your lordships' question refers, is not a valid execution of the power of leasing, as also there stated.

Parke, B.—My Lords, in answer to the question proposed by your lordships, I have to state my humble opinion that the lease stated in the special verdict is a valid execution of the power of leasing, also stated in the special verdict. In order to decide this question, the proper course undoubtedly is, to ascertain in the first instance, what the intention of the donor of the power was, by the ordinary rules of construction applied to the instrument containing it; and the lease must accord in all respects with that intention so ascertained, or it will be void. Where the language of the power is restricted, and contains precise conditions which can be complied with in one way only, that way must be exactly followed. When the power uses general terms, and may be exercised in more ways than one, then the donee of the power must necessarily have a discretion, and if there be any restriction upon that discretion, where none is expressed by the donor of the power, the only restriction that can be required is, that such discretion should be fairly exercised, and at the very utmost that it should be executed in a reasonable manner; and upon that principle the decision of the House of Lords in Smith v. Doe dem. Lord Jersey (2 B. & B. 473) proceeded. If indeed it could be shewn that expressions apparently of a general nature, and allowing a certain latitude of discretion, have, by a course of legal decisions, received a limited construction, then undoubtedly they must be so construed, and it would be intended that the donor of the power used the words in that limited sense; but such will be found not to be the case with reference to the general expressions used in this case. Whether, when a latitude is left by the terms of the power to the donee, any thing more is required than the exercise of his discretion honestly and without fraud, is a question into which I need not inquire. It will be sufficient for the present purpose to assume that when there is such a latitude it must not only be fairly and honestly executed, but in a reasonable manner. Proceeding upon that assumption, if we apply these rules to the words of the power, we find that the testator has made express conditions that the lease should not exceed twenty-one years; that it should be in possession, and not in reversion; that the best improved yearly rent that can be reasonably had shall be reserved and made payable during the continuance of the term; that there should be no fine or income; and that the lessee should not be made dispunishable by express words, and should execute a counterpart. All these conditions must be strictly complied with, for they are expressed, and no latitude is allowed to the donee of the power. These have been complied with in this case, for the provision of the lease, that the tenant should have the barns, &c. for the purpose of thrashing, and until the 1st of August after the expiration of the term, is by way of covenant merely, and no question has been made on this ground at your lordships' bar; but the testator, besides these conditions, has required that there should be a clause of re-entry, in that respect leaving a latitude to the donee of the power. There is a clause of re-entry in the lease, if the rent or any part should be unpaid for forty-two days, and the only question as to this part of the case is, whether this clause is a reasonable clause. That it has not been unfairly inserted is clear. I think it is a reasonable clause, sufficient to secure the due payment of the rent, which is the object of its insertion; and there is a case in Willes's Reports 169 (Jones v. Verney), in which there was a clause of re-entry on the rent being unpaid for the same period of time, to which no objection was taken on the ground that it was a non-compliance with the terms of a power requiring a condition of re-entry on non-payment of rent to be inserted in the lease. Indeed, this objection was not insisted upon at your lordships' bar on the part of the lessee or the plaintiff, though taken in the court below. The principal ground of objection was as to the mode in which the rent was reserved in the lease. The lease was executed on the 14th December, 1823, and was to hold from the 11th October then last, at a rent payable half-yearly on 6th April and 11th October in each year, except the last half year's rent, which was to be paid on the 1st of August. It was not contended that the reservation of half a year's rent on the 6th April was bad, though half a year would not then have elapsed, the case of Isherwood v. Oldknow (3 M. & Sel. 282), having settled that point; but it was strongly urged that the donee of the power had no right to reserve any part of the rent by anticipation, and that the rent must be so reserved as that no part of the estate belonging to the remainder-man could be occupied by the lessee without paying for it, and that any other mode of reservation would be an unreasonable execution of the power, and therefore void. The main question in this case is, whether this principle of construction is correctly laid down, which must depend upon the authorities as to the construction of similar powers with reference to the reservation of rent. In the absence of all authorities on this subject, I should say that the donor of the power, having imposed no restriction as to the time of reservation for the protection of the remainder-man, left the donee the power to exercise his discretion therein, and if so, that he might reserve it yearly, half yearly, quarterly, or oftener, as he thought proper, and payable at the beginning or end of each year, half year, or quarter, an opinion which is countenanced by that of Lord Holt and Mr. Justice Powell in 2 Lord Raymond, 1198. It is not necessary, however, to go so far; but, proceeding on the assumption that the reservation, to be good, must be both fairly made and reasonably made, it is impossible to say that the reservation in this case was a non-compliance with the power, even supposing that the tenant for life was bound to look only to the interest of the remainder-man. It is true that if the tenant for life had died in the last year of the term between the 1st of August and 11th of October, the remainder-man would have lost the half-year's rent. On the other hand, if the tenant for life died at any other part of the term, which is a much more probable event, the remainder-man would, in the first place, gain by the earlier payment of the last half year's rent (unless, indeed, we are to suppose that the rent would have been a little more if it had been made payable at the end of the half-year, as the times of payment may affect the amount of the rent paid); and, in the second place, he would gain by having the certainty of securing the last half-year's rent by the crop and produce of the farm; for if it had been reserved payable on the last day, the tenant might have removed all his crops and effects from the farm before the rent became due, and, as there would be no power by law to distrain on the crops and effects so removed, he would be left to his personal remedy against the lessee. This is the reason why the last half-year's rent was made payable before the end of the term, and it is impossible to say that it is not a reasonable and even wise provision, if the interests of the remainder-man alone are to be considered. Can any one say that he would not have approved of such a reservation if he had been consulted by the tenant for life when the lease was prepared? I therefore conclude that this reservation is fair and reasonable, and therefore good, unless it could be shewn that that principle is not to be adopted in this case, and that the authorities have established the different rule of construction contended for, both in the court below and your lordships' bar; that is, that no reservation can be good which permits an occupation of any part of the remainder-man's estate, without remuneration to him; treating the rent as a mode of payment, the purchase-money of the term from the tenant for life and the remainder man together, which ought, it is contended, to be paid in the proper proportions to each. Upon the principle of the supposed rule, strict justice could not be done to both parties without reserving a rent payable at the shortest intervals of time, nor to the remainder-man without reserving a larger rent for the summer or more productive, than for the winter or less productive, half-year, so that he may have adequate compensation; but in truth no such principle is to be found in any of the decided cases on which reliance was placed, whatever colour may be given for the argument in the dicta and expressions of some of the judges. In Doe v. Giffard (5 B. & A. 371), where, under a power to lease reserving the best yearly rent, a lease, dated the 14th September, for twenty-one years from the date, reserving rent upon every 25th March and 29th September during the term, the first payment to be made on the 25th March next, was held void, there was half a year for which no rent was reserved at all. Forty one half-yearly payments would be to be made for a twenty-one year's lease. In Doe dem. Harris v. Morse (C. & M. 247), the power required half yearly payments, and the Court construed the power as if it had been by even and equal half yearly payments, or payments for even and equal half-years; the year to be, as near as may be, equally divided. The principle contended for, that, if any part of the estate of the remainder man is to be held under any circumstances without rent, the lease is necessarily void, is not the ground of that decision. There are some expressions, indeed, used by the judges, particularly by Baron Bayley, which give some countenance to the argument in support of that doctrine, but no more; they are unnecessary to the decision of the case, on the very ground on which he puts it, and it by no means follows that he would have made use of similar observations in a case where the remainder-man may have a benefit by the reservation of the rent before the end of the term, and the principle of decision laid down by the learned judge, and on which he professes to proceed, is, after all, that the requisites of the powers must be substantially and honestly complied with. As there is, therefore, no authority for the position, that on such a reservation as this, a lease is necessarily void if there be any part of the estate of the remainder-man which may be occupied without payment of rent, I am of opinion that, as this reservation is fair and reasonable, the lease is valid. My brother Alderson, who was not in the Court of Exchequer, but who heard the argument at your lordships' bar, desired me to say, at the close of the argument, that he was of opinion that this was a due execution of the power.

VACATION AT THE ACCOUNTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE.

LORD CHANCELLOR.

Tuesday, the second day of July, in the eighth year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, 1844.

In the matter of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery.

Whereas it is proper that the accounts kept by the Accountant General of this court should be examined and compared, in order to settle the same; and whereas it will require considerable time to perfect such examination, and it is necessary that a time should be appointed for closing the books of accounts of the said Accountant-General for the purposes aforesaid:

His lordship doth order that the books of the Accountant General be closed from Tuesday the 20th day of August next, to the first general seal before Michaelmas Term next, in order to adjust the accounts of the suitors with the books kept at the bank, and that during that time no draft for any money, or certificate for any effects under the care and direction of this court be signed or delivered out by the said Accountant-General, or any stocks or annuities accepted or transferred by him relating to the suitors of this court. And that no purchase, sale, or transfer be made by the said Accountant-General, unless the order, request, or registrars' certificate be left at his office, on or before Friday, the 9th day of August next. And that no order for the payment of any money out of court which may be then in court, be received at the Accountant-General's office after Tuesday, the 13th day of August next. And to the end that the suitors may have notice hereof and apply to the court, as there shall be occasion, to have money paid to them out of the bank, or stocks, or annuities transferred to them before the said 20th day of August next, it is ordered, that this order be affixed up in the several offices belonging to this court.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed James Mounsey, of Carlisle, in the county of Cumberland, gent. and George Hancock, of Yeovil, Somersetshire, gent. to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

The Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas has appointed T. P. Burbury, of Birmingham, esq. a Perpetual Commissioner under the Act for abolishing Fines and Recoveries.

THIRD REPORT OF THE COPYHOLD COMMISSION.

Copy of the Third Report of the Copyhold Commissioners to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department.

SIR,—We have the honour of presenting to you the Third Report. There has been an increase both in the number of enfranchisements effected during the past year, and in the value of the lands enfranchised. This appears partly to have arisen from the powers of the Copyhold Act becoming more known, but chiefly from the further facilities given to enfranchisement by the amended Act of last session. As we anticipated, many ecclesiastical bodies have availed themselves of those facilities, and enfranchisement of church property is now proceeding to a considerable extent, and there is every reason to suppose that in manors held by ecclesiastical persons, the disposition to avail themselves of the Act will become general. In other manors enfranchisements have also increased, but not in the same proportion. We are also able to state that facilities have been already given by the Act to building, more especially in the neighbourhood of the metropolis. In enfranchisements which might remain in no way compulsory on the lord, power might be given to two thirds of the tenants in number and value to bind the remaining third The Bill passed the House of Commons in 1838 with this clause, but the clause of the present Act is only applicable to commutations, and not to enfranchisements, and even in the case of commutations, three fourths must concur to bind the remaining fourth. The wish to extend some such powers to enfranchisements has been already much felt. In several cases under the existing Act, the lord is willing to enfranchise, and finds that he can make arrangements with the principal tenants, but that there is much difficulty in dealing with some few of the smaller tenants; and if he effects an enfranchisement with the more considerable tenants, he might be left with the dregs of the manor. This has already happened in one or two cases. The extending to enfranchisements in this respect, a power similar to that which already exists as to commutations, would obviate these difficulties We beg to add a list of the enfranchisements, which have either been completed (since our last report) or which are now nearly ripe for completion. Some progress has also been made towards enfranchisement in many other manors. We have the honour, &c.

The Right Hon. Sir J. Graham, bart. M. P. &c. &c. &c.

REVISING BARRISTERS FOR THE HOME CIRCUIT.

The Learned Judges on Saturday signed the appointments of the following gentlemen as revising barristers for the different electoral districts upon the Home Circuit:—

Hertfordshire.—Hertford, St. Alban's, Canterbury, Sandwich, and Greenwich; J. Espinasse, esq. and J. D. Chambers, esq.

Rochester and Chatham.—J. D. Chambers, esq.

Essex.—Colchester, Harwich, and Maldon; S. R. Bosanquet, esq. and Sir W. Riddell.

Kent.—Maidstone, Hythe, and Dover: Russell Gurney, esq. and — Phillips, esq.

Sussex.—Lewes, Hastings, Rye, Brighton, Horsham, Chichester, Arundel, Midhurst, and New Shoreham: A. Ryland, esq. and S. Richmond, esq.

Surrey.—Guildford, Reigate, Lambeth, and Southwark: S. C. C. Pyshe, esq. and J. Deedes, esq.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

Buckinghamshire, with the boroughs of Aylesbury, Buckingham, Marlow, and Wycombe—Mr. Sanders.

Bedfordshire, with the borough of Bedford—Mr. O'Malley.

Huntingdonshire, with the borough of Huntingdon—Mr. Palmer.

Cambridgeshire, with the borough of Cambridge—Mr. Prendergast.

Eastern division of Suffolk, with the borough of Ipswich—Mr. Gunning.

Western division of Suffolk, with the borough of Bury ("and Sudbury" can no longer be added as of yore)—Mr. Evans.

Eastern division of Norfolk, with the boroughs of Norwich and Yarmouth—Mr. Worlledge.

Western division of Norfolk, with the boroughs of King's Lynn and Thetford—Mr. W. Cooper.

DIVORCE IN AMERICA.—The principal grounds for divorce in the United States are—adultery, desertion, and intemperance. In new York adultery is the only cause for divorce. The periods of intemperance and desertion necessary to constitute divorce are—

The marriage ties are dissolved cheaper in New Jersey than in any other state; and whether this be an inducement to divorce or not, it is a fact that a large number of dissolutions annually take place. The mode of application in Mississippi is by filing a bill in the Court of Chancery; in South Carolina, Virginia, and Maryland, by special law; in Alabama, Georgia, and Tennessee, by a two-third vote of the legislature.—Mississippi Reformer.

CLERKS TO ATTORNEYS BILL.—A Bill has been brought in to relieve clerks to attorneys from certain liabilities under which they now labour respecting the enrollment of their contracts of clerkship with attorneys and solicitors. By a recently passed Act of Parliament, some stringent provisions were enacted in regard to the conduct of attorneys who practise without a certificate, and a nice point might hence arise respecting a clerkship—whether the period during which an attorney was without his certificate could be calculated in the term which an articled clerk is required to serve. A clause, however, in the Bill just printed enacts that the neglect of attorneys, solicitors, notaries, and others, in taking out their annual certificate, shall not disqualify their clerks from admission as attorneys, if otherwise qualified.

COURT OF SESSION.—BUCHANAN v. SMITH.—This was a case of considerable importance, as defining the law in regard to the rights of a female in disposing of effects after entering into contract of marriage. The prosecutor in this case pleaded that only one day previous to his marriage his bride, at the instigation of certain interested parties, had disposed of heritable and other effects to a considerable amount, bequeathed to her by a former connection. The same having been remitted to the Court of Session, it was there found, and decree accordingly pronounced by Lord Cunninghame, that said deed was illegal, and null and void; and granted warrant agreeably thereto for such being expunged from the public records and of none effect.—Edinburgh Evening Post.

Her Majesty's Attorney-General, Sir W. W. Follett, with his family, embarked on Saturday morning, at Blackwall pier, on board the General Steam Navigation Company's mail packet Giraffe, and landed on Sunday morning at Rotterdam.

STATE PUNISHMENTS.—The late Sir Francis Burdett was condemned to six months' imprisonment and a fine of 2,000*l.* for writing a letter to his constituents upon the Manchester massacre, as it was called. Henry Hunt, for agitating in the cause of radical reform, was imprisoned for two years and a half—Sir C. Wolsely, for a like offence, one year and a half—and Cobbett, for writing an article on flogging by German soldiers, passed two years in Newgate, and paid a fine of 1,000*l.* besides being bound in securities for seven years in the sum of 5,000*l.* The notorious Carlisle was subjected to three years' imprisonment, and fines amounting to 1,500*l.* for publishing his blasphemous writings; and Leigh Hunt had two years' imprisonment, and a fine of 1,000*l.* for a libel on the Prince Regent.

LUNACY COMMISSIONERS.—In the course of last week, two official gentlemen have been in this city, and have proceeded through North Wales for the purpose of instituting inquiries as to the state of pauper lunatics with the view of legislating efficiently upon the subject in the next session of Parliament. The Government is pledged to introduce a compulsory measure, to make due provision for their reception and treatment; and we are in possession of sufficient information to enable us to state, that those counties which have no public lunatic asylums, or have not united with any other counties for their erection, will find that they can no longer evade this pressing and palpable duty. The magistrates of Carmarthenshire, Merionethshire, and Montgomeryshire, had better be united with the other Welsh counties in erecting and supporting the projected Denbigh asylum, or they will find that they will be put to an expense of at least four times the amount of their contribution to the proposed institution.—Chester Chronicle.

OPEN COURTS.—In the Record Court at Lifford, while the case of Mulready v. Johnston was being tried, the judge perceived one of the sheriff's bailiffs rudely preventing a well-dressed gentleman from entering into the body of the court, and gave him a severe reprimand. Shortly after this a plain-looking countryman was essaying to enter the court, and one of the police used his baton violently in turning the peasant back from one of the entrance doors. His lordship, who saw the circumstance, called out to the sheriff to take the policeman in custody, and to bring him before the Court. The policeman pleaded as his apology the orders he had received from the sheriff, to prevent persons from crowding the seats. His lordship said he could not believe the sheriff had given such orders, and if it was the case, he was acting beyond his authority. That was a public court, and he would allow no man to use such violence to an unoffending person. "Sheriff, tell the officer of police to remove this constable from his present duty."—Derry Journal.

We hear from good authority that an application has been made to the Committee of Privileges in the House of Lords to restore the dormant title of the earldom of Levenax or Lennox. There are four claimants Lord Napier; Napier, of Napier; Lennox, of Woodhead; and Halkane, of Gleneglës. This is one of the most ancient titles in Scotland.—Scotch paper.

WILL OF LORD WALLACE.—The will and codicils of the Right Hon. Thomas Lord Wallace, late of Featherstone Castle, Northumberland, have just been proved in Doctors' Commons by Sir Charles Miles Lambert Monck, bart. E. W. Hassell, esq. and W. Nansom, esq. the executors. His lordship gives to Thomas Maclean, esq. and his wife, both of Carlisle, 5,000*l.* each, and legacies to various branches of his family, friends, executors, servants, and very many other persons whom it would be utterly impossible to specify. The following are the only parts of the will of public interest:—His lordship directs two busts of himself to be executed in marble by Mr. Campbell, the sculptor (from a cast taken by that gentleman), one of which is to be given to his executor, Sir Charles M. L. Monck, and the other deposited in Featherstone Castle and considered as an heirloom; all the plate and pictures in the castle are also to descend as heirlooms. He expresses a strong desire that this building may "never be unoccupied, but tenanted by those who have an interest in it." He observes that several parcels of jewellery will be found packed and addressed by himself to various parties, and earnestly desires his executors to forward them to the persons to whom they are addressed as soon after his death as may be. He also directs the interest of 100*l.* be paid yearly to a clergyman of the Church of England at Featherstone, who is "to read prayers once on every Sunday, and administer the sacrament at least four times in every year." The will is very long, and the personal property is sworn under 45,000*l.*—Britannia.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Finding that my former letter has brought on me the animadversions of some of your readers, I would, with your permission, confirm, by some additional arguments, the sentiments I have before expressed.

The nature of the Mosaic criminal law seems to be greatly misunderstood, as if it were adapted to a certain people, under certain circumstances, instead of to human nature, which is the same under all circumstances. A lawgiver does not need to be informed of the circumstances of a people before legislating on murder and theft. The enormity of those crimes is the same, whether in a heathen, a Jewish, or a Christian country, in the judgment of one whose moral perception is perfect; and if such a one should undertake the task of legislation, we should expect to find in his code a just estimate of crime. Now precisely such a perfect balance is given us in the Mosaic law, proceeding from One whose moral perception cannot be questioned. How far human legislators will follow this perfect model depends on their own tone of morality, which they make the standard of justice; never, however, abandoning the principle of making the law her voice. We distinguish in point of enormity between the crime of murder and other crimes to which the Mosaic law attaches an equal punishment, not because there is any real difference, but because our tone of morality is too relaxed to enable us to judge. It was the object of the Jewish law to maintain in that people a high moral tone; and as they receded from their high standing, their law became as much a dead letter to them as it is to us; so that when their rulers hinted at its revival, in the case of the woman taken in adultery, the very giver of that law rebuked their enormous hypocrisy. How monstrous would it be, in an age when respect for authority had so declined, to attempt to introduce the rigour of the divine law in the case of the determinedly rebellious son! None would be found who with a clear conscience could cast the first stone. The enormity of the rebellion, however, remains the same, and what has been condemned in the councils of heaven can never be purged of the taint because our gross perceptions cannot appreciate its blackness. In the case of murder, however, it is different, every one having sufficient moral feeling of its enormity. Consequently, the divine law has in this case been carried into execution in every age.

I do not think the abolitionists would contend that the murderer does not merit death, because they would thereby evince a less sound judgment than "the barbarous people" of Melita, who, when they saw the viper fasten on the apostle's hand, exclaimed, "No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live."

But if it is allowed that the murderer does merit death, why should not the law avow it? It is answered, "we ought to shew mercy." But mercy never yet disparaged justice: they are twin sisters, the one serving to set off the other. Mercy and benevolence become cant terms when justice is outraged. Our constitution has happily provided for the display of both, suffering the law to speak with all the severity of justice, and fixing in the Crown the prerogative of mercy as its chief garnishing stone. Nor is this prerogative in derogation of the general precept to Noah; for if Christianity recognizes the head of the state as "God's minister," to execute vengeance, reason teaches that, without the delegation of this prerogative, the deputy must necessarily misrepresent his sovereign, who is both just and merciful.

Let not those who advocate the abolition of capital punishment imagine for a moment that they are friends of mercy. The law must be a transcript of righteousness. When it ceases to award due punishment to the offence, it proclaims itself to be false; it confounds right and wrong; it ceases to be the voice of justice.

Unless the law doom the murderer to death, men will infer, not that the law is merciful, but that murder is not so black as it really is; and thus justice will be outraged, and mercy have no place. But while the law uncompromisingly stigmatizes every crime with its due mark of turpitude, there is no danger of mistake: justice is unsullied, and will ever remain so, even though mercy, through the prerogative, should step in, and arrest the descent of her sword.

I do not think it has been sufficiently considered what an outrage would be inflicted on the Crown by plucking from it this its fairest jewel. They extol mercy, and yet would tear her from her proper pedestal. They propose to merge her in the law, the effect of which would be to make the law a lie. Existing and acting separately, justice and mercy reflect glory on each other, but their unnatural amalgamation would produce a monster destructive to morality and truth. Where would then be found that glorious virgin, with her stern but majestic countenance, holding her scales in one hand and her sword in the other? Truly might it then be said—"Terras Astræa reliquit."

It is true, that, under this dispensation, the divine mercy has been eminently displayed; but has there not also been a fuller revelation of God's wrath against all unrighteousness? Where shall we find a sterner vindication of justice than in the case of Ananias and Sapphira? Did not "the divine Man of Judæa," whose merciful spirit your correspondent so justly extols, so far from mitigating the rigour of the law, offer unto it the highest homage and noblest sacrifice, when He for us submitted to the stroke of its sword? and are we not taught to believe that, having presented such a terrible exhibition of holiness, he will come again to execute the rigorous sentence of the law on all who shall continue to violate it?

It is not meant to insist that earthly sovereigns are God's vicegerents, and, as such, intrusted with the administration of his law, except so far as the end of human government, which is the protection of their people, is concerned; but, within this limit, they must, in the administration of that law, have an eye solely to their duty, and not to any thing extraneous. The civil power has not to adjudicate on the final state of offenders, but to execute the temporal sentence of death on those whose lives are incompatible with the public safety. If their time of probation is thus cut short, it is by their own act, and quite accordantly with the declaration—"Bloody men shall not live out half their days." It is the duty of a sovereign to protect his people from hostile invasion. Is he chargeable with cutting short the days of those who perish in their aggressive attempt? Would he not justly regard as a traitor one of his own officers, who should refuse to do his duty on the plea of consideration for the eternal welfare of his foes?

The demoralizing tendency of public executions is a sound argument for making them private, but is most illogically urged in favour of abolition.

It is now time to bring this letter to a close; and having, as I hope, strengthened the principles laid down in my former letter, and replied to the main arguments of your correspondents, I finally take leave of the subject with the expression of my acknowledgments for your candour, and assurances to your correspondents that I have not intentionally said any thing to hurt the feelings of well-meaning and worthy men. Should the subject be further discussed, I leave the advocacy of the views I have adopted to other and abler pens.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.
William Gills, jun.

STAMPS ON MORTGAGE TRANSFERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—The correspondence lately published in the Law Times, relating to this subject, has doubtless been highly useful to many of your readers, but it is not yet quite cleared of its mystification, and a few remarks in reference to the principles of the several Acts of Parliament imposing the duties may not be altogether useless.

I apprehend that, where an Act of Parliament imposes an ad valorem duty, in respect of a money consideration paid by one party to another, that such ad valorem supersedes, in every case, the necessity of a "common deed-stamp" (as such) upon the same instrument; and all matters incident to the transaction—recitals, covenants, and assignments of outstanding terms, if required—may be effected by one instrument, without any other than the requisite ad valorem stamp (although that may amount to 20s. only), if the instrument is under thirty folios in length. This I take to be the principle of all Acts imposing ad valorem duties. But if other instruments are necessary in order to effect the object intended, for instance, if the fee-simple of the estate has to be conveyed from A to B (the grantor having no power to convey by appointment), the stamp imposed on a bargain and sale for a year, for the purpose of vesting the possession, will of course be incurred, in addition to the ad valorem on the pecuniary consideration passing between the parties. If this be the fair construction to be put on the Acts of Parliament, no instrument can require a common deed-stamp (as it is called) of 35s. but such as is not liable to any other kind of stamp, or is "not otherwise charged," as the Act expresses it. Now, in the case of Brown v. Pegy, the fee-simple of the estate was conveyed by an appointment under a power; therefore no lease for a year was necessary, and why a common deed-stamp (or transfer-stamp) should have been necessary in that case, I really cannot comprehend; and if any of your readers will be kind enough to inform me, I shall esteem it a great favour.

If a man, having a general power of appointment over his estate, appoints to A for 1,000 years for securing 500*l*. and B afterwards agrees to lend him 600*l*. to pay off A, and for other purposes, a deed of "transfer and further charge" must be made, and we will suppose that by such deed the mortgagor appoints the estate to the use of B in fee (subject, of course, to the usual proviso for reconveyance), and that A's term is assigned, either to merge or to a trustee for B, and to attend the inheritance, adding the usual covenants. Now this deed, I apprehend, will be subject to an ad valorem mortgage-stamp for 100*l*. that is 1*l*. 10*s*. and to that only. Surely it cannot be said that it must have a "common deed-stamp" as well, because the fee is appointed, instead of a term, for years only? If it is, pray let me ask whether a power of sale is a "further security," and whether a term of one thousand years is a "further security," if the first term be made for 500 years only? I have always considered the ordinary duty of 35s. imposed by the 3rd section of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 117, to apply to instruments made simply for "further security," and not to any kind of deed charged with an ad valorem duty; and this I still think is the true meaning and intent of that clause, but hope that some of your more learned readers will correct me, if I am wrong. I am, Sir, yours obediently,

Edw. Argles.

STAMPS ON TRANSFERS OF MORTGAGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I have read the sensible letters of Mr. Barnett, and your aged correspondent, and beg to propose the following question for solution:—

A mortgages to B, for a term, to secure 200*l*. By a subsequent deed between B of the first part, A of the second part, C of the third part, and D of the fourth part, B, in consideration of 200*l*. paid by C, assigns to C the mortgage debt, with power to sue in B's name; and B assigns, and A confirms to C, the mortgaged premises for the remainder of the term, subject to the existing equity of redemption; and then, in consideration of the further sum of 100*l*. then lent by C to A, A, by direction of C, conveys the mortgaged premises to D, in fee, subject to the prior mortgage, and to redemption on payment of 100*l*., and to a power of sale in default of payment, with a covenant by A with C for payment of the 100*l*. only—what is the proper stamp for this deed?

It will be observed that the fee is conveyed to secure the new debt only—and there is no fresh covenant for payment of the old debt. For all practical purposes, however, the fee would become a security for the old debt, because equity would not suffer the mortgagor after the day, to redeem by paying one debt without the other; but that would arise from the rules of the court, and not from the stipulations of the deed. It is admitted, on the authority of Bartley v. Gray that the transfer duty is not necessary, and the clause imposing the duty on further securities requires the deed to be made as a further security for a debt already secured. Clearly this deed is not made for any such purpose. I apprehend, therefore, that only an ad valorem stamp on 100*l*. is required.

It should seem on the authority of Doe dem. Jarman v. Larder, that the stamp would be the same although the deed contained a covenant by the mortgagor with the new mortgagee for the payment of the whole debt.

Should the form before stated be free from the 35s. duty, there will be no difficulty, in future cases, in evading the force of Brown v. Pegg.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

J. R.

ACQUITTED PRISONERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

5, Basinghall-street, 6th August, 1844.

Sir,—It appears to me that the writer of the leading article in the Law Times of Saturday last has overlooked the Act 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 39—it has a provision for supplying discharged prisoners with the means of returning to any place of employment; and 5 Geo. 4, c. 85, s. 22, makes further provision.

I remain yours obediently,
Geo. W. K. Potter.

Note.—Our leading article referred to the case of prisoners acquitted. The above statutes provide only for prisoners who have undergone their punishment.—Ed. Law Times.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

A correspondent, who signs his communication "Pous," writes as follows:—

In your paper of the 20th inst. there is a letter from Mr. Argles referring to the certificate of chargeability of a pauper, and that as the certificate only goes as evidence of the chargeability to the day of its date, he wonders that he cannot find in any reported case that an objection has been taken as to the sufficiency of the document. For my own part, I should wonder very much if any professional gentleman, making an order of removal, would allow the chance of such an objection to be taken, for the certificate bears its own evidence on the face of it that it only refers to the day it is issued: it cannot do more, the other usual evidence of the overseer or relieving officer cannot be dispensed with, as to the evidence of relief, to the day of the date of the removal order. It never was intended that the certificate should supersede such evidence. But the intent of it was, in the mixed accounts of a union, to prove by a proper legal document to what parish the pauper named in the certificate was actually chargeable. It is, generally speaking, a useless, and might be a dangerous document. I never make use of it for the purpose of a removal order, but rely upon a proper statement of one of the overseers or relieving officer as to the evidence of relief. The danger of using such evidence of relief as contained in the certificate is shewn by the case of Reg. v. Inhabitants of Farthinghoe. And, from the very nature of such an objection as was taken in this case, your correspondent might rely that his point would not be overlooked if an opportunity offered.

"An Attorney" has sent us the following serious and just complaint:—

I beg to call the attention of your readers to a gross breach of the Act 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, and also of an immense interference with our privileges as attorneys and solicitors by certain persons who call themselves accountants, but who, in fact, usurp our duties in winding up the estates of insolvent persons.

They keep a number of travellers, who are constantly employed in running about the country. They first of all go to the debtor, and produce an assignment duly prepared for execution, they get the poor debtor to execute it (they carry about a lot of these assignments in blank), they then take possession of his goods and effects, sell the same, pay themselves, and then divide the surplus amongst the creditors. When the matter does not run exactly smooth, or a creditor puts in or is about to put in an execution, they serve notices of an act of bankruptcy, &c. This is an abominable interference, and one which I trust the Profession will, to a man, at once discountenance and put down.

Two cases have just come to my knowledge, and which, but for these accountants, would have passed into my own hands as an attorney; in one of them, a very small estate indeed, the accountant's bill, which I have just seen, was 14*l*. 2*s*.!!!

I will cordially co-operate with any gentleman in putting a stop to this nuisance.

A correspondent at Broadway thus complains of the following Professional Malpractice:—

It is highly gratifying to every honourable man to find that, by your talented publication, you are endeavouring, and, I trust, not in vain, to restore the profession of the law to that position it once held, by exposing the conduct of those who are and have been so long disgracing it unnoticed.

It may, perhaps, be not altogether useless, if, through your columns, the ungentlemanly, and certainly unprofessional conduct of some of the country practitioners in this vicinity be made known; and I trust it may ere long be checked and altogether given up, or I do not see how an honest and fair member of our profession can depend on his clients or connection for support.

The facts of a case that has just occurred, bearing on this point, I will briefly state. A client of mine, holding the title-deeds of premises in mortgage to him, and which mortgage I had prepared, was called upon by an attorney's clerk, who requested my client would have the kindness to shew him the title-deeds of the property in mortgage, in order to see if his client could purchase a part of the premises—in short, to ascertain if it was all held by one title. Incautiously, my client, being anxious to oblige, produced the title-deeds to the clerk, who at once took from his pocket a quire of draft-paper, and commenced drawing an abstract of the title, which occupied him from nine in the morning till eight at night, although at first he said it would not require an hour's inspection!! However, twenty full sheets of draft abstract were very quietly and slily completed, with no other interruption than the hospitality which my client afforded the scribe during his hard day's work. I shall make no comment on such conduct as this; I fear it is too general in rural districts, where people are not aware of the etiquette of the Profession; nor do many of the farmers know whose duty it is to prepare the mortgage or the abstract of title.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 10, 1844.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

PERHAPS it is necessary again to state the arrangements by which full compensation is made to subscribers for any excess of pages the advertisements may chance to occupy beyond the two leaves regularly retained for them. Be it then understood, that a strict account is kept of all trespasses upon the reader's territory, and that as soon as he has been deprived of twelve pages, they are deemed a debt due to him, and will be paid in the shape of a gratuitous supplement of equal size. By this plan, without in the least curtailing the subscriber's supply, we are enabled to afford to advertisers any space that may be required for their announcements, and thus the interests of one are prevented from trenching upon those of the other, and abundant room is preserved for both.

The LAW TIMES is now indebted to its readers in seven pages, and a supplement will soon be due. Indeed, we should not have the slightest objection to give one monthly, or even weekly, should the LAW TIMES be adopted, as it is like to be, as the medium for the circulation of all the sales of property throughout the United Kingdom Last week contained a fair promise that such an honour will ultimately be conferred upon it, and therefore it is that we hasten to assure the subscribers that no number of advertisements shall deprive them of a single line of the space to which they are entitled, for supplements will be given to them, without charge, to the full extent of any excess of advertisements beyond the two outside leaves regularly appropriated to them.

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

THE Staffordshire Advertiser, of Saturday last, reports the following scene at the Stafford Assizes, before Mr. Serjeant Atcherley. We cannot gather from it more than that something very wrong was done by somebody, but we are unable satisfactorily to ascertain the real culprit, so as to administer the lash with the rigour the offence deserves. We submit the case to the consideration of the Profession.

A prisoner was put into the dock and then the following scene occurred :—

When the case was called on, Neale said he held a brief for the prosecution in this case, and he understood his friend Mr. Owen also held a brief for the prosecution, and he should like to know who had instructed his learned friend.

Owen said the brief he held bore the names of "Roberts, Collis, and Corser," who, he understood, were respectable solicitors practising at Stourbridge, in the neighbourhood where the offence was alleged to have been committed: and he also should be glad to know by whom his friend Mr. Neale had been instructed. (A laugh.)

Neale said the name of Mr. Gilbert Brown was on his brief.

His LORDSHIP asked who was the prosecutor; and on being told his name was James Taylor, he ordered him to be called. On his appearing, his Lordship asked him what attorney he had employed? At first he said Meikle, but on being told he was the police officer, he said he had employed no attorney.

His LORDSHIP.—Do you know Mr. Gilbert Brown?

Witness.—No, my lord.

His LORDSHIP.—Do you know Mr. Thomas Whalley?

Witness.—Yes; I saw him at the hall-door on Saturday morning. I had never seen him before. He said, "I understand you have a case to be tried; have you employed a lawyer?" I replied, "No." He then said, "You can't do it without a lawyer; I shall be very glad to do it for you, and it won't cost you a ha'penny." He then asked me to go to the office with him, and he would try to get the deposition, and I might stop a week. He asked me if I could write. I told him I could not. He wrote a paper, and I put my mark to it, as he said he could not do it without a paper. He did not read it to me, and I did not understand it.

By the JUDGE (to Whalley).—Pray, sir, who are you?

Whalley.—I am clerk to Mr. Gilbert Brown.

By the JUDGE.—Where is he?

Whalley.—He is in the town. I was at the inn where the prosecutor was stopping, and was told he had an important case to bring on. I saw him at the door of the Hall, and asked him if he had any solicitor. I thought it was necessary he should have one. He said he did not understand the thing; but he gave me a retainer, which he signed, and I do not know whether I read the retainer over to him. I understand there were two solicitors named Corser, one prosecuting and one defending the case.

By the JUDGE.—You did it for the public good?

Whalley.—Yes.

By the JUDGE.—To prevent collusion?

Whalley.—I did.

Allen, who appeared for the prisoner, informed his lordship that the Mr. Collis who appeared on the brief for the prosecution lived at Stourbridge, and the Mr. Collis who was for the defence lived at Cannock, thirty miles distant from the former place.

His LORDSHIP observed, that neither of the gentlemen who appeared as counsel in the case could have known any thing of the proceeding; yet, under the circumstances, he thought Mr Owen ought to conduct the prosecution; and he hoped an inquiry would be made in another way.

His LORDSHIP having asked for and read the retainer, asked Whalley if it was in his handwriting.

Whalley.—It is, my lord.

His LORDSHIP.—Then you ought to be ashamed of yourself. It is a disgrace to the profession, and I hope somebody will take further notice of it. I am very glad it has arisen. With respect to the two gentlemen of the Bar, nothing can be charged upon them; and in bringing the matter before the public, they have done very properly. With respect to the part Mr. Whalley has taken, I hope it will be taken up in another quarter.

The case was then allowed to proceed, Mr. Owen conducting the prosecution, and Mr. Allen defending the prisoner.

LECTURES ON MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

By ALFRED S. TAYLOR.

Delivered at Guy's Hospital, 1844.

LECTURE I.

GENTLEMEN,—We now commence a course of lectures on medical jurisprudence, and, considering the short space of time allotted to these lectures, it would be an useless and unprofitable occupation of your time to detain you with any introductory remarks upon the utility of this subject as a branch of medical study, more especially as its vast usefulness is now so well understood and so universally recognized. What is the meaning of the term medical jurisprudence? By medical jurisprudence, or, as it has been sometimes called, forensic, or legal medicine, we are to understand that science which teaches the application of every branch of medical knowledge to the purposes of the law. These terms, although they are indiscriminately used, are not quite synonymous. Forensic medicine applies only to that branch of science which teaches the application of medical evidence to legal cases; but medical jurisprudence has a far more extensive and important signification, for it embraces the application of the whole range of medical science to the purposes of the law and legislation. Viewing the science in so comprehensive a light as this—and that it is a subject which cannot be circumscribed within narrower and more definite limits, I think I shall be able to establish fully in this course of lectures—it is a circumstance exciting some wonder that, as a branch of medical education, it has not been regarded with a consideration commensurate with its importance. In the lectures on medicine and surgery, the whole object of the teachers at the hospitals and medical schools of this country is directed to the diagnosis and treatment of disease in the living, while medical jurisprudence is entirely abandoned as being a matter, it is considered, which has reference only to the dead. It must be remembered that a medical man is sometimes called upon to determine whether the cause of death in a particular case is natural or violent; and for this purpose it becomes necessary for him to make an entirely new application of his professional knowledge. I know it is a difficult task to make a selection of all those cases which tend to develope the subject, and it has been asserted that such a subject cannot be taught by a course of lectures: it is true, that lectures upon this subject cannot adequately supply the place of practical experience, but oral teaching, it must be admitted, induces many to think, to reflect and observe for themselves, and a medical man may thus become acquainted with facts in medical jurisprudence which he has never before heard of, from the circumscribed nature of his professional acquirements; and then it is that he is called upon to exercise the power of comparing the inferences drawn from particular facts with those that develope themselves in practice under the same circumstances. The object of the lecturer on medical jurisprudence should be to shew what has been done, and to point out the course to be pursued in all future cases. This is all that can be accomplished by oral teaching, but it is not to be supposed that this can take the place of actual observation.

Many members of the profession have been disposed to think the subject of medical jurisprudence quite unnecessary as a branch of medical study; but let me remind you, that there are few who have been long engaged in practice who have not found themselves placed in a situation of difficulty by the accidental occurrence of cases demanding legal investigation. Let us suppose, for instance, that a practitioner is called in to attend a person labouring under the effects of poison, and that, in spite of the treatment by the medical man, death ensues. Now here the functions of a medical man assume their widest application. It is impossible for an ignorant man to escape the shame and mortification which would be the unavoidable consequence of his want of knowledge when called upon to give his evidence upon many of those cases which, at the assizes throughout the country, demand from medical men the solution of questions which they alone, from their professional knowledge, are supposed to be capable of answering. Every question put by counsel relative to the general effects of poison in certain quantities, is put for the purpose of testing the extent of the knowledge of the medical witness. It may be objected, that the deceased did not die from the effects of the poison alleged to have been administered; in which case the examination will lead to an inquiry into the diseases that resemble the effects of poison—the post mortem appearances—the means of marking the diagnosis, and the chemical processes for the reduction of the poison. These are all matters which he will be expected to be acquainted with. Or, on the other hand, the case may be one in which a medical practitioner is called upon to assist in determining the cause of the death of a wounded person, and he must here be prepared to answer numerous questions, and state the precise character of a particular wound inflicted on the body, and what appearances it would present soon after death, —by what the wound was inflicted?—was it by design, or did it occur accidentally?—could the individual have moved after the infliction of the wound? and are certain stains found on the clothes of the accused marks of effused blood? These are the questions which the practitioner is often called upon to answer, and unless they are properly answered, when public necessity occurs, a guilty man may escape punishment, and an innocent man may be convicted. The character of the medical witness, too, is involved in his capability to answer these questions, for if he display ignorance upon these points, whatever may be his qualifications in other respects as a surgeon, they will not shelter him, under these circumstances, from universal reprobation. All his qualifications are overlooked in his ignorance of the subject of legal medicine.

The cases that call for the performance of those duties required at the hands of a medical jurist are of accidental occurrence; the practitioner may be living at a most remote corner of the kingdom, and he may be suddenly required to make his appearance at a trial; under these circumstances, it is scarcely possible that he can avoid exposing himself to public disgrace, if, in answer to the question "Have you ever attended to or thought of this subject?" he is compelled to answer in the negative.

I have endeavoured to avoid overdrawing these facts, but their truth is recognized by all those engaged in practice. In our courts of law, many of those lamentable exposures which have frequently taken place might have been avoided if the witnesses had availed themselves of the opportunities afforded them of applying their knowledge, and had been guided by the principles of medical jurisprudence. These remarks are not, of course, applicable to those who have given a previous attention to the subject, and honourably is their position contrasted with that of those to whom these observations are particularly addressed. If one circumstance more than another would shew how important it is for a medical practitioner to be properly qualified to meet the various emergencies in which he may be placed, it would be the fact, that of late years lawyers have acquired a great deal of medical knowledge, and that in the numerous cases of child murder, and poisoning, and other causes of death that have come before our courts of law, the barristers engaged on the trials have displayed a complete mastery of the use of technical terms. The counsel engaged in criminal cases are well acquainted with the works of Christison, Beck, and other standard medical works, which they use with remarkable accuracy and acuteness, and he must be a clever witness who is able, in cross-examination, to compete with the medical knowledge thus often acquired by the examiner.

A remarkable trial took place in the spring of 1843 (the case of The Queen v. Mary Hunter), in which the medical witnesses were examined very closely by the counsel as to the effects of poison on the human body; and this case shews very clearly that it must not be supposed that a witness can always escape the searching questions of the bar and the bench. As this trial presents some points of considerable interest, I will repeat some of it, in order to shew what kind of examination a medical witness has now to go through. In this case, the prisoner was accused of having poisoned her husband, and the circumstantial evidence was very strong against her. The symptoms during life, and the post mortem appearances found on the body of the deceased, bore a very strong presumption that death had taken place by poison; yet, after a most careful examination of the body, no trace of arsenic could be found. The chemical evidence in this case is very important, and shews that the judges are very unwilling to act upon such evidence as was there adduced. Mr. Baron Parke examined Mr. Dyson, a surgeon; and criticized his answers very severely. The witness was asked how it was that arsenic was not present in the body of the deceased, and he answered that question by saying, "The absence of arsenic may be accounted for by its having been evacuated by vomiting or purging, or by its having been absorbed into the system. I think it might be thus got rid of in three days and nights. It might have required a week or two, or more, to carry off all traces from the flesh."

"Parke, B.—If a piece of flesh were cut off, supposing arsenic to have been absorbed, could it not be discovered by submitting the flesh to chemical analysis?

"Witness.—The French chemists have discovered it in flesh, but I was not aware of it when I made the examination.

"By Wilkins. The arsenic might have been carried off by insensible perspiration, and other means in progress for its elimination, in the course of two or three days.

"Parke, B.—Do you mean to say that all traces of arsenic would be likely to be carried away, if taken at six o'clock on Friday night, if the person died on Monday morning?

"Witness.—All from the stomach and bowels.

"Parke, B. But from the flesh?

"Witness.—I cannot tell.

"Parke, B.—Was the flesh examined?

"Witness.—No, my lord.

"By Wilkins.—I have read Christison and Orfila, and my reading as well as my experience confirms these opinions."

Then he was further questioned on these points, and said—

"Arsenic is soluble to the extent of 77 parts in 1,000 of hot water. I account for its disappearance from its having been given in solution. In the six cases I have examined arsenic was found, but in every case the arsenic was given in substance; the quantity varied from a quarter of an ounce to an ounce. Thirty grains would be enough to kill an adult.

"Pollock.—But how much of thirty grains would six or seven spoonfuls of milk-porridge dissolve?

"Witness.—The whole of it.

"Pollock.—Dissolve, not suspend?

"Witness.—It will, if hot, dissolve as much more; it will dissolve as much again in hot as in cold milk. I take the data of chemists. The medicines given (it appears carbonate of potash and carbonate of ammonia had been given) would promote its removal, by rendering the arsenic more soluble by forming arsenite of potash and ammonia.

"Pollock.—But would they have that effect if given with lemon juice?

"Witness.—It would depend on the affinity of the acids for the alkalies?

"Pollock.—And which has the stronger affinity?

"Witness.—I do not know. There was destruction of the mucous coat of those parts which natural disease seldom affects. The jejunum is rarely affected in natural disease; in this case it was much affected; there was softening of the mucous membrane. Inflammatory patches might occur from natural disease in the stomach, but not in the jejunum. The extent of the diseased appearances depends upon the time of death from the time of taking the poison; when life is protracted, arsenic produces more extensive local effects than natural disease. I noticed the spots of extravasated blood at the inspection, and would have mentioned them at the inquest, but was requested not to give the particulars; they are mentioned in the report within a week after the inspection.

"Parke, B.—Not written at the time?

"Witness.—No, my lord; a week after. Arsenic boiled in milk does not perceptibly alter its taste. It has not an acrid taste in the mouth, but if swallowed, as soon as it passed the gullet a sense of heat would be felt."

Then a lecturer on chemistry is called to give his analysis, and he said—"After a most accurate investigation, having subjected the contents of the stomach and the intestines, both separately and conjointly, not only to four or five different tests, but also applied those expedients for the reduction of the metal which would be decisive that the metal had been present, I found no poison whatever. There were no traces of arsenic whatever. I applied the sulphurated-hydrogen test, nitrate of silver, Marsh's test, and the reduction by the black flux. I did not find any powder at all. I did not find any thing in the porridge. Alkalies and carbonated alkalies will dissolve arsenic in the stomach. I do not know of such a case from my own knowledge, but from the highest authority I know some striking cases." Then he is cross-examined, and says, "I can hardly say what is the smallest portion of arsenic I could have discovered; but I could discover one part in one hundred thousand parts, and think it probable in several hundred thousand parts could have discovered a very small portion of a grain, had it been present. I think if any had been present I could have discovered it. I have a high opinion of Marsh's test, which I tried. Much smaller than the ten-thousandth part of a grain would be visible by that test, and I know from the testimony of a distinguished chemist that one millionth part of a grain has been rendered visible."

You see here the peculiarity of the answer, that smaller than the ten-thousandth, and even the millionth, part of a grain would be visible by Marsh's test. Now here, unfortunately, the evidence of the witness was misunderstood, for the judge interpreted the answer as signifying that the one-millionth part of a grain might be readily detected, whereas the witness merely said that so small a quantity might be rendered visible. It is certain that you may render visible a quantity considerably less than the millionth part of a grain of arsenic, but it does not follow that we should be able to procure chemical evidence of the presence of the poison where so minute a proportion is present. If not more than the millionth of a grain of arsenic were contained in a liquid, it is probable that Marsh's test would give no sublimate whatever. At a subsequent part of the trial, the judge asked the following question of another witness: "Would the absorption so clearly remove the arsenic that it would be impossible to discover the one-millionth part of a grain?" and the answer was, "I think the arsenic might be completely removed."

Now, chiefly in consequence of this want of chemical evidence, the prisoner was acquitted; there was considerable ingenuity displayed in the defence, which was, that disease might have accounted for the symptoms, and also the post mortem appearances.

There was another very interesting case that came last winter before the Court of Justiciary at Edinburgh—the case of Mrs. Gilmour, charged with poisoning her husband, in which the examination turned upon the applicability of a certain test brought into England very lately, for discovering a very minute quantity of the poison by reduction to the metallic state (Reinsch's test). I mention these facts to shew that lawyers, barristers, and judges are quite aware of the progress of medical knowledge, and that that witness must be in an unfortunate position who is obliged to confess himself less informed on such subjects than those who do not belong to his profession.

It has been already stated that medical jurisprudence consists in a selection of facts and the proper application of medical facts to the solution of any given legal question. It is, as will be readily inferred, a science of considerable extent, embracing in its scope anatomy, surgery, medicine, pathology, chemistry, botany, and other sciences, in fact, we might bring in every science. The materials which make up the knowledge required by a medical jurist to enable him to answer satisfactorily the questions which may be put to him in his professional character, are to be found scattered through all sciences, and it is therefore necessary that he should have an average knowledge, not merely of his own individual profession, but of those subjects which are collateral to it, and fall under the peculiar province of medical jurisprudence. This kind of knowledge the lawyer has to acquire; and how much more incumbent is it, therefore, upon the medical man to acquire it. The science of medical jurisprudence must be based upon other sciences, the facts and principles of which must be assorted, selected, and moulded into shape before they can be applied to any given purpose. The celebrated John Hunter, who stood at the head of his profession,—none exceeded him in industry and experience,—yet this great man, when called upon to give some evidence at a trial in 1782, was obliged to confess himself unable to give any satisfactory answers to the questions put to him. I refer to the case of Captain Donellan, who was convicted and executed for the murder of Sir T. Baughton, and with regard to whom, at the present time, an opinion prevails among some that he was improperly executed. In the time of John Hunter medical jurisprudence was unknown, though something analogous to it was required to fit a man to act as a witness in a court of law.

The first professorship of medical jurisprudence was founded about forty years ago at Edinburgh, but it is only within the last fifteen years that it has received any share of public attention in this country, and even now, in the profession, there are many who are quite unable to give a definition of it, or to state its objects. The subject has received a far greater attention in the public institutions and universities on the continent than it has in England. In determining the order in which to bring this subject before you, I have considered it best to take, first of all, those cases that are of daily and almost hourly occurrence, leaving those subjects which are of less importance to be considered when we have disposed of those which have the strongest claims on our attention. No particular classification of the cases can be adopted, but they will come before us in the order of their importance: murder by poisoning and by wounding, manslaughter and child murder, constitute the majority of the cases that come before the tribunals of this country, and those are the subjects to which the student should first apply himself. I propose to commence with the subject of poisoning. As a sort of guide I have drawn up a table of the average number of medico-legal cases of accident, suicide, or homicide, which will be found to be tolerably near the truth. Taking 100 cases in which medical evidence is required, they will be found to be in about the following proportions:—

Poisoning	45
Wounds and personal injuries	35
Infanticide	10
All other cases	10
	100

With regard to the frequency of such cases, the following table is taken from the Parliamentary Reports, made in 1834, and shew that medico-legal cases are very numerous, and that they vary in the following proportions in the United Kingdom:—

England and Wales	473
Scotland	46
Ireland	694

Probably no crime is so frequent as that of poisoning, and there is none which requires from a witness so wide an acquaintance with the various branches of medical study. Anatomy, chemistry, pathology, and medicine are here absolutely demanded. It is on these sciences that what is called toxicology is based. There is great reason to suspect that, in spite of the many improvements that have lately taken place in toxicology, the crime of poisoning is much more frequent than it is supposed to be; and, under the present mode of conducting coroners' inquests, allowing the inspection of the body to be made by those who are often incompetent to determine the real cause of death, it is probable that many of those cases in which the juries by their verdicts pronounce the deaths to arise from natural causes, are really deaths by poisoning. This may partly arise from the occasional difficulty of detecting cases of poisoning. The symptoms are commonly so clear, that it may be said a post mortem examination is not always required; but there should be an inspection in every case in which an inquisition is held, otherwise the determination of the real cause of death is extremely doubtful. The great error of the present system is, that an inspection of the body is not ordered until there is suspicion; whereas a careful inspection of the body itself would in very many cases lead to a suspicion, which might otherwise never be entertained. This is no exaggerated statement, when we consider the frequent exhumations of the dead which take place after the lapse of weeks, and, in some cases, even of years, and, on inspection, poison has been found in the body of the deceased, though at the inquest, in every case, the verdict may have been one of "death from natural causes." There was a remarkable case of poisoning at the Lancaster assizes in 1843, where a woman was tried upon a charge of murder by poisoning; she was tried upon one charge, but it came out in the evidence that the woman had murdered several children in succession—six of her own children, one after another, and then poisoned her husband. With regard to the children, she murdered them for the horrid purpose of obtaining the burial-money.* Now in these cases inquests had been held; but had the first case been examined properly, the rest might have escaped with their lives. We hear it continually said that inquests should not be held unless there be suspicion existing. I do not mean to say that every dead body is to be examined on the spot; my meaning is this, that every dead body that really requires a coroner's inquest to be held, requires it to be conducted in a proper and strict manner, with a real endeavour to ascertain the cause of death by a medical inspection.

It is difficult to arrive at an exact knowledge of the number of deaths that take place annually in the United Kingdom in which poisoning is the cause, but they cannot be less than from 300 to 400. In 1837-38, a printed return was laid before Parliament, from all the coroners in England and Wales, of the inquests held in these years upon individuals whose deaths had been caused by poison; it is as follows:—

Opium:—
Laudanum	134
Opium	42
Other preparations	21	196
Arsenic		185
Sulphuric acid		32
Prussic acid		27
Oxalic acid		19
Corrosive sublimate and mercury		15
Mixed or compound poisoning		14
Oil of bitter almonds		4
Poisonous mushrooms		4
Colchicum, nux vomica (of each 3)		6
Nitric acid, caustic alkali, tartar emetic, acetate of morphia, strichnia, deadly nightshade, aconite (of each 2)		14
Bichromate of potash, nitrate of silver, Goulard's extract, sulph. iron, mur. tin, hellebore, castor oil seeds, savin, hemlock, cantharides, cayenne pepper (of each 1)		11
		527
		541

But this does not include the cases of attempted poisoning, in which the individuals have recovered. This is the first authentic table that gives us any account of the relative number of deaths from poison; and by this return it will be seen that the greater number of deaths, which have been chiefly among children and young persons, have been from opium; arsenic comes next in frequency as a criminal cause of death.

BEST ON PRESUMPTIONS OF LAW AND FACT.

The next class of presumptions is that of conflicting presumptions, a subject almost entirely neglected by writers on English law, but which the civilians have defined by several rules, such as—

I. That special presumptions take precedence of general ones, founded on the principle that, as all general inferences are rebuttable by positive evidence, they will naturally be affected by that which comes the nearest to direct proof.

II. Presumptions derived from the ordinary course of nature are stronger than casual presumptions; a rule, the reason of which is obvious.

III. Presumptions are favoured which tend to give validity to acts; such as the presumption of appointment to an office from the fact of the party acting as such officer.

IV. The presumption of innocence is favoured in law. This is illustrated by the case of R. v. The Inhabitants of Twyning (2 B. & Ald. 386),

"Which is certainly one of the leading authorities on the subject of conflicting presumptions: it appeared by a case sent up from the sessions that the wife of a person, who enlisted and went abroad as a soldier, and was never afterwards heard of, had married in a little more than twelve months after his departure. On this evidence the Court of Queen's Bench, consisting of Bayley and Best, JJ. held that the issue of the second marriage ought to be presumed legitimate; and the former learned judge observes, 'This is a case of conflicting presumptions, and the question is, which is to prevail? The law presumes the continuance of life [for seven years]; but it also presumes against the commission of crime, and that even in civil cases, until the contrary be proved. Are we to presume that the first husband was alive? If the female had been indicted for bigamy, the evidence would clearly not be sufficient. In that case the first husband must have been proved to have been alive at the time of the second marriage. It is contended that his death ought to have been proved; but the answer is, that the presumption of law is, that he was not alive, when the consequence of his being so is that another person has committed a criminal act. I think, therefore, that the sessions decided right in holding the second marriage to have been valid, unless proof had been given that the first husband was alive at the time.'"

We now come to

PART II.

On particular Presumptions of Law and Fact.

I. The subjects of the law are presumed to be acquainted with the law.

II. It is a præsumptio juris, running through the whole law of England, that no person shall, in the absence of criminative proof, be supposed to have committed any violation of the law.

III. No presumption will arise against the plaintiff's demand in civil cases; but where the case is left in such a state that it is necessary to presume one way or the other, the law will rather assist by its presumption the party entitled to exact the proof, than the party on whom it is incumbent to give it. And it is a branch of this rule, that doubtful instruments or acts shall, if possible, be construed so as to have a lawful meaning.

IV. All persons are presumed to have duly discharged any duty imposed on them either by the written or unwritten law.

V. It is a principle of law, that "Odiosa et inhonesta non sunt in lege præsumenda." Therefore fraud is never presumed, and legitimacy is always so, and so forth

VI. Cruel, oppressive, or tortious conduct will not be presumed.

VII. Neither will want of religious belief or irreligious conduct.

The next presumption that claims notice is that embodied in the important maxim, "Omnia præsumuntur ritè esse acta." On this Mr. BEST remarks:—

"The important maxim which stands at the head of this chapter must not be understood as of universal application.(a) The extent to which courts of justice will presume in support of acts depends very much on whether they are favoured or not by law, and also on the nature of the fact required to be presumed. The true principle intended to be conveyed by the rule 'omnia præsumuntur ritè esse acta,' seems to be, that there is a general disposition in courts of justice to uphold judicial and other acts, rather than to render them inoperative, and with this view,—where there is general evidence of acts having been legally and regularly done, to dispense with proof of circumstances, strictly speaking, essential to the validity of those acts, and by which they were probably accompanied in most instances, although in others the assumption may rest on grounds of public policy.

"General view of the subject.—Taking a general view of the subject, the acts or things thus presumed are divisible into three classes. 1. Where, from the existence of a posterior act or acts in a supposed chain of events, the existence of prior acts in the chain are inferred or assumed,—ubi priora præsumuntur à posterioribus,(b)—as where a prescriptive right or grant is inferred from modern enjoyment. 2. Where the existence of the posterior act is inferred from that of prior acts; as where the sealing and delivery of a deed purporting to be signed, sealed, and delivered are inferred on proof of the signing only —præsumuntur posteriora à prioribus.(b) This is manifestly the converse of the former, and, as a general rule, the presumption is much weaker.(c) 3. Where intermediate proceedings are presumed — 'probatis extremis præsumuntur media,' (d)—as where livery of seisin is presumed on proof of a feoffment, and twenty years' enjoyment under it; (e) or where a jury are directed to presume mesne assignments." (f)

(a) Many of our legal maxims are expressed with too great a degree of generality, e. g. omnia præsumuntur ritè acta; omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorem; omnis innovatio plus novitate perturbat quam utilitate prodest. (2 Bulst. 338.) "Omnis definitio in lege periculosa." (Pigott on Rec. 2, &c.) If definitions are dangerous in law, universal propositions are not less so.

(b) 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 213.

He then reviews the cases bearing upon it, which he considers, 1st, with reference to official appointments; 2ndly, to judicial proceedings; 3rdly, to the execution of instruments, acts of parties, or other matters in pais.

Presumptions from possession and user come next to be considered. Possession is primâ facie evidence of property. Most systems of jurisprudence recognize a title by prescription, or undisturbed user for a time fixed by law. Customary rights differ from prescriptive in this, that the former are usages applicable to a district or number of persons, while the latter are rights claimed by one or more individuals, as existing either in themselves and their ancestors, or as annexed to particular property.

Numerous important presumptions of facts are made in support of title or beneficial enjoyment.

"The general principle governing this subject is thus clearly stated by Tindal, C. J. in Doe dem. Hammond v. Cooke (6 Bing. 179). (See, also, Greenleaf, L. E. art. 46, p. 52; 3 Stark. Ev. 935, 3rd ed.): 'No case can be put in which any presumption (semble, any artificial presumption) has been made, except where a title has been shewn by the party who calls for the presumption, good in substance, but wanting some collateral matter to make it complete in point of form. In such cases, where the possession is shewn to have been consistent with the fact directed to be presumed, and in such cases only, has it ever been allowed.' Presumptions of this kind are entitled to additional weight, if the possession would otherwise be unlawful, or incapable of satisfactory explanation. (Greenleaf, L. E. art. 46, p. 51.) On the other hand, the terms in which the presumption will be brought under the notice of the jury are considerably influenced by the nature of the document or other matter to be presumed, the facility or difficulty of adducing more direct proof, and also by the right in question being one favoured or not by law."

There is hardly a species of act or document public or private, that will not be presumed in support of possession.

"Conveyances by trustees. General rule.—Under this head comes the important doctrine of the presumption of conveyances by trustees. It is a general rule, that, whenever trustees ought to convey to the beneficial owner, it should be left to the jury to presume that they have so conveyed, whenever such presumption can reasonably be made.(g) This rule has been established to prevent just titles from being defeated by mere matter of form, but it is not easy to determine the practical extent of it. It may, however, be stated generally, that the presumption ought to be one in favour of the owner of the inheritance, and not one against his interest; (h) and the rule is subject to this further limitation, that the presumption cannot be called for where it would be a breach of trust in the trustee to make the conveyance.(i) On the same principle, re-conveyances from the trustees to the cestui que trust will be presumed,(k) as also will, under proper circumstances, conveyances from old to new trustees."(l)

The question as to the presumption of a surrender of a term is treated by Mr. Best at great length; but it has been so elaborately handled in the important case of Lyon v. Reed, reported verbatim in the Law Times (vol. 3, p. 302), that the reader is referred thither for the surest information. Upon all this class of cases Mr. Best observes:—

"Whether, in cases of this nature, the jury are bound to believe in the fact which they profess to find, has been made a question, and there certainly are authorities both ways. Mr. Starkie thus expresses himself on the point: 'These presumptions are the mere artificial creatures of law, depending entirely on considerations of legal policy and convenience; they are pure legal rules, the jury being, for this purpose, mere passive instruments in the hands of the Court.' (3 Stark. Ev. 918, 3rd ed.) It is hardly correct to say that these presumptions are 'pure legal rules;' they are of a mixed nature, resting partly on their intrinsic probability, and partly on legal expediency, and, indeed, the same author, in another place, says, 'The very mention of the proposition is absurd, that a jury, who are bound by their oath to pronounce according to the evidence, should decide contrary to their solemn conviction, on any collateral suggestion of convenience, as, for instance, because a purchaser is a bonâ fide, either in a court of law or equity. (3 Stark. Ev. 926, n.) It is beyond all question that the practice of advising juries to make artificial presumptions has been carried too far.(m) Indeed, Richards, C. B. is reported to have said, that he never desired a jury to presume when he did not believe himself (Doe dem. Newman v. Putland, 3 Sugd. V. & P. 61); and a similar opinion has been expressed in another case by Bayley, B. (Day v. Williams, 2 C. & J. 461.) This is going a great way: the learned judge might fairly be asked, whether they would think it necessary to believe in the surrender of a satisfied term, set up by a mortgagor against his mortgagee, before they would advise a jury to presume it surrendered. Upon the whole, it may, perhaps, be safely laid down, that, as in all presumptions of this nature legal considerations more or less predominate, the jury ought to find as advised by the judge, unless the fact appear absurd or grossly improbable, in which case he ought not to advise them to find, so neither ought they to find it."

We pause here for the present, again recommending the volume itself to the attention of the student who desires to master the science as well as the practice of the law.

(b) 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 213.

(c) Ib. "In every natural series of events," observes Mr. Bentham, "facts posterior and prior are naturally evidentiary of each other. The probative force of posterior events in regard to prior ones is naturally much stronger than that of prior events with regard to posterior ones. In all human affairs, execution is better evidence of design than design of execution. Why? Because human designs are so often frustrated." (Id. 215, 216.)

THE MONEY MARKET.

Stocks are quiet this morning, but continue to wear a firmer appearance than in the earlier part of the week. There will probably be a good deal of general business done in the heavy stocks, as they close for the calculation of the quarter's dividend as early as the 29th inst. and do not re-open till October 11. Consols have been 99 to 99$\frac{1}{8}$ $\frac{1}{4}$ for Money, and 99$\frac{1}{4}$ $\frac{3}{4}$ for Account. Bank Stock is firm at 200$\frac{1}{2}$, and South Sea Stock at 116. Exchequer Bills are 75s. to 77s. pm. and India Bonds 95s. pm. The New Three-and-a-Half per Cents. realize 101$\frac{3}{4}$ to $\frac{7}{8}$, the Reduced 102$\frac{5}{8}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$, and the Three per Cents. 99$\frac{7}{8}$ to 100.

The Foreign Bonds have been very inactive, neither the correspondence between M. Mosquera, the representative of New Granada, and the Committee of Spanish American Bondholders, in which any answer as to the amount of funds in hand, is declined, nor the unfavourable advices from Madrid having stimulated business in Colombian, or Spanish. The latter are heavy at 22$\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{5}{8}$ the Five per Cents., and at 32$\frac{7}{8}$ for the Three per Cents. Portuguese Converted are flat at 43$\frac{3}{8}$; Mexican realize 35$\frac{3}{4}$; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents. obtain 62$\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{3}{8}$.

The Railway Shares generally are firmer than at our last quoted rates.

CHAMBERS v. GROOM.

Practice—Taxing-Masters—Copies of documents—Costs.

On a taxation made in pursuance of an order on a motion to direct satisfaction to be entered on judgments by Wilton against the plaintiff, a question arose as to the propriety of the practice of the Taxing-Master, who, under the Act of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, required that when documents were brought into the office, a copy should be made at the expense of the parties, for the benefit of the suitors' fund. In this case Wilton had made copies before the documents were brought into the Master's office, and it was contended that he ought not to be compelled to take a copy made in the office. The Act enacts "that no person shall be compelled to take or pay for any copy of documents brought into the Master's office." It provides also, "that in the taxation of costs as between party and party, and between solicitor and client, no person should be allowed for a copy of any document brought into the Master's office, unless made in the Master's office.

Bethel stated the point to the Court by the desire of all the three parties to the taxation, namely, Chambers, Williams, his solicitor, and Wilton, and suggested that Wilton (or Green, his assignee) must have got a copy of the Master; that the Act only applies to the case of a taxation between solicitor and client, and that in this case the Act had no application.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I apprehend that is the construction of the Act.

Re RULL, a Lunatic.

Practice—Application of whole income of lunatic to payment of costs refused.

The lunatic's fortune consists of 700*l.* and a moiety of a leasehold estate producing 20*l.* a year, and a petition by the committee of the person, his mother, prayed that the whole income might be applied in payment of costs, amounting to about 100*l.* she undertaking to provide for his maintenance. The mother was stated to be a market gardener.

Teed, in support of the petition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What security is there for his maintenance? What kind of undertaking is proposed to be given? Order refused.

Re FAIRTHORNE, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Calling it debts—Allowance for furniture.

Francis Bayley supported a petition by the heir-at-law, who is committee of the estate, praying the confirmation of the commissioner's report, which proposed an allowance of 120*l.* a year out of the income, which was but 154*l.* in all. Part of the property consisted of money which had been lent on personal security, and the petition asked for leave to call that in; also, that the committee might be at liberty to purchase household furniture for the use of the lunatic to the amount of 180*l.* Ordered.

Re JACKSON, a Lunatic.

Allowance—Whole income ordered to be paid to the committee.

The commissioner had reported that the lunatic's property consisted of houses and stock, producing a net income of 345*l.* The stock consisted of 2,050*l.* 3 per cent. Consols, and 25*l.* Long Annuities. 300*l.* had been reported as a proper sum to be allowed as maintenance, and the rents of the houses had been received, but those rents did not amount to 300*l.* The petition prayed that the difference between 300*l.* and the amount of the rents might be made up by payment of part of the dividends of the stock which is in Court.

Spurrier, in support of the petition, suggested that there would be some difficulty in the Accountant-General's office if the order should be made for payment of a portion of the dividends, and that the proper way would be to direct all the income of the stock to be paid to the committee, he accounting for the surplus beyond the allowance.

Ordered accordingly.

Re MALLAM, a Lunatic.

Costs—Taxation—Payment of mortgages.

Glasse supported a petition, which prayed that certain mortgages on the lunatic's estate might be paid off.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There may be a reference, the commissioner does not state that these mortgages should be paid. He came before me upon the appointment of a receiver. Refer it also to the Taxing-Master, to inquire whether any and what parts of the costs should be allowed, having reference to the nature of the petition.

Thursday, July 25.

Re BRENT SPENCER.

Practice in lunacy—Carriage of commission.

An application was made for a commission to inquire into the state of mind of Mr. Brent Spencer, who is the illegitimate son of Sir Brent Spencer, deceased, by a Mrs. Pelham. Under the will of his reputed father, the alleged lunatic is entitled to an annuity of 100*l.* per annum.

Kenyon Parker and Winstanley, appeared for the petitioner, Mr. John B. Ryder, who is chairman of the Board of Guardians of the Chelsea Union. The lunatic had been living with his mother in Princes-street, Chelsea, and, in the early part of the year, his cries had attracted the attention of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood, when the petitioner, having instituted inquiries, and having entered the house by the aid of the police, found the lunatic in a loathsome state of filth from neglect and misusage. He was then removed to the Chelsea workhouse, where he still remains. The annuity had hitherto been paid to the lunatic's mother. They submitted that the conduct of the commission ought not to be intrusted to the mother.

Wakefield, for Mrs. Pelham.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Let a commission issue; but the mother, from her misconduct, is clearly not the person to whom the management of it ought to be intrusted. The petitioner must have the conduct of the commission.

July 25 and 27.

BULMER v. ALLISON.

Conditions of sale—Specific performance—Acceptance of title—Payment of purchase-money into court—Mortgagee.

Where, by the conditions of sale and the conduct of a purchaser, he is precluded from taking any objections to the title, he will be ordered to pay his purchase-money into court, although he claims to be entitled as an incumbrancer, upon the property to nearly the full amount of the purchase-money.

By an order made by Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Michael Middleton, George Wm. Todd, and Robert Jukes, were directed to pay into court the sum of 10,680*l.* the amount of the purchase-money of a colliery which had been sold under an order in the cause, and of which those persons had become the purchasers. By the conditions of sale they were precluded from taking any objections to the title. The purchasers had opposed the application for payment of their purchase-money into court before the Vice-Chancellor on various grounds, and amongst others that there were incumbrances upon the property to a large amount. By a cross-motion they offered to pay into court the sum of 780*l.* which they alleged was all that would be found due in respect of the purchase upon taking an account of their incumbrances. Their cross-motion was refused with costs, and they then asked for a reference to the Master to ascertain whether a good title could be made, and contended that, pending such a reference, to which they alleged they were entitled as of course, no order could be made for payment of the purchase-money into court. The Vice-Chancellor ordered the whole purchase-money to be paid into court, but, at the express desire of the purchasers, granted a reference to the Master as to the title. From that order the purchasers appealed, on the ground that a purchaser is never ordered to pay his purchase-money into court, unless he has accepted the title; and that he is always entitled to a reference of the title to the Master.

Teed and Willcock, for the appellants.

Bickner (in the absence of Romilly).—The sole object of the purchasers was delay. They had no bonâ fide objection to the title, which was well known to them, as they themselves held a part of the same property. They were also precluded from objecting to the title by the conditions of sale.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Is not the cross-motion of the purchasers, the appellants, to pay a part of their purchase-money into court a waiver of any objection to the title? At any rate, I do not see how the appellants can be injured by paying the money into court, without prejudice to any questions of title. I will hear Mr. Romilly, who has been absent to-day, and if I am satisfied that the conduct of the appellants has amounted to an acceptance of the title, I shall uphold the Vice-Chancellor's decree.

July 27.—Romilly, for the respondents, admitted that the general rule was that a purchaser should not be compelled to pay in his purchase-money pending a reference as to title; but there were three exceptions; first, when the purchaser had taken possession of the property; secondly, where he had accepted the title; and thirdly, where he had precluded himself from taking any objections to it. (Morgan v. Shaw, 4 Maddock, 54; Smith v. Lloyd, 1 Maddock, 83; Boothby v. Walker, 1 Maddock, 197.) In this case the purchasers were in possession of the property, and, therefore, it came within the exceptions to the general rule. The purchasers likewise sustained the character of vendors, as they were joint owners of the property. By the fourth condition of sale, the purchasers were bound to accept the title as it had been taken by the vendors. If the order of the Vice-Chancellor was irregular, it ought to be corrected by striking out the order for referring the title. A similar order has been made in Blackburn v. Stace (6 Maddock's, 69).

Teed, in reply. Judgment deferred.

Monday, July 29.

Re EXETER MARKET ACT, and Re SERCOMBE, a Lunatic.

Investment of purchase-money—Costs.

Where a purchaser under the powers of a local Act has paid his purchase-money into court, he is not entitled to the costs of appearing on a petition by the vendor to have the money invested.

John Sercombe, the lunatic, being entitled to certain property in Exeter, part of which had been taken possession of by the corporation of that city under the powers of a local Act of 4 Wm. 4, for removing the markets held in the city of Exeter, the purchase-money, amounting to 1,990*l.* had been paid into court. The committees of the lunatic now presented a petition praying for the investment of the purchase-money. The corporation had been served with the petition, and appeared by counsel at the hearing, who asked for the costs of the corporation upon the petition. The Act contained no provision as to the costs of re-investments.

Fooks, for the corporation.

Rolt, for the committees, objected to the payment of the costs of the corporation. Though served with the petition, they need not have appeared. The absence of any provision in the Act for the costs of reinvestment indicated the intention of the Legislature. The corporation must pay their own costs.

Barrett, for the next of kin of the lunatic.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I cannot direct the costs of the corporation to be paid out of the lunatic's funds.

Re Church, a Lunatic.

Lunatic trustee—Reference.

The lunatic in this matter was a party to a conveyance, which had been executed by all the parties except the lunatic, and the petition prayed a direct order for a conveyance, without a previous reference to the Master, in order to save expense.

The Lord Chancellor.—I can give no direction; there must be a reference.

Pearse v. Brooks.

West India estate—Consignee—Allowance to infants—Incumbrances—Costs.

In this suit, which was for the administration of the estate of a testator, who died possessed of a heavily incumbered estate in Jamaica, Messrs. Timperon and Dobbison had been ordered to pay allowances, amounting altogether to 400*l.* for the maintenance of the testator's infant children. On the 23rd of December last the consignees applied to be relieved from that order, upon the ground the income of the estate was insufficient to meet its expenses, and that the consignees had been actually carrying on the cultivation and management of it at a loss. The accounts were usually made up to April in each year, and the Lord Chancellor directed the allowance to be continued until the result of the current year's management had been ascertained, and gave the consignees leave to apply again after the April accounts had been received.

Burge, for the consignees, now stated that the deficiency still existed, and that the consignees had last year expended 1,000*l.* beyond their receipts; and that the next year's crop would be less than the last, from the circumstance of the consignees having declined to make the ordinary outlay in the purchase of stock for the use of the estate. This loss was stated to arise from the deficiency of labour in the island of Jamaica.

Teed, for some of the infants, submitted that the consignees ought to be directed to continue the payment of the allowances or to give a detailed account of their management.

The Lord Chancellor.—I decided this case, subject to the account of the then current year's income.

Cole, for the infant plaintiffs, urged the necessity of obtaining a full account of the consignees' management before they were relieved from payment of the allowances.

Burge, in reply.

The Lord Chancellor.—I said on the last application that I would see what the receipts of the current year would produce. I cannot make these gentlemen pay the allowances out of their own funds. I must order the allowances to be discontinued for the present. Either party may reply.

Purvis and Baily, for the guardians, submitted that Timperon and Dobbison should pay their costs, and add them to their own mortgage debt.

The costs were ultimately directed to be costs in the cause.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

June 4 and 5.

Baynes v. Prevost.

Will—Construction—Period of vesting.

A testator by his will bequeaths a certain sum of money to his wife for life, with remainder to his daughter, until her death or marriage, when it was to be divided among his children, whom he names, including also his daughter. This daughter married during the testator's lifetime, and died during his widow's life. Held, that the representatives of a son of the testator, who was living at the daughter's marriage, but who died in the lifetime of the widow, was entitled to a share on the division upon the decease of the widow.

A. Baynes, by his will, executed in the year 1803, having disposed of his furniture to his wife, directed as follows:—"I also leave and bequeath to my wife, Margaret Baynes, the interest on all moneys I may have in the public funds at my death, to be enjoyed by her as long as she lives; but it is my will that no part of the said moneys be sold out, or the principal, or in any way diminished during her lifetime, unless with the consent of my executors. A sum not exceeding 500*l.* may be sold out, and employed for the purpose of promoting and placing my son, George M. Baynes, now unprovided for, in the same situation with respect to rank for his time of life as his brothers are. It is my will, that if my daughter, Maria Baynes, should not be married at her mother's death, the interest of the moneys in the public funds belonging to me revert to and be enjoyed by her, and that she continue to receive the same undiminished until the time of her death or marriage, when it is my will that the whole of such money as may be then in the public funds belonging to me shall be equally divided among my sons, Edward, Charles, Henry, O'Hara, and George M. Baynes, and my daughters, Jane Frome, Maria Baynes, and Harriet Tobia, or among such of them as may be living at the marriage or death of their sister, Maria Baynes. It is my further will, should my children wish to take possession of their shares of the moneys in the funds which are ultimately to be divided among them, that if my executors see no just and reasonable cause to the contrary, the same may be sold out and divided in equal shares among them; but that they shall assign over good and sufficient security for the due payment of legal interest of the whole sum they may jointly receive to my wife, Margaret Baynes, during her life, and after her death, to Maria Baynes, so long as she may live single."

The testator, A. Baynes, died some time in 1804, leaving his wife and the above-named children surviving him. His daughter Maria married in her father's lifetime, and died in the year 1834. Charles died in 1818, in the lifetime of his mother, the widow of A. Baynes, the testator; and the widow herself died in the year 1838. The principal question for the consideration of the Court was, whether the representatives of Charles Baynes were entitled to take his one-eighth share of the testator's funded property on the division at the widow's decease.

Stuart and Heathfield, for the legatees of C. Baynes, deceased.—It is clear that the testator intended that his children should have vested interests in their respective shares, from the circumstance of his allowing them to take the capital upon their giving proper security for the payment of the interest to the mother during her lifetime. The only ground for an argument on the contrary is an assumption that the time for distribution is the period of vesting, which, however, is not the principle upon which this Court proceeds, as appears from the case of Archer v. Jegon (8 Sim. 446).

Bethel and C. Hall, contra.—Where there are two events pointed out in a will, and one of them takes place before the death, you must wait for the other event after the death. The order of events which the testator contemplated did not occur. He evidently supposed, according to the usual course of nature, that of the two, the widow would die before his daughter, and therefore provides for the latter. Subject to that contingency, the general scheme of the will is, that the principal of the fund is to be divided at the widow's decease among a class then in existence. We contend that those children were to take who were living at the decease of the daughter. (Billingsby v. Wills, 3 Atk. 219; Pope v. Whitcombe, 3 Russ. 124; Daniell v. Daniell, 6 Ves. 297.)

Anderton and Randall, for others in the same interest, submitted that the period of distribution was that which determined the right to take; that the testator never contemplated a diminution of the property, and the Court would not treat the interest as vested, and take no consideration for the contingency. (Newton v. Ayscough, 19 Ves. 534; Wordsworth v. Wood, 4 My. & Cr. 641.)

The Vice-Chancellor.—I will not trouble the plaintiffs for a reply, because I cannot help thinking that the case is very clear. What has been said by the Master of the Rolls in Newton v. Ayscough(a) seems to me to be perfectly applicable to this case. The parties who oppose the plaintiff's claim offer a different aspect to the contingent event upon which the testator himself determines the character of those whom he intends to take. What he had in view was, whether his daughter Maria should or not be married at her mother's decease; so that he provides for the event of her marrying, and for the event of her death; for he says, that in case of her not being married at her mother's death, the interest of the moneys belonging to him in the public funds shall be enjoyed by her, and that she shall continue to receive the same undiminished until the time of her death or marriage, when it is his will that the whole of such money as may be then in the public funds belonging to him shall be equally divided among his eight children, naming them, or such of them as may be living at the marriage or death of their sister Maria. The meaning of which is, that the property in the funds shall go to all or to such only as shall be living at her death or marriage. Now, the words "death or marriage" must, I think, be taken to mean, although not expressly declared, whichever event shall first happen. If this construction be true, it is manifest that in the event of the daughter's marrying, there is a gift of a share to her with the rest of the children, because she would be one of such of them as should be living at the time of her marriage; moreover, it is clear that she could not be living at the time of her death, and there is no other mode of giving effect to the testator's intention, and an attempt at any other construction would be to render that part of the will void for uncertainty. The testator has not necessarily coupled one contingency with another, for although he provides for the daughter in case she should not be married at his wife's decease, yet he nowhere joins that with the contingency of her surviving her mother. The expression "when it is my will," I conceive to be merely a description of that period when the remainders to take effect. The word "when" has no relation to the mother's death; and the expression "shall be equally divided," which the testator makes use of, is that by means of which he creates the bequest. I do not think that any stress can be laid on the expression "shall be equally divided between them." This clause bears no other construction than that after his death, if his children should agree among themselves that the whole fund should be paid to them, it was competent for them to do so with the consent of the executors, provided they gave sufficient security for the mother's receipt of the interest during her life.

(a) Sir W. Grant, in the above case (19 Ves. 536) held, that to what period "survivorship" is to relate, depends not upon any technical words, but on the apparent intention of the testator, collected either from the particular disposition or the general context of the will.

Practice.

Preliminary inquiries under the fifth Order, May 9, 1839, which directs that "in all cases in which it shall appear that certain preliminary accounts and inquiries must be taken and made before the rights and interests of the parties to the cause can be ascertained, or the question therein arising can be determined, the plaintiff shall be at liberty at any time after the defendants shall have appeared to the bill to move the Court on notice that such inquiries and accounts shall be made and taken, and that an order referring it to the Master to make such inquiries and take such accounts, shall thereupon be made without prejudice to any question in the cause, if it shall appear to the Court that the same will be beneficial to such (if any) parties to the cause as may not be competent to consent thereto, and that the same is consented to by such (if any) of the defendants as, being competent to consent, have not put in their answer to the bill, and that the same is consented to by or is proper to be made upon the statements contained in the answers of such (if any) of the defendants as have answered the bill."

The plaintiff, who was a trustee under a will, and had commenced a suit for the due administration of the testator's estate, now moved, under the above order, for the Master to take the accounts, but some of the defendants having suggested by their answer that the plaintiff ought to be charged with wilful default, and having since filed their cross bill for the purpose of so charging him, his motion to have the accounts taken was refused.

The original bill was filed by one of the trustees under a will, for the purpose of having an account of the testator's property taken, and that the estates might be administered under the direction of the Court. All the defendants appeared to the bill, and filed their answers, whereby they admitted that the accounts ought to be taken as prayed by the bill; but some of the defendants, in their answers, suggested that the plaintiff ought to be charged for wilful default in respect to the testator's affairs, and had, since the notice of motion was served upon them, filed their cross bill, seeking to charge him for such default.

Walker and Moxon, in support of the above motion, applied to the Court under the 5th of the above orders, 9th May, 1839, that it might be referred to the Master to take the preliminary accounts.

Bethel and Prior contended that the above order did not contemplate a case like the present, and that the charge against the plaintiff had rendered it improper to have the accounts taken in this stage of the proceedings.

T. Lewin for the representatives of a deceased trustee.

The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that as it evidently appeared that the suit was a hostile one, and the facts upon which the defendants to the original suit had filed their cross bill having been suggested upon their answers, it was not such a suit as the 5th order contemplated; for those suits alone were contemplated by that order which were of a friendly and pacific nature, and not such as were of that hostile character which the defendants by their answers had evidently shewn it to be. Moreover, the conduct of the plaintiff, in attempting to obtain a decree upon which he might move to restrain creditors carrying on the proceedings at law, was reprehensible; for the very decree might eventually prove itself to be such a one as the Court ought not to have made. His Honour therefore Refused the motion.

Cocksedge v. Cocksedge.

Marriage articles—Clause of separation—Husband and wife.

By articles entered into prior to the intended marriage of T. M. C. with A. W., T. M. C. covenanted that, immediately after the marriage, he would settle an annual income of 400l. upon A. W. by equal quarterly payments, the first of such payments to be made on the first of such days next after the death of the said T. M. C. or of any separation taking place. Held, in a suit for specific performance, that as this was a covenant which might induce the wife to be guilty of a violation of the marriage contract, and to accelerate the event upon which the annuity was to be paid, it was not such a one as a court of equity would enforce.

By articles of agreement bearing date the 13th of September, 1837, and made upon a marriage intended to be solemnized between the defendant, Thomas M. Cocksedge, and the plaintiff, Ann Whale, which agreement was made between the defendant, T. M. Cocksedge, of the first part, the said plaintiff, then Ann Whale, of the second part, and her father, William Whale, of the third part; reciting that a marriage was intended to be shortly had and solemnized between the said Thomas M. Cocksedge and the said Ann Whale; and that, in contemplation of and in negotiation of the said intended marriage, it had been proposed and agreed by and between the said parties, that the said T. M. Cocksedge should settle and confirm to the said Ann Whale an adequate annual sum as and for the maintenance of her, the said Ann Whale, to be enjoyed by her, independently of all control of him, the said T. M. Cocksedge, in the event of any separation taking place between them, the said T. M. Cocksedge and the said Ann Whale, during their lives; and in case the said Ann Whale should survive him, the said T. M. Cocksedge, to be enjoyed by her, the said Ann Whale, during her natural life, free from the control of any future husband,—it was witnessed that, for and in consideration of the said intended marriage, the said T. M. Cocksedge, for his heirs, executors, and administrators, did covenant, promise, and agree, with and to the said William Whale, the father of the said Ann Whale (an infant under the age of twenty-one years), that he, the said Thomas M. Cocksedge, should, immediately after the solemnization of the said intended marriage, or so soon after as conveniently might be, make and execute an effectual settlement in the law in favour of the said Ann Whale, and thereby secure to her the payment of the annual sum of 400*l.* to be paid to her by equal quarterly payments on the four usual quarter days in the year; and in the event of the death of the said T. M. Cocksedge, or any separation taking place, the first payment thereof to be made on the first of such days then next following the occurrence of such event, and to be free from the debts, control, or engagements of any future husband; but the receipt of her, the said Ann Whale, to be a sufficient discharge for the same, without her said husband, if any, joining therein. And that he, the said T. M. Cocksedge, should thereby charge with the payment thereof some one of the estates of him, the said T. M. Cocksedge, of ample value held by him of fee simple; and also that he, the said T. M. Cocksedge, should by deed create a term of 1000 years in such freehold estate to the trustees of such settlement, one of whom it was thereby agreed should be the said Wm. Whale, with full power to them, the said trustees, in the event of non-payment of the said sum of 400*l.* at the days and times, and in manner aforesaid, to mortgage or sell the same for the purpose of satisfying such annual payments, with all other usual powers, provisos, conditions, and covenants; and, further, that the said T. M. Cocksedge, did also in manner aforesaid covenant, promise, and agree with and to the said Wm. Whale, that for the purpose of carrying into effect the said agreement he, the said T. M. Cocksedge, would at all times thereafter make, do, and execute all such acts, deeds, matters, and things as should be necessary and should be required by the said Wm. Whale, by and with the advice of his counsel in the law.

The marriage took place shortly after the date of the above articles of agreement, and Mr. and Mrs. Cocksedge lived together as husband and wife until some time in August 1843, when Mr. Cocksedge separated himself from his wife, and ceased to cohabit with her, upon the alleged ground of adultery, but of which there did not appear to have been any proof. It seems that a deed had been framed upon the basis of the articles of agreement for the purpose of securing the 400*l.* per annum to the plaintiff, Ann Cocksedge, but that it had never been executed. By that deed the plaintiff, Wm. Whale, was intended to have been the trustee of the annuity; and the present suit was therefore instituted by him and his daughter, Mrs. Cocksedge, for the purpose of compelling a specific performance of the articles of agreement. A motion was also made on behalf of the plaintiffs for a receiver.

Stuart and Tennant, in support of the motion, submitted that the agreement being entered into prior to, and in contemplation of, the marriage, the covenant contained therein relating to the provision for separation, was undoubtedly a valid covenant; that all the cases which have been decided in reference to such covenants upon post-nuptial settlements were altogether out of the question, and formed no precedent for the present case, for in them such a covenant did not form the basis of the marriage, as it did in the present case; for that herein the ante-nuptial agreement amounted to nothing more than a settlement to the separate use of the wife, binding upon the husband in the event of a separation; that, had there been issue of the marriage, and no provision had been made for such issue, save under the articles of agreement, the Court, on a bill filed by the trustees on behalf of the children of the marriage, for the purpose of carrying the articles into execution, would (notwithstanding the covenant) perform the contract entire, and not leave part of it unperformed. (Sidney v. Sidney, 3 P. Wms. 269; Roper, Husband and Wife, v. ii. p. 134.)

Bethel and Prendergast, for the defendant, were not heard.

The Vice-Chancellor. — My opinion is, that when the contract, as in the present case, extends to compel the husband to make a provision for the wife in case of any separation between them, the Court is bound to take notice whether or no it be such a provision as may operate as an inducement to the wife to be guilty of the most flagrant conduct against her husband. Looking at the covenant as it stands, I have a right to put any case of separation; therefore, suppose the covenant had expressly stated, that "in the event of the wife eloping from her husband, and living in adultery, the husband would, during the period she was thus violating the marriage contract, pay her the annuity," could that be considered a valid covenant? My notion of the law is this, that where the covenant is of that general description which characterizes the present one, the Court cannot disunite the innocent cause of separation from the guilty, and determine that in the one case the covenant shall be valid and in the other invalid. The contract, as it stands, is entire, and the Court is bound to regard it as such; it cannot be severed. As the words of the covenant now stand, they appear to me primâ facie open to this objection, that the mere bad conduct of the wife herself may operate as the very contingency upon which is founded the obligation of the husband to allow the annuity. Such a covenant is contrary to the policy of law, and is, therefore, bad; and unless it be clearly proved to me that it is one which this Court will uphold, I must refuse to enforce it, and cannot, therefore, allow the motion. Let it, however, stand over (as this is purely a question of law), with liberty for Mr. Whale, the trustee, to bring such an action at law as he may be advised.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Monday, July 29.

James v. Baker.

Will—Construction.

A testator gave to A B, and her children then living, the residue of his property, in equal portions, the children to receive their portions when they attained the age of twenty-one years, and in case of the death of any of the children then living, such child's portion to go to any other child that A B might have; after the testator's death another child was born, and one of the children living at the date of the testator's will died under twenty-one, and then two other children were born. Held, that the deceased child's portion went to the after-born child living at the time of its death.

Thomas Hall, the testator in this cause, by his will, dated the 14th of April, 1838, after giving certain pecuniary and specific legacies, gave and bequeathed to his niece, Mrs. Elizabeth James, wife of —— James, of Oakingham, baker, for her sole and separate use, and to her children then living, the entire residue, in equal portions, of whatever property he might possess at the time of his decease; the said Elizabeth James to receive her portion at the usual times of paying bequests, and the children to receive their several portions on their attaining the age of twenty-one years, during which time the money to be held in trust of Joseph Baker and Christopher Willoughby; and in the event of either or both of them dying before the children attained the age of twenty-one years, the trust to revert to their mother; and in case of the death of any of the children then living, such child's portion to go to any other child the said Mrs. James might have by her then husband; should she not have any other child or children, then the portion of any child dying to be divided between the said Elizabeth Jame and the surviving children. At the date of the testator's will there were seven children of Mrs. James living, all of whom survived the testator. No child was born between the date of the will and the testator's death, but after his death, three other children were born. After the birth of the first of these three, one of the seven children died under twenty-one. All the children were infants, and this bill was filed on behalf of the six surviving children. The only question raised in the cause was as to the deceased child's share, the father, who had taken out letters of administration, contending that the interest had vested in the child, notwithstanding its death under twenty-one, and a claim being also set up on behalf of the three children born after the testator's death.

Lovat, for the plaintiffs.

Hall, for the father.

Younge, for the after-born children, and

The Vice-Chancellor.—My present impression is, that, taking this language altogether, the expression "and in case of the death of any of the children," &c. means a death under twenty-one, whenever happening, and that the words "any other child," &c. mean such child or children only as might happen to be living when the deceased child died. I think, therefore, that this share must go to the first of the after-born children.

Monday, Aug. 5.

Dalton v. Hayter.

Practice—15th Order of May 1837.

In this case a demurrer had been overruled, and the decree was appealed from. In the meantime the plaintiff was proceeding against the defendant for an answer.

Swanston and Beavan applied to stay these proceedings until the appeal had been heard.

Wood, for the plaintiff, stated, as a preliminary objection, that the decree on the demurrer was made by the Master of the Rolls, and that a similar application to the present was on Wednesday last dismissed with costs by the Lord Chancellor, because the application should have been made before the Master of the Rolls, and the Master of the Rolls had been sitting since the Lord Chancellor's decision, and no application had been made to him. The attachment against the defendant had, however, since then issued.

The 15th order of May 1837, and the order of the 5th of August, 1842 were referred to.

The Vice-Chancellor said, he considered that the Lord Chancellor had decided the case, and declined to hear the motion.

St. Katherine's Docks Company v. Mantzgue.

Practice—Sufficiency of answer.

The time having expired for excepting to an answer for insufficiency, the Court, upon application for liberty to except, allowed the defendant, without deciding upon the sufficiency or insufficiency of the answer, to file an affidavit explanatory of passages contained in the answer.

To a bill filed for discovery, an answer had been put in, which was considered by the plaintiffs to be insufficient as to the documents, &c. in the defendant's possession. The time, however, having expired for excepting for insufficiency, the plaintiffs moved for liberty to except, on the ground of peculiar circumstances in the case.

Russell and Hargrave, for the plaintiffs.

Wigram and Hardy, for the defendants.

The Vice-Chancellor.—I am not quite satisfied that this answer is insufficient, but I will follow a precedent I well remember in Lord Eldon's time. I shall give the defendant liberty to file an affidavit as to the circumstances under which, and the purposes for which, the documents in the answer stated to be in the possession of —— were placed, and now are, in his possession, and also to explain the passage in the answer as to the plurality of bills of lading, and also to give a distinct enumeration of all the documents in his possession, excepting those mentioned in the schedule to the answer.

Tuesday, Aug. 6.

Younghusband v. Gisborne.

Personal trust—Annuity—Insolvent.

Where a testator directed his trustees to raise an annuity during the life of A B, and to hold the same for the personal support, clothing, and maintenance of A B, so as not to be subject to the claims of any person to whom he should attempt to charge the same, nor to his creditors under a bankruptcy or insolvency, or to his own control or debts, and directed that the annuity should be paid to A B until he should attempt to charge, or until some other person should claim it, and after such attempt or claim that the same should be applied for the personal support, clothing, and maintenance of A B; it was held that the annuity passed to the assignees of A B upon his becoming insolvent.

Francis Duckinfield, by his will, dated the 17th of June, 1823, gave certain real estates to trustees upon trust, to "levy and raise yearly, and every year during the life of his brother, John William Astley, one annuity or yearly sum of 400*l.* sterling money, and in case of his death in the interval between any of the days therein mentioned for payment thereof, then a proportional part thereof up to the time of his death; and he directed that the same annuity, and the proportional part thereof aforesaid, should be held by his said trustee upon trust for the personal support, clothing, and maintenance of his said brother, so as not to be subject or liable to the claims of any person or persons to whom he should attempt to charge, anticipate, or otherwise incumber the same, nor to his creditors under a commission of bankruptcy, or any Act for the relief of insolvent debtors, or to his own control, contracts, debts, or other engagements; and the testator declared that the said annuity should be paid to his said brother himself from time to time, when and after the same should become due, until he should attempt to charge, anticipate, or otherwise incumber the same, or until any other person or persons might claim the same, and from and after such attempt or claim, the same should be applied by his trustees, or some person under their direction, for or towards the personal support, clothing, and maintenance of his said brother, and for no other purpose whatsoever.

The testator died on the 23rd of July, 1835, and the trustees of his will duly paid the annuity to J. W. Astley, up to the 25th of December, 1841.

On the 31st of May, 1842, J. W. Astley took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act; and the plaintiffs having been appointed his assignees, instituted this suit for the purpose of obtaining the annuity.

Wigram and Hallett, for the plaintiff, cited Lord v. Bunn (2 Y. & C. C. C. 98).

Beales, for J. W. Astley, cited Golden v. Crowhurst (10 Sim. 642), and Twopenny v. Peyton (10 Sim. 487).

J. Parker and Colville, for the trustees.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that, without giving any opinion whether the two cases decided by the Vice-Chancellor of England were or were not distinguishable from the present, he felt no doubt that this annuity passed to the assignees of J. W. Astley.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Thursday, July 30.

(Before Sir GEORGE ROSE.)

Ex parte CHRISTIE, Re CLARKE.

Bank notes—Joint and separate estate.

Where a note issued by a bank was signed by one of the partners for the firm, and commenced in this form —"I promise to pay on demand, &c." the Court held, that the holder of the note was entitled to prove against the separate estate of the partner signing.

This was a petition presented by the assignees for the purpose of expunging a proof made against the separate estate of Mitchell, under the circumstances mentioned in the report of Ex parte Buckler, re Clarke (ante, p. 284). The notes were in the following form.—

"Leicestershire Bank.—I promise to pay to bearer, on demand, the sum of 10*l.* here or at Messrs. Williams, Deacon, Labouchere, and Co., London, value received.—For John Clarke, Richard Mitchell, Joseph Phillips, and Thomas Smith,—Richard Mitchell."

The question was, whether these terms established a right in the holder to prove against the separate estate of Mitchell.

Swanston and Chapman, for the assignees.

Russell and Daniell, for the crediter.

The following cases were cited Hall v. Smith (1 Barn. & Cres. 407); Lord Galway v. Matthews (1 Camp. 403; 10 East, 264); Wilks v. Batt (2 East, 142); March v. Ward (Peake's N. P. Cases, 130); Clark v. Blackstock (Holt's N. P. Cases, 474); Doughty v. Bates (11 Johnson's Reports of Cases in the Supreme Court of Judicature in New York, 554); Ex parte Fairlie (1 Mont. & Ayr. 17); and Huddleston v. Briscoe (11 Ves. 597).

Sir GEORGE ROSE (without hearing a reply).—The analogy betwen a proof in bankruptcy and an execution cannot always be followed out in all its consequences; for instance, on a joint judgment a separate execution may be issued, but no separate dividend can be obtained on a joint proof. In this case, it appears to me, that the commissioner has been too much governed by the case of Hall v. Smith, without adverting to the equities, which always operate in bankruptcy. This note raises a joint contract against the four bankrupts: on it a separate fiat might have issued—that would be a question of process; but the question of proof is governed by different principles. Could an action be brought against the respondent separately? Not till after demand; and in bankruptcy he would only be separately liable, in the character of a surety, and, as surety, he was entitled to have a demand made before he could be rendered liable. There was no legal demand made before the bankruptcy: the consideration went to the joint estate, and there was no legal demand, to carry a right against the separate estate. Neither demand nor consideration is stated on the deposition of proof. I shall therefore expunge the proof, and the assignees must have their costs out of the estate.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Monday, Aug. 5.

(Before Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.)

Re DUMELOW.

The Court will punish any attempt by debtors to conceal their place of abode.

The insolvent was described as an attorney's clerk, of No. 17, Shepperton-place, New North road, Islington, and previously of 145, Whitecross-street, and occasionally at Wednesbury. He came up to day for his final order.

Lucas appeared to oppose him on behalf of a creditor, when he stated that cases similar to the present had of late increased to an alarming extent. Insolvents who knew their conduct would not bear investigation if inquired into by their creditors, had recourse to the following expedient. They take a lodging at a great distance from their creditors, and at a place which, if the residence was bonâ fide, would entitle them to apply to a district Court of Bankruptcy, and at which their creditors could not attend unless at great expense and inconvenience. In the majority of cases the pretended residence is at the house of some friend, to whom, if inquiries are made, answers calculated to mislead, and often absolutely false, are given. The result was, that in nine cases out of ten the insolvent succeeds. In the present case the insolvent represented himself as having lived in two places in London for the last twelve months, as required by the Act, to enable him to apply for relief to this court, but evidence could be offered to the Court to shew that he really lived at Wednesbury, near Birmingham; that all his creditors, save one, lived there; and that this was a mere attempt on the part of the insolvent to pass through this court without the creditors being able (practically speaking) to inquire into his conduct, or to shew to his Honour such grounds and circumstances as would induce him to say that the insolvent was not a fit person to ask for the benefit of the Act. The learned counsel concluded by stating, that unless this practice on the part of insolvents was checked, creditors would be left without the slightest protection against the frauds of dishonest persons.

Evidence having been given of the facts, as stated by the learned counsel,

Sturgeon addressed the Court on the part of the insolvent.

His HONOUR decided that the insolvent's residence was really within the Birmingham district, that the objection, therefore, was fatal, and that the petition must be dismissed. His Honour further expressed his concurrence with many of the observations of the opposing counsel, as to the necessity of giving creditors every facility to enable them to investigate the accounts and inquire into the conduct of their debtors.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.

Wednesday, August 7.

In consequence of Mr. Commissioner Law's unavoidable absence from court, Mr. Nichols, the senior barrister, filled his place, and will continue to do so during the rest of the week.

A few bail cases and unopposed hearings formed the only business.

(Before Mr. Commissioner HARRIS.)

Re THOMAS AUSTIN.

Construction of the new statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 94.

Cooke said he appeared on behalf of Messrs. Browning and Co. in whose name he submitted that the insolvent was not in need of the assistance of the Court to obtain his discharge from prison, as by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 94, which received the royal assent on the 9th inst. there was a clause (the 58th) which enabled any person confined for debts under 20*l.* to obtain, on application to a judge, a release from prison. If this Court were to entertain this case, and to pronounce a remand at the suit of Messrs. Browning, they not having a judgment, the insolvent would not remain in prison an hour.

Mr. Commissioner HARRIS reminded Mr. Cooke, that under the statute a judgment by capias would follow a remand of the Court.

Cooke said his point was, that the insolvent did not require the aid of the Court to obtain his liberty.

Mr. Commissioner HARRIS said, he had considered the point, and had come to the determination of hearing the case. The words "shall" and "may" were very extensive.

The case was then proceeded with, but presented no feature worthy of remark, and was ultimately adjourned.

TRINITY TERM, 1844.

Thursday, May 30.

REG. v. O'CONNELL and OTHERS.

The Court has not power to award a sentence of imprisonment to commence at a future day except where it is to commence at the expiration of an imprisonment under a previous sentence.

While the motion to arrest the judgment in this cause (see 3 Law. T. 264) was pending, the following notice was served upon the Crown solicitor:—

"The Queen v. Daniel O'Connell and Others. } Sir,—Take notice that in the event of no rule being pronounced by the Court to arrest the judgment in this cause, counsel on behalf of the several traversers will on Thursday next, or after the decision of the Court on the pending question, or when they shall severally be brought up for judgment, apply to the Court that whatever sentence the Court shall think fit to pronounce upon the respective traversers, shall be directed not to commence until such day as the Court in their discretion, shall think it right to order, to enable the traversers to prosecute their writ of error, and have judgment thereon between the said time of pronouncing said judgment and such day as shall be so appointed by the Court, which application will be grounded upon the proceedings already had in this cause, and an affidavit of which I shall send you a copy.

"William Ford.
Pierce Mahony.
J. M. Cantwell.
Peter McEvoy Garltan.
Agents to traversers.

"To Wm. Kemmis, esq. Crown Solicitor.

"Dated this 28th May, 1844."

An affidavit was made by Mr. O'Connell in support of the motion, in which he stated that he was advised and believed that errors had occurred in the case, and it was his intention to bring a writ of error, and to proceed upon it with all possible urgency, and that the application was not intended for delay, but with the bonâ fide intention of obtaining the decision of the House of Lords upon the judgment of this Court, which judgment he believed would be reversed.

The motion in arrest of judgment having been refused (3 Law T. p. 267), and the traversers having been ordered to attend on this day at the bar to receive the judgment of the Court,

Moore, Q. C. with whom was Whiteside, Q. C. now moved pursuant to the above notice. They admitted that they could find no precedent for such an application, but referred to the case of Rex v. Wilkes (4 Bur. 2574) to shew that the Court could pronounce a sentence of imprisonment to commence in futuro. Reg. v. Waddington (1 E. 172) was also cited. In the case of Reg. v. Charlton (2 Jebb. & S. 86), the prisoner, who was convicted of bigamy at Monaghan Assizes, and was sentenced by this Court on the 21st of Jan. 1840 to six months imprisonment in Monaghan gaol, but was allowed to stand out until the following Tuesday, when he was to surrender to the governor of the gaol. In R. v. Davis(a) (May 27, 1840) a similar order was made, and in Reg. v. Morgan and Stevenson. In the case of Reg. v. Byrne, proprietor of the Kerry Examiner, which was decided only two years ago, the Court made an order that the defendant should surrender to the gaoler within a week. (Freeman, Q. C. who was engaged in the case, stated that it was so ruled by consent.) Sir Walter Raleigh's case Crok. Jac. 495; Harris's case, 1 Ld. Raym. 482; R. v. Williams, 1 Leach, Cr. L. 536; R. v. Bath, 1 Leach Cr. L. 441; Hawk. P. C. c. 48.)

Smith, A. G. and Greene, S. G. contrà, cited Reg. v. Wilkes, as reported in 4 Brown, P. C. 367, and 19 St. Tr. 1127-33, to shew that in a subsequent stage of that very case, which was cited on the other side from 4 Bur. 2574, one of the grounds of error assigned was, that the sentence was directed to commence in futuro. In the case of Huguenin v. Baseley (15 Ves. J. 182) it was expressly stated by Lord Eldon that a writ of error did not stay judgment in criminal cases. Reg. v. Templeman (1 Salk. 56); Reg. v. Duke (1 Salk. 400); Hodges v. Humkin (2 Buls. 139); and Brooke's Ab. were also cited for the Crown.

PENNEFATHER, C. J.—The Court are of opinion that this motion ought not to be acceded to. There may be practically many reasons for which, if the Court were at liberty to take them into consideration, they might come to a different conclusion. No one could feel more grieved than we should if the proposition which Mr. Moore laid down should occur; if, after the parties had undergone to a considerable extent the punishment awarded by the Court, they should be found in a situation entitling them to say that they ought never to have received any punishment at all. We all feel that it would be a very distressing state of things. But so it would be in all cases in which parties are tried and punished, and afterwards having sued out a writ of error, succeed in reversing the judgment on which they stand convicted, a matter so to be lamented would hold in all cases as well as in the present. And if that be the case, it is very strange that this should be an application without precedent, even on the admission of the counsel who made it. The regret, however, if such a circumstance should occur, would be caused, not by the judges who pronounced the sentence, but by the operations of the the common law. The judges have no discretion in such a case; they have to administer the law as they find it, and if there is any matter of difficulty in the subject sufficient to call for the interference of the Legislature, that is the place to appeal to; but unless some authority is shewn to the Court, they are to act on the law as they find it, however unpleasant they may find it, without regard to consequences. It is a remarkable feature in this case, that this is the first time such an application has been made; and I undertake to say that, except in certain excepted cases, it is the first time such an application ever was made to the Court, and I may take the fact to be admitted, that the universal course of practice is against the application, except in those cases which have been referred to.

(a) The cases of R. v. Charlton, R. v. Davis, R. v. Morgan and Stevenson, and R. v. Byrne were [illegible] the rule books of the Court.

Now, with regard to the effect of a long course of practice, let us see what the judges have laid down upon the subject in Rex v. Wilkes, upon reference made to them in the House of Lords (19 St. Tr. 1130); it was stated (Chief Justice Wilmot delivering the unanimous opinion of the judges) that "a course of precedents and judicial proceedings in courts of justice make the law; it would be endless to cite cases upon it; a course of practice for a few years has been held to control an Act of Parliament." We are to recollect that the law is generally as I have stated it, and that it is the course of practice as affecting the subject; that it is not in the power of the Court to withhold judgment where a conviction has been had, and where the Attorney-General thinks proper to call for our judgment. Some cases have been cited by Mr. Whiteside, but I will make this one observation as regards them, one and all: they are no authority, for they all were ruled on the consent of the prosecutors; here, they not only don't consent, but they further inform the Court, that, in their opinion, if the Court should grant this application, it would cause the introduction of error upon the record. We are therefore warned that we have not authority to grant this application; and, upon looking carefully at the case of Rex v. Wilkes, and to the arguments and decisions of the judges to whom the case was left by the House of Lords, I think the observations of the counsel for the Crown are well warranted, and that to pronounce a sentence to commence at a future time, is a thing which may not be done, except in one excepted case, where a party is in custody undergoing a previous sentence; in such case, a future imprisonment may be awarded by the Court, an imprisonment which is to commence at the conclusion or termination of the former sentence, because, by adhering to that time, the prisoner has never had an opportunity of being beyond the jurisdiction of the Court,—at no time has he been at large. There is another reason given why the Court should not have such a power, that thereby every thing of an arbitrary nature is prevented. They say (1135, 19 St. Tr. p.) that it would very dangerous to give to the Court a power to pronounce a sentence to commence at a future time; for if they can postpone it for five days, they could for five years, or for fifteen years, and the sentence might be kept hanging over the heads of the parties for that time; and that is a very good reason why the Court should not have this power. Rex v. Waddington is such a case as has been mentioned, where a second sentence of imprisonment was directed to commence from the termination of the previous one. There is not only an absence of authority to warrant this Court in departing from the usual practice, but there is also the case of Rex v. Wilkes to sanction our present decision. These are the grounds on which I feel satisfied with it. In the absence of every thing to guide me in acceding to it, it would be a very strong reason indeed which should induce me to grant such an application; but I must say I feel great uneasiness in consequence, not of any doubt that I feel on the subject, but of the difference of opinion that existed upon the bench in this case, and I fully concur in the eulogium passed upon one of my learned brethren, and have great respect for the ability which that learned judge displayed in stating his reasons for differing from the other members of the Court; and on the argument of the new trial motion, he may have thrown out some expression that, upon a reconsideration of the question, he still remained of the same opinion. That is all very true, and I quite concur that that is a reason why the Court should deliberate, and act considerately. That is all very well, but there is in this case a judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench as binding as if it were the unanimous judgment of the Court, and it is entered upon the record just the same as if it was; and if the reconsideration of the dissentient judge be a matter to be taken into consideration, I may say that the other three judges have reconsidered the matter, and their adherence to the same opinion is perhaps entitled to as much consideration. But I shall say no more upon that subject. Upon the whole of this case, I consider that this application is neither founded on the principles or practice of the law, and my learned brethren concur with me in refusing it.

Burton, J.—I have gi en the present application my most anxious consideration; I will say anxious, for I do feel that there is some defect existing in the law as it at present stands; and I have often thought that the Legislature should make some alteration in the law on the subject. However, as no such law now exists, and as no precedent whatever (as has been admitted by the traversers' counsel) warrants this application, I shall merely add that I concur with the other members of the Court in refusing it, as being contrary to the practice and spirit of the law.

Crampton, J.—I concur with the rule pronounced by the other members of the court. It is not an application to stay the sentence of the Court, which might possibly have been granted, but that the imprisonment (if any) awarded to the traversers should be postponed until a certain day, which the Court should appoint. Now, by uniform usage, by continued practice, from which often the law itself has been held to spring; in fact, I might say, upon principle, a sentence following verdict involves the notion of immediate execution; but here we are called on to pronounce an unprecedented sentence. I more than doubt the power of the Court to pass the sentence. I do not go so far as to say that the present motion is intended to cause an error on the record, but it would be at all events putting questionable matter on the record. The Court should be careful of arrogating to itself the power of suspending a sentence for days, it might be, or years. If we now exert this power in mercy to the prisoners, may we not at some future day be called on to exert it by the Crown against the prisoner? We should be very slow to arrogate to ourselves this dangerous power. [His lordship then, referring to the case of R. v. Waddington, observed that the Court had always the power of superadding a sentence, to commence at the termination of a previous one, proceeded to say:] Were we to comply with the present application, we should have to pronounce a sentence, and say in the same breath, that we thought it ought not to be carried into execution. We should be called on to do this in every case in which a prisoner might say he had bonâ fide determined on bringing a writ of error; and yet there is not a case to be found in which such an application has been made, though it is a very likely application if it was warranted by law, as Courts must have sometimes pronounced erroneous judgments. It has been stated, that there are precedents for this application to be found in the rule books of this Court, but they were orders not made by the Court of its own accord, but by the consent of both parties, which renders them inapplicable as authorities in the present case. The position of the Court no doubt is a painful one, to be called on to pronounce judgment upon persons found guilty in any case by the verdict of a jury; however, we are still bound to do so; and if that position be painful, it is much more painful in a case where there is any difference of opinion amongst the members of the court; at the same time, as it has been justly said, whatever orders are made, even under those circumstances, are as much the orders of the Court as if the judges are unanimous. However, I am glad that the difference which exists is not upon the merits of the case, but upon matters of comparative insignificance. These are the reasons upon which I think that this motion ought to be refused.

Perrin, J.—The ground on which I think that the motion ought not to be granted is, that the Court have not the power which has been contended for. It is an authority capable of great abuse, and which, if possessed, might be made an instrument of great oppression; it never has been assumed by any court or judge. I cannot, therefore, contrary to the uniform course of law, hold that we can pass this sentence which is contended for. It might be made an instrument of grievous oppression; the inconveniences must be endless of pronouncing such a sentence. The case which has been relied on, (R. v. Wilkes), seems to me to afford an inference not in favour of this application, and I cannot find any precedent for it. The cases which have been adverted to, as decided in this court, do not appear to me to afford any authority for such a course. In all these cases, the Court pronounced a present judgment; and there is only one case (Rex. v. Davis), where the execution was in fact postponed; the rule of Court was pronounced for a definite period of imprisonment. In Reg. v. Charleton, he having come up himself, without any process, made an application that he might go down by himself, and not in the custody of the sheriff; so in the other cases; and certainly they were adopted without argument. I more than doubt the authority of the Court to grant such an application, and, seeing seeing the danger of great abuse, and though it might be, and would be, in my opinion, a very great good to give the Court such a power where writs of error are brought, in this case I cannot hold that the Court ought to pronounce in favour of this unprecedented application, and thereby come to a decision which might be held to be bad, and of itself to vitiate the whole proceedings. Motion refused.

Burton, J. (being the second judge of the Court) then proceeded to pass the following sentence. That Daniel O'Connell be imprisoned for the space of twelve calendar months, and pay a fine of two thousand pounds, and further enter into his own recognizance in the sum of 5,000*l.* to be of good behaviour for the space of seven years, and find two sureties for the like purpose in the sum of 2,500*l.* each, and that each of the other traversers be imprisoned for the space of nine calendar months, pay a fine of 50*l.* and perfect securities for their good behaviour, themselves in the sum of 1,000*l.* and two sureties in 500*l.* each respectively.

The traversers having expressed a wish by their counsel to be imprisoned in the Richmond Bridewell, upon the South Circular Road, the Court directed the order to be framed accordingly, and they were then handed over to the custody of the sheriff of the city of Dublin.

Reg. v. O'Connell and Others.

Quære, is a defendant after conviction entitled to obtain for the purpose of speeding a writ of error a copy of the names of the witnesses and other indorsements on the indictment, and to inspect and compare the record?

Ford, attorney for Daniel O'Connell, esq. having applied to the clerk of the Crown for liberty to inspect the record in this case for the purpose of procuring the names of the witnesses supposed to be indorsed on the indictment, and sworn and examined before the grand jury, together with the other indorsements, if any, thereon, and the clerk of the Crown having declined to permit the record to be inspected, notice was served upon the Crown solicitor, calling for a copy of the indorsements on the indictment, and a list of the names of the witnesses indorsed thereon, and for liberty to compare the same with the original, and stating that in case of refusal an application would be made to the Court to order the officer to permit the record to be inspected, and give the information required; the notice also stated that counsel had advised that the information required had become necessary in order to the preparation and speeding of a writ of error, and offered an undertaking, if required, that the names of the witnesses should not be made public, but should be used solely and altogether for the bonâ fide purposes of said writ of error, and the assignments to be founded thereon; and an affidavit was made by Mr. Ford, in which he stated, that counsel of great eminence both in England and Ireland had advised the defendants that there was good and sufficient ground for proceeding by writ of error to reverse the judgment in this case, and that he had been advised to apply for liberty to inspect the record and for the information he had called for. The Crown solicitor offered to permit a certified list of the names of the witnesses to be furnished by the officer, but refused to consent to the record being inspected, or a copy of the indorsements thereon being furnished, under these circumstances.

Whiteside, Q. C. now moved, pursuant to the above notice, and referred, in support of the application, to the affidavit of Mr. Ford, and to the case of Rex v. Midl[illegible]n (3 Bur. 1722).

Smith, A. G. and Greene, S. G. opposed the application; a similar one was refused in Rex v. Barrett (Cook & Al. 112), and in the present case no express ground had been alleged, no special case had been made to shew that the application ought to be complied with.

The Clerk of the Crown, in answer to Perrin, J. who inquired what was the ordinary course in such cases, stated that he never knew of such an application being made before.

Pennefather, C. J. was of opinion that unless some very strong and special case, shewing clearly the absolute necessity of an inspection of the record, the Court ought not to establish a precedent by granting this novel application. There appeared no reason why the information offered by the Crown would not be sufficient for the purpose of the traversers, unless they had some ulterior object in view.

Burton, J. thought that the present application was perfectly fair and reasonable, though certainly it was without a precedent; though strictly speaking, perhaps, as the traversers' counsel had not specified any reasons for the request, it ought not to be granted; but he could not see any possible objection to permitting the record to be now examined in open Court, and he could not suppose that any harm could ensue from granting the application.

Crampton, J. felt great difficulty in making a precedent, where no reason was assigned, for the Court's making a special rule. The Court was left too much in the dark respecting the object of the application; they were left to conjecture whether the object of it was to further justice or to obstruct it, and merely for the purpose of raking out errors hitherto undiscovered. He therefore thought the Court would not be warranted in granting the motion.

Perrin, J. was of opinion, that as it was the right of every subject to bring a writ of error, he was entitled to every fair and legitimate means of supporting the same. The only difficulty in his mind, save the cogent reasons assigned by the Lord Chief Judge and Mr. Justice Crampton, was, for what purpose the information was required; however, he had known instances over and over again in which a similar request had been conceded, and such being the case, and his view of the practice of the Court, he could see no substantial objection to granting the present application.

Smith, A. G.—As two members of the Court are of opinion that the application should be granted, I shall offer no further objection to it.

Bourn (Clerk of the Crown) then handed over the record to Mr. Ford for inspection, and the attorney consented also to a copy of the names being furnished, as had been originally offered by the Crown solicitor.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

As the Transfer of Property Act has necessarily excited much interest in the Profession, we have deemed it right to print it entire in the PROPERTY LAWYER. As it does not come into operation until the first of January next, we shall avail ourselves of the interval to publish an elaborate commentary upon its provisions—a task which a skilful conveyancer has undertaken for us. Of the Insolvent Debtors Bill an abstract is given, preparatory to its appearance entire in its proper place among the New Statutes. We shall not omit to lay before the Profession the important Bills introduced on the rising of the Parliament for amending the Law of Settlement, regulating the fees of Justices' Clerks, &c. as well as Mr. Gladstone's model Bill for facilitating legislation on private matters. All these will form topics of anxious discussion during the recess.

Bills in Progress.

THE PROJECTED EMBANKMENT ON THE RIVER THAMES.

We obtained on Saturday a printed copy of the Bill recently introduced by the Government relative to the Thames embankment. It is entitled "A Bill to empower her Majesty's Commissioners of Woods to form a Terrace and Embankment, with convenient Landing-places for the Public on the Middlesex shore of the River Thames, between Westminster and Blackfriars bridges." The measure, which was under the care of Lord Lincoln, M.P., and Sir G. Clerk, contains no less than 84 clauses, with a copious schedule. It is, of course, laid on the shelf until next session, being merely brought in and printed for the information of hon. members, and to afford them an opportunity of considering its provisions during the ensuing recess. Power is given to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests to carry out the purposes of the Act, the expenses to be defrayed out of the fund to be created for the execution of improvements in the metropolis. The third clause, which will be most interesting to the public at large, enacts that it shall be lawful for (that is, it empowers) the Commissioners of Woods and Works to make and construct a raised terrace and public roadway or communication from or near Whitehall-place, in the parish of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, in the city of Westminster, on or along the bed or shore of the river Thames, on the Middlesex and City of London side thereof, to or near to Chatham-place, Blackfriars, in the City of London; also to embank certain portions of the bed or shore of the river, on the Middlesex side, from Westminster-bridge to the said intended roadway, at or near the northern pier of the intended Hungerford Suspension-bridge, and also from time to time to alter, widen, divert, and remove all causeways, piles, stairs, hards, or landing-places, on the shore of the river, or projecting from the bank thereof, on the side aforesaid, between Westminster-bridge and Chatham-place; and to drive other piles, and to construct other causeways, piers, stairs, &c. in such situations and in such manner as they (the Commissioners) shall deem best suited to the convenience of the public, and to remove all mud-banks and obstructions on the bed or shore of the river, and to deepen, scour, and cleanse the same bed or shore on the Middlesex side, and to dredge and deepen any other parts of the river between Westminster-bridge and Chatham-place aforesaid; and also to make and maintain all necessary and convenient ways and communications from Whitehall-place, Villiers-street, and Savoy, Wellington-street, Surrey-street, Norfolk-street, and Arundel-street, to the intended terrace and roadway, and to construct and maintain all necessary viaducts, roads, bridges, embankments, quays, basins, banks, walls, locks, sewers, culverts, drains, arches, landing-places, tide-gates, piles, and other necessary works. The remaining clauses would not interest our readers, as they merely relate to the details of measures by which the purposes of the Act are to be carried into effect.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

LAW OF SETTLEMENT.

THURSDAY, Aug. 8.—Sir J. GRAHAM said he now rose to move for leave to bring in a Bill for the alteration of the law of settlement. There had been during this session many important discussions on the Poor Law, but the branch of it which he was now about to bring under consideration was by no means of secondary importance, as regarded the poor or the rate-payers, or the distribution of labour. About 12,000 orders of removal were annually executed in England, independent of orders against Scotch and Irish paupers, and affected about 30,000 persons. The Scotch and Irish orders were about 7,000, and affected about 15,000 persons. On the whole there were annually—

	Orders of removal.	Persons removed.
English........	12,000	30,000
Scotch and Irish	7,000	15,000
	19,000	45,000

The House would do well to consider the amount of human suffering caused by these orders of removal. It was a breaking up long established connections, and was extremely painful to the poor. At the same time, it was necessary. What the House had to consider was, whether any mitigations of it were possible. It had been observed, by no less an authority than Adam Smith, that there was not a poor man in England of forty years of age who had not had some reason to complain of the law of settlement, either in his own person or that of some member of his family. It was an extremely important and difficult subject, and the course which he proposed to take was, to repeal all the statutes with reference to settlement at present on the statute-book, and to legislate de novo. There were no less than thirty or forty Acts of Parliament at present on the subject. The Bill which he should propose would embrace the law of settlement, the law of removal and of appeal on removal, and at least so far as related to voluminousness would stand in contrast to the existing law. The subject was naturally divided into the branches of the settlement itself, the power of removal, and the law respecting the appeal upon the order. First, with respect to existing settlements, he proposed wherever there had been an order of removal, and a fixed settlement, that that settlement should not be disturbed. He then proposed to repeal the existing rights of settlement, which, he believed, were no less than nine in number. Settlements were now gained by marriage, by apprenticeship, by renting a tenement, by paying rates, by holding an estate, by hiring and service, by serving an office, and, last of all, by birth. His proposition was, that henceforth birth, and birth only, should give a settlement, and that the place of birth should be held to be the place of settlement. Failing proof of the place of birth, he proposed to admit proof of a derivative settlement in the second degree. First, he proposed to admit the father's settlement, and failing that, the settlement of the mother. He would not carry the derivative settlement any further, and he proposed that the settlement of the grandfather and the grandmother should no longer be a ground of settlement. He was now speaking only of legitimate children; and in the case of illegitimate children, he proposed to take the place of birth in the first instance, and failing that, the place of the mother's settlement. He proposed that unsettled persons should be relieved in the parish in which they became destitute till their removal. He also proposed that the register of births and deaths, and the register of baptisms, should be admitted at proofs of birth; and that a married woman should not be removed from her husband's settlement during her husband's life. He had now exhausted the first branch of the subject. He had thought that settlement by birth was the most simple; and that the derivative settlement, in the first degree from the father and mother, was also the most simple, the most sure, and the most advisable. He now came to the second branch of this subject. Any change of the law which impeded the gaining of a settlement and facilitated removals was acceptable to large and populous parishes, whilst the converse was the truth in the case of parishes in the rural districts. Any change in the law that facilitated the gaining a settlement and impeded removals was acceptable to them. And as the proposition he had made fixing birth and parentage as the groundwork of settlement would be acceptable in one quarter, he sought now to balance that by proposing to create an intermediate state between settlement and non-settlement, in which a person, though not settled in parish A could not be removed from thence to parish B, where he was settled. If, however, he became chargeable in a third parish, he would be removed to parish B, not to parish A. He should propose that the following six classes of persons should not be liable to removal—and these exceptions were intended to apply equally to Scotch and Irish as well as to other classes:—First, no man who had ordinarily resided and worked in or near the parish for five years, and had not been convicted of felony or misdemeanor, should be removable. Second, no woman residing with her husband at the time of his death in the parish of his settlement should be removable after his death to her own parish. Third, no widow, whether living in her husband's parish or elsewhere, should be removable for twelve months after his death. Fourth, no child under sixteen years of age should be removable from its father. Fifth, no legitimate child under sixteen years of age, if the father be dead, and no illegitimate child under sixteen, should be removable from its mother. Sixth, no one becoming chargeable by sickness or accident should be placed under order of removal until he had received relief forty days consecutively. He proposed to declare expressly what was now the law—viz. that all persons were to be relieved where they were found resident, irrespectively of their settlement. It was proposed also to impose a penalty on irregular removals. With regard to the procedure in cases of appeal, it was intended to enable the parties, as it were by agreement, to effect an amicable removal without the intervention of courts of law. If an order were taken out, the steps he proposed to enjoin were as follows: the overseers of the removing parish were to send to the overseers of the appellant parish a copy of the order, and a statement of the grounds for such order, within seven days. The latter document was not to contain a copy of the examination, but a statement of the grounds for the removal. Then the overseers of the appellant parish were to have twenty-one days, after the receipt of the order, to determine whether they would resist the removal or not, and if at the expiration of that period they resolved not to take the party removed, but to object to the order, they were also to send to the overseers of the removing parish a notice of appeal, and a statement of their reasons for objecting. So that a statement of the reasons on which the removal was objected to would be required. Both parties were to be concluded by these statements, and on the hearing of the appeal would not be at liberty to produce any other grounds. If no notice of appeal were given, the overseers of the removing parish might remove the pauper at the end of forty days after the notice of removal. He should then propose that the appeal should be tried at the quarter sessions next after fourteen days had elapsed from the time of given notice of appeal. The pauper might be delivered at the workhouse instead of to the overseers; and the cost of relief given during the forty days, or till the appeal was decided, might be recovered by the respondents, if successful. Notices, if properly registered, might be sent through the post-office. With regard to Scotch and Irish poor, some special enactments were rendered necessary in their case. It would be observed that he had already provided, under certain circumstances, very largely in favour of that class of paupers. But there was a difficulty connected with their removal, on account of the state of the law in Scotland and Ireland. He proposed, therefore, that rules should be framed by the justices in their respective districts which should provide, as far as might be, for removing the Scotch or Irish poor to the ports or places nearest the place of their birth or residence. He thought that at present removals were made of these people upon light and insufficient grounds, which would by no means justify a removal in England, and which removal, if it took place in England, upon appeal was almost certain to be set aside. In the case of illegal removals it was impossible to give an appeal to an Irish board of guardians or a Scotch parish; because the removal could not be to an Irish union or a Scotch parish, but to a country (in the former there was no law of settlement); and because there was no absolute right to relief created by the presence of the party in the union or parish. Being most anxious to introduce a power of appeal with reference to the removal of Scotch and Irish, he proposed to do it in this way: when any removal should take place upon illegal grounds either to Scotland or Ireland, the poor-law commissioners, on the representation of the local bodies, or of parties having an interest in the matter, should have the power to cause an appeal to be prosecuted at the sessions against the order of removal, and in the event of that order being quashed, the parish obtaining the order should pay all the costs of removal and also the costs of bringing the party back. He was satisfied this would produce great caution, and furnish a salutary constraint on the removal of paupers on insufficient grounds. Above all, he was satisfied it would give due protection to those natives of Scotland and Ireland who have given the flower of their youth and industry for the benefit of this country. He had now stated the grounds on which, after much deliberation and anxious care, he had thought it his duty to propose to the House this alteration in the law of settlement. He was fully aware of the great advantage of laying a Bill of this description on the table of the House on the eve of the recess, from the jealousy with which all such subjects were watched, and the great advantage the Government would derive from the suggestions and information they would doubtless receive, and to which it would be their duty to pay attention. He was not so vain as to believe there might not be good and solid objections against the alteration in the law of settlement which he proposed. Some might think it would benefit only the towns, and others only the rural districts; but it was his belief that it would conduce to the benefit of the whole country. He believed, also, it was most salutary and humane as respected Scotland and Ireland, and not in the least unjust towards England. He was obliged to the House for their attention, and had now only to repeat that if his proposition should be in any degree successful, it would at all events have the merit of repealing thirty or forty statutes—many of them conflicting statutes—and placing the whole country on a firm and intelligible footing, to the principle of which, whatever objection there might be as to details, he could anticipate no solid objection. The right hon. baronet concluded by moving for leave to bring in a Bill to consolidate and amend the laws relating to parochial settlement, and the removal of paupers.—The Bill was then brought in and read a first time.

MAGISTRATES' CLERKS, &c. BILL.

Sir J. Graham said he now rose to bring in the last Bill of the present session. (Hear.) He moved for leave to bring in a Bill to regulate the appointment and payment of clerks of the peace, of clerks to justices, clerks of petty sessions, of assize, and similar public officers. With respect to clerks to justices of the peace, and clerks to magistrates in particular, he proposed that their labours, instead of being paid by fees, should be paid by salaries. (Hear.) He further proposed that magistrates should in future exercise their duties in public (Hear), that they should meet on fixed days in petty sessions to conduct their proceedings publicly, and that no magistrate should be permitted in future to discharge the duties of a justice of the peace at his own house. (Hear.) The provisions more immediately relating to magistrates' clerks, clerks of the peace, arraigns, indictments, &c. were these:—The justices of each division were to elect a clerk, and that clerk must be an attorney of not less than five years' standing; justices' clerks, &c. were to be paid by salary out of the county rates, and not by fees, and the amount of the salary was to be determined by the magistrates in quarter sessions. In future, the fees received by the clerks were to be paid into the county fund. The duties of the clerks were also defined for the purpose of insuring regularity and saving expense to those who sought for justice. The next provision was, that clerks of the peace were to make out an account of fees received by them in each year of the seven years next preceding the 1st of January, 1844. The Secretary of State for the Home Department was empowered to examine into the legality of those fees, and to ascertain and certify the gross net annual value of the lawful fees and emoluments of clerks of the peace. It was further proposed to give clerks of the peace power to receive lawful fees until otherwise directed. If the amount of fees received by existing clerks of the peace should, in any year, exceed the amount certified by the Secretary of State, the surplus was to be paid to the Treasury; but if the fees should fall short of that amount, the deficiency was to be made good out of the Consolidated Fund. The Bill defined the duties of clerks of the peace, and further provided that on the death or dismissal of any clerk of the peace, his successor was to be paid out of the county rates, and the amount of salary to be determined by the magistrates in quarter sessions, and the fees received by him were to be paid into the county stock. By the Bill power was given to the Secretary of State to prepare and settle uniform tables of fees to be taken by clerks to magistrates, clerks of the peace, of assize, of arraigns, of indictments, by associates, and by other such public officers. Traverse fees were to be abolished, as well as all fees in the nature of proclamation or acquittal fees, or fees respecting the discharge of any recognizance. (Hear.) It was further provided that any person taking fees other than those approved of by the Secretary of State should be liable to a penalty of 5*l*. The last provision he should notice was that municipal corporations were empowered to agree with present or future officers to pay by salary instead of fees. He had now stated the heads of the Bill, and he sincerely believed that its principle and provisions would be found to tend greatly to the public advantage.—To a question from Mr. Morris, Sir J. Graham was understood to say that the great object of the Bill was to secure an effective and inexpensive administration of justice; and though one of the provisions made it requisite that the clerks should be attorneys, this appointment was not to prohibit them from practising in their profession.—Mr. B. Denison said a few words, but was inaudible in the gallery.—Captain Pechell considered the Bill would improve the existing state of things. He hoped, however, that petty sessions would not to be granted to those places which had not proper accommodation for the magistrates. He thought that the practice of holding sessions at inns and public-houses ought to be done away with; and he considered that those places which failed to provide a proper building for the bench ought not to have the privilege of petty sessions. With respect to the alteration in the appointment of clerks of the peace and to magistrates, he hoped those attorneys who were violent political partisans would not be allowed to be eligible to the office.—Mr. B. Escott said the highest object a Secretary of State could attain was the purification of the country from that gross system of extortion which had been hitherto practised in those departments which the Bill particularly referred to. He would not enter upon the details; he would content himself with one remark in relation to the provision for abolishing fees. It was proposed that fifty years' usage should be taken as an evidence of the legality of such fees. But what he submitted was, that, in cases where fifty years of gross extortion had existed, the clerks, before sending in their average incomes, should first have this system of extortion put an end to. He recollected an instance where three persons had been indicted for perjury at the Dorset assizes, when the expenses they were put to before they were suffered to plead amounted to 9*l*. sterling. He had known another case, in which two respectable persons in nearly the same circumstances, anxious to come immediately to the trial, had been put to an expense of 24*l*. before pleading, and told they could not come to their trial immediately without the consent of their prosecutor. The same had happened even at the quarter sessions. Now this was occasioned in part by men who knew they were by their extortionate conduct liable to indictment and a penalty. All he wished was, that, before the Home was called upon by those parties for remuneration under this Bill, they should be furnished with information as to which of those parties had been guilty of extortion, so that they might not be suffered to raise an exorbitant claim upon the amount of their own extortions.—Mr. Wakley supported the Bill, which he thought would prove extremely beneficial in its operation.—Mr. G. Knight said the country was in this instance deeply indebted to the right hon. bart. who had admirably done his work this session, in his attempt to improve the law. Never in his experience had the situation of Secretary of State for the Home Department been more ably filled. (Hear, hear.) Leave was then given to bring in the Bill, which was read a first, and ordered to be read a second time that day three months. The Parochial Settlements Bill was introduced, read a first, and ordered to be read a second time that day three months.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENTS.

Mr. Brotherton inquired whether it was the intention of the Government to introduce a Bill in the next sessions of Parliament, either to abolish capital punishments altogether, or to extend the exceptions from it; and then proceeded to read a letter which he had received from Nottingham, respecting the accident that occurred at the execution there on Wednesday.—Sir J. Graham said he had no hesitation whatever in telling the hon. gentleman that her Majesty's Government had no intention to introduce any measure on that subject. His opinion was entirely the reverse of that expressed by the hon. gentleman, as regarded the moral effect of executions in cases of murder. At the same time, he must express his deep regret at the fatal occurrence which had taken place at Nottingham; though he must say he had never heard an inference which appeared to him to have so little foundation, as that this fatal catastrophe was at all to be ascribed to the bad moral effect of a public execution. (Hear, hear.) The event might have occurred at a horse-race, or even, through sudden panic, in a chapel. He repeated that he had no intention of proposing either the abolition or the remission, in certain cases, of capital punishments.

NEW STATUTES.

Of the Session 8 Victoria.

[In this record of actual Legislation, we adopt the plan of giving the titles alone of the statutes of no general or professional interest; and analyses of the more important changes in the law, printing at length such statutes or parts of statutes only as are of particular interest to our readers.]

Cap. XXIII.

An Act to continue for Five Years an Act of the second and third years of her present Majesty, for the better Prevention and Punishment of Assaults in Ireland. (July 4, 1844.)

Cap. XXIV.

An Act for Abolishing the Offences of Forestalling, Regrating, and Engrossing, and for repealing certain Statutes passed in restraint of Trade. (July 4, 1844.)

This statute extends the 12 Geo. 3, c. 71, to Scotland and Ireland, and then provides:—

That after the passing of this Act the several offences of badgering, engrossing, forestalling, and regrating be utterly taken away and abolished, and that no information, indictment, suit, or prosecution shall lie either at common law or by virtue of any statute, or be commenced or prosecuted against any person for or by reason of any of the said offences or supposed offences.

Sec. 2 repeals the following statutes and parts of statutes:—

51 Hen. 3, Judicium Pilloriæ; 12 Edw. 2, c. 6; Temp. Hen. 3, Edw. 1, Edw. 2, c. 7, 10; 23 Edw. 3, c. 6; 25 Edw. 3, stat. 4, c. 3; 27 Edw. 3, stat. 1, c. 3, stat. 2, c. 11; 31 Edw. 3, stat. 2, stat. 3; 35 Edw. 3; 37 Edw. 3, c. 5; 37 Edw. c. 15; 2 Rich. 2, stat. 1, c. 2; 13 Rich. 2, stat. 1, c. 8; 4 Hen. 4, c. 25; 25 Hen. 8, c. 2; 28 Hen. 8, c. 14; 3 & 4 Edw. 6, c. 19; 3 & 4 Edw. 6, c. 21; 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 15; 1503, c. 38; 1535, c. 26; 1540, c. 16, 18, 32; 1555, c. 35; 1579, c. 26; 1592, c. 70; 1661, c. 280; 4 Edw. 4, c. 2; 37 Hen. 8, c. 2; 11 Eliz. c. 4; 2 Anne, c. 15; 9 Anne. c. 7; 10 Geo. 1, c. 10, s. 1; 15 Geo. 2, c. 9; 31 Geo. 2, c. 8; 13 & 14 Geo. 3, c. 22, s. 73; 27 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 3.

Sec. 3 enacts, that the Acts repealed as to Great Britain by 12 Geo. 3, c. 71, be repealed as to Great Britain and Ireland.

Nothing in this Act to apply to spreading false rumours.—Provided always, and be it enacted, that nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to apply to the offence of knowingly and fraudulently spreading or conspiring to spread any false rumour, with intent to enhance or decry the price of any goods or merchandize, or to the offence of preventing or endeavouring to prevent by force or threats any goods, wares, or merchandize being brought to any fair or market, but that every such offence may be inquired of, tried, and punished as if this Act had not been made.

Cap. XXV.

An Act to repeal the Duty of Excise on Vinegar, and to make the Duties and Drawbacks now payable on Flint-glass the same as on Bottle-glass. (July 4, 1844.)

Sec. 1 recites 6 Geo. 4, c. 37, and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 44, and then proceeds to enact, that after the passing of this Act, the duties and regulations for securing the duty on vinegar to cease, save as to any arrear of duty or penalty, and gives permission to the Commissioners of the Treasury to remit certain of the duties on vinegar, &c. before the passing of this Act.

Sec. 2. Vinegar-makers to take out licenses as heretofore.

Sec. 3. Vinegar-makers to make entry of their premises and utensils with the excise as directed by statutes 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53; 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 51; 4 & 5 Vict. c. 20.

Sec. 4. Vinegar-makers having stills, are to use them only subject to such rules as the Commissioners of Excise may direct.

Sec. 5. From 5th July, 1844, the present duties and drawbacks on flint-glass to cease, and the following duties and drawbacks to be granted and allowed in lieu thereof, viz.:

Duties.

Per cwt. of fluxed materials .... 2s. 6d.

Drawbacks.

Per cwt. of flint-glass, or materials for making 6 3 and 5 per cent. additional thereon.

Sec. 6. New duties and drawbacks to be under the management of the Commissioners of Excise.

Sec. 7. For making the charge on flint-glass, an account to be made out at the end of each six weeks of the whole quantity of glass charged with duty, and of the whole weight of glass weighed within such period, and, in lieu of twopence charged by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 44, three-farthings per lb. additional to be charged on all excess above forty per cent.

Sec. 8. The regulation of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 44, that no drawback be allowed on glass not worth five-pence per lb. exclusive of the duty, repealed as to flint-glass.

Sec. 9. The enactment of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 44, that shades or cylinders of uncoloured flint-glass shall not be opened or flattened out, except as thereby allowed, repealed.

Sec. 10. Flint-glass maker not to open or flatten out any shade or cylinder, nor to cast or press any flint-glass into panes or plates of the dimensions of six inches by four.

Sec. 11. Nothing herein to affect the provision of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 44, s. 92, as to glass used for optical instruments or purposes of science.

Sec. 12. Makers of flint-glass enabled to make a stove-glass not to be sold or consumed before the time appointed for the duty now payable to cease.

Sec. 13. Glass may be taken out of store before the 6th of July, notice being given, on payment of full duty.

Sec. 14. Makers of flint-glass not securing, or fraudulently removing glass so intended to be stored, liable to full duty, together with penalties.

CAP. XXVI.

An Act for authorizing her Majesty to carry into immediate execution, by Orders in Council, any Treaties for the Suppression of the Slave Trade. (July 4, 1844.)

CAP. XXVII.

An Act to explain and amend an Act of the last Session of Parliament, intituled, "An Act for extending to Ireland the Provisions not already in force there of an Act of the third and fourth Years of the Reign of the late King William the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act for the Limitation of Actions and Suits relating to Real Property, and for simplifying the Remedies for trying the Rights thereto;' and to explain and amend the said Act." (July 4, 1844.)

We copy this statute entire, as it affects titles to property in Ireland.

6 & 7 Vict. c. 54. Recited Act not to affect any action, &c. commenced before 1st Jan. 1845 relating to any right to presentation —Whereas an Act was passed in the sixth and seventh years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for extending to Ireland the Provisions not already in force there of an Act of the third and fourth Years of the Reign of the late King William the Fourth, intituled 'An Act for the Limitation of Actions and Suits relating to Real Property, and for simplifying the Remedies for trying the Rights thereto;' and to explain and amend the said Act:" and whereas by the said recited Act it was enacted, that from and after the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and forty-four the several clauses and enactments in the said Act of the third and fourth years of the reign of the late King William the Fourth contained, and thereinbefore recited, relating to any right to present to or bestow any church, vicarage, or other ecclesiastical benefice (except as therein is excepted) should extend and apply to Ireland, and that as fully and effectually as if the same clauses and enactments were there repeated, substituting for the date of the first day of December one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, therein mentioned, the said date of the first day of January one thousand eight hundred and forty-four: And whereas it was by the said recited Act provided and enacted, that the said recited Act should not be prejudicial to or available for any plaintiff or defendant in any other action or suit then already commenced, or on or before the first day of January one thousand eight hundred and forty-five to be commenced, relating to any right to present to or bestow any church, vicarage, or other ecclesiastical benefice in Ireland: And whereas doubts have arisen as to whether, under the said hereinbefore recited provision, the time therein adverted to for limiting any action or suit relatin to any right to present to or bestow any church, vi carage, or other ecclesiastical benefice in Ireland was to expire on the first day of January one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, or on the first day of January one thousand eight hundred and forty-five: And whereas it is necessary to remove such doubts, and to explain and amend the said hereinbefore recited provisions of the said recited Act, and to further amend the said recited Act: Be it therefore declared and enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the said recited Act shall not be prejudicial to or available for any plaintiff or defendant in any action or suit already commenced, or on or before the said first day of January one thousand eight hundred and forty-five to be commenced, relating to any right to present to or bestow any church, vicarage, or other ecclesiastical benefice in Ireland.

2. Where actions within prescribed limits are abated by deaths of parties new actions may be commenced.—And be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, that if and when any action or suit relating to any right to present to or bestow any church, vicarage, or other ecclesiastical benefice in Ireland already commenced, or which shall hereafter be commenced within the limitations prescribed by the said recited Act or this Act, shall become abated by the death or marriage of any party thereto, it shall and may be lawful to and for the plaintiff or plaintiffs therein, or the heir-at-law or the personal representative of the plaintiff or plaintiffs therein, according to the alleged estate or title of such plaintiff or plaintiffs in respect of the subject matter of said actions or suits, or for the person or persons claiming to be entitled in remainder or reversion expectant upon the estate of such plaintiff or plaintiffs to the right to present to or bestow the church, vicarage, or other ecclesiastical benefice in Ireland for which such action or suit shall have been so commenced, to bring a new action to enforce his, her, or their right to present to or bestow such church, vicarage, or other ecclesiastical benefice in Ireland, provided such new actions shall be commenced within twelve calendar months from the abatement of such preceding action or suit, any thing in the said recited Acts or either of them or in this Act contained notwithstanding.

CAP. XXVIII.

An Act for Granting to her Majesty, until the Fifth Day of July, 1845, certain Duties on Sugars imported into the United Kingdom for the Service of the Year 1844. (July 4, 1844.)

CAP. XXIX.

An Act to extend an Act of the Ninth Year of King George the Fourth, for the more effectual Prevention of Persons going armed by Night for the Destruction of Game. (July 4, 1844.)

This statute we reprint verbatim:—

9 Geo. 4, c. 69. Punishments and forfeitures imposed by the recited Act on persons by night destroying game or rabbits in any open or inclosed land to apply to persons by night destroying game or rabbits on any public road, &c.—Whereas an Act was passed in the ninth year of the reign of his Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the more effectual Prevention of Persons going armed by Night for the Destruction of Game," whereby it is enacted, that if any person shall, after the passing of the said Act, by night, unlawfully take or destroy any game or rabbits in any land, whether open or inclosed, such offender should, upon conviction thereof before two justices of the peace, be liable to be punished, and to find security for good behaviour, as in the said Act specified; and it was further thereby enacted, that if any person should be found upon any land committing any such offence as is hereinbefore mentioned, such person might be seized and apprehended, and committed to custody, and in case of any assault or violence should be punished as in the said Act set forth; and whereas the provisions of the said Act have of late years been evaded and defeated, by the destruction, by armed persons at night, of game or rabbits, not upon open or inclosed lands, as described in the said Act, but upon public roads and highways, and other roads and paths leading through such lands, and also at the gates, outlets, and openings between such lands, and roads, highways, and paths, so that not only has the destruction of game or rabbits not been prevented, but the risk of murder and other grievous offences contemplated by the said Act has been increased, and great danger and alarm occasioned to persons using such roads, highways, and paths; and it is expedient that the remedies provided by the said Act against such offences as hereinbefore mentioned should be extended and applied to the like offences committed upon such roads, highways, and paths: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the passing of this Act all the pains, punishments, and forfeitures imposed by the said Act upon persons by night unlawfully taking or destroying any game or rabbits in any land, open or inclosed, as therein set forth, shall be applicable to and imposed upon any person by night unlawfully taking or destroying any game or rabbits on any public road, highway, or path, or the sides thereof, or at the openings, outlets, or gates from any such land into any such public road, highway, or path, in the like manner as upon any such land, open or inclosed; and it shall be lawful for the owner or occupier of any land adjoining either side of that part of such road, highway, or path where the offender shall be, and the gamekeeper or servant of such owner or occupier, and any person assisting such gamekeeper or servant, and for all the persons authorized by the said Act to apprehend any offender against the provisions thereof, to seize and apprehend any person offending against the said Act or this Act; and the said Act, and all the powers, provisions, authorities, and jurisdictions therein or thereby contained or given, shall be as applicable for carrying this Act into execution as if the same had been herein specially set forth.

2. Act may be amended this session.—And be it enacted, that this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed during this session of Parliament.

CAP. XXX.

An Act to alter and amend an Act of the 53rd Year of King George the Third, for the Appointment of a Stipendiary Magistrate to act within the Townships of Manchester and Salford. (July 4, 1844.)

CAP. XXXI.

An Act for the Warehousing of Foreign Goods for Home Consumption at the Borough of Manchester in the County of Lancaster. (July 4, 1844.)

POST-OFFICE ESPIONAGE.

COMMONS' REPORT.

The Committee of Secrecy appointed to inquire into the state of the law in respect of the detaining and opening of letters at the General Post-office, and into the mode under which the authority given for such detaining and opening has been exercised, and to report their opinion and observations thereupon to the House, and to whom several petitions were referred;—have examined the matters to them referred, and have agreed to the following report:—

Your committee, in performance of the duty which the House has devolved upon them, of inquiring into the state of the law respecting the detaining and opening of letters at the General Post-office, beg to state in the outset that although the wording of the 33rd and 36th chapters of the 1st of Victoria, which now mainly regulate the Post-office, is, in respect of the matter in hand, somewhat different from that of the 10th chapter of the 9th of Anne, for which they were substituted, yet that there appears to be no such variance between the statutes of those two periods respectively as to prevent your committee from assuming, for the convenience of their inquiry, that the same powers are conveyed or recognized in all.

The inquiry, therefore, what the state of the law now is respecting such detention and opening, is reduced to the inquiry what the state of the law was, respecting the same matter, immediately on the passing of the statute of Anne, unless, in the intervening period, the principles which regulate the interpretation of Acts in general should have undergone modification, or cases should have been decided in the superior courts of law which might have a bearing on the construction to be given to this particular Act. With that reservation, the law on the matter in question was the same in 1711 that it is in 1844.

In preference to discussing the purely legal question, how far the statute of Anne, in recognizing the practice, on the part of the secretaries of state, of issuing warrants to open letters, rendered it lawful for the secretaries of state to issue such warrants, your committee propose, so far as they have materials for that purpose, to give the history of the practice, prior and subsequent to the passing of that statute: these materials being such as ought not to be overlooked in investigating the grounds on which the exercise of this authority rests.

In these early researches your committee will have occasion to inquire into the condition of the posts in this country at various periods of our history, and into the connection that subsisted between them and the supreme authorities of the country. In these inquiries your committee have been assisted by Sir Francis Palgrave, of the Rolls Office, by Messrs. Lechmere and Leman, of the State Paper Office, and by Mr. Reeve, of the Council Office.

It does not appear at what precise period the Crown undertook to be the regular carrier of letters for its subjects. The Crown, doubtless, found it necessary, at a very early period, to the exercise of the functions of sovereignty, to be able to convey with speed and security its own despatches from one part of the realm to another, and from and to parts beyond the seas; and for that purpose it appointed certain messengers or runners, called posts. These posts were also employed for the personal convenience of the sovereign, and the individuals composing the royal court. In course of time, a master of the post was appointed, and the first of these on record was Brian Tuke, esq. afterwards Sir Brian Tuke, knight, who held that office in 1516, and whose letter to Thomas Cromwell, respecting the performance of its duties, dated 17th August, 1533, is given in the appendix. The joint successors of Sir Brian Tuke were, Sir William Paget, knight, privy councillor, and one of Henry the Eighth's chief secretaries, and John Mason, esq. secretary for the French tongue. The letters patent, dated 12th November, 1545, conveying to them this office, grant to them during their lives and the life of the survivor, the office of master of the messengers, runners, or posts, as well within the kingdom of England as in parts beyond the seas in the King's dominions, together with the wages or fee of 66*l.* 13s. 4d. a year, to be held by themselves or their sufficient deputy or deputies, &c. But, besides his fee, the master of the posts received from the Crown the amount of his expenses for conveying letters, of which he rendered in an account, many samples of which are given in the appendix. There is a succession of patents (including recitals of patents), granting the same office, at the same fee, to other parties for life, in the times of Elizabeth, James I. and Charles I.

With regard to correspondence conveyed by other messengers than their own, our monarchs viewed it with great suspicion; but it was especially towards letters arriving from or going to parts beyond the seas that their vigilance seems to have been directed. The frequency of disputed successions to the Crown, and the constant jealousy entertained of the Court of Rome, will assist in explaining their desire to prevent such correspondence. All letters coming from beyond the seas were directed to be seized; but in the time of Edward II. to whose reign the first record of this kind belongs, the King's bailiffs, in assisting the admiral of the fleet to search for letters, were forbidden, under the pretext of such powers, to attack or oppress any merchants or others crossing the seas. The open seizure by Wolsey, in 1525, of the despatches sent from this country by the ambassador of the Emperor Charles V. is a proof of the extraordinary jealousy with which foreign correspondence was regarded, and of the vigilance with which it was watched.

After the grant of the office of Master of the Posts to any new person, a royal proclamation always followed, to notify the new appointment. Consequent on the grant of the office by Queen Elizabeth, in the year 1590, to John Stanhope, esq. there is a proclamation, prohibiting all persons whatsoever from gathering up, receiving, bringing, or carrying out of the realm any letters or packets, without the allowance of the masters and comptrollers of the posts, or their deputies. "All mayors, bailiffs, &c. are ordered to make diligent search for all mails, &c. of all such disavowed carriers, &c. or suspected persons, coming into or going out of the realm with packets of letters; and all such to apprehend, &c. keeping them in safe custody, until, by the view of their writings, sent up to the Privy Council, it be seen and advised what further shall be done with them." Exception is made of the despatches of her Majesty's principal secretaries, of ambassadors, and of others sufficiently authorized. Similar prohibitions are contained in the proclamations announcing the appointment of new postmasters in the two subsequent reigns.

The practice probably began at an early period, and afterwards grew into a regular custom, of allowing private persons to avail themselves of the King's posts for transmitting their correspondence. This probably became a perquisite to the postmasters, while, at the same time, it gave to ministers of state the power of narrowly inspecting the whole of the written communications of this country.

The employment of the posts for carrying the letters of the subjects of the Crown is recognized in a proclamation, dated 1591, consequent on the before-recited grant by Queen Elizabeth, to John Stanhope, esq. of the office of Master of the Queen's posts. The Lord Treasurer and others are thereby directed to notify to all merchants, both strangers and others, in the city of London, that they are not to take upon them to employ any disavowed persons to convey their letters, but are to use such only as are lawfully appointed for that purpose. The same direction is repeated in a proclamation of James I. dated 1609. In the year 1628, in an address from the House of Commons to Charles I. it is stated that the deputy of the King's postmaster, appointed to carry the letters from the Crown beyond the seas, was likewise employed for the same purpose by the English merchants.

With regard to inland letters, in a document obtained from the State Paper-office, and dated 1635, it is stated that the King's postmaster carried the subjects' letters, but up to that time had never reaped any benefit from it.

The officer who has been hitherto mentioned as the King's postmaster was the master of the posts within the King's dominions, at home or beyond the seas. To him, however, had hitherto belonged the transmission of letters both at home and abroad; but in 1619 a new patent-office was established by James I. called that of the postmaster of England for foreign parts out of the King's dominions. The patent gave rise to a long legal contest between Lord Stanhope, who held the former of these two offices, and Matthew de Quester, the new patentee. During these proceedings, lest the merchants of London should sustain inconvenience from interruption to their foreign correspondence, an order was issued permitting them to convey their letters to and from parts beyond the seas, by messengers of their own choosing; and moreover, the lords of the council, to whom the dispute had been referred, advised De Quester, by letter, not to give any interruption to the conveyance and reconveyance of the merchants' letters. On the subject of this letter, the Secretary of State, Sir John Coke, wrote to his co-Secretary of State, Lord Conway, calling the power of sending foreign letters a branch of the royal authority, affirming that no place in Christendom can be named where merchants are allowed to send their letters by other posts than those authorized by the State; that his colleague best knew what account they shall be able to give in their places of that which passeth by letters in or out of the land, if every man may convey letters, under the covers of merchants, to whom and what place he pleaseth, &c. The order, "upon weighty reasons of state," was afterwards limited to the company of Merchant Adventurers alone, and they were only to convey their letters to the towns of Hamburg and Delf, and they were to give bond to carry no other letters than those concerning the company; no one was to be appointed messenger to the company, unless approved of by the Secretaries of State; the other companies of merchants were to send their despatches by De Quester only; and in times of war and danger to the state, the said company, and all other companies of merchants, if required, were to acquaint the Secretaries of State, from time to time, with their letters and despatches into foreign parts.

In the end, by the influence of the Crown, Lord Stanhope was made to surrender his patent. De Quester's patent came into possession of one Thomas Witherings, who suggested to the Crown a plan for the entire re-organization of the inland posts, which, instead of producing at that time any revenue to the state, were a burthen to it of 3,400*l.* per annum. The plan proposed consisted essentially of three parts: the establishment of fixed rates of postage; substituting horse-posts, which were to travel at the rate of 120 miles in twenty-four hours, instead of foot-posts, which travelled at the rate of eighteen miles, and giving to the public generally the use of the Post-office. This plan was adopted; Witherings was appointed to the office, and thus became centered in the same person the offices of postmaster for inland and for foreign letters. In 1635 and 1637 appeared two proclamations, to notify and give effect to the new plan of Mr. Witherings; and in both these there were clauses prohibiting any other than Mr. Witherings or his deputies from carrying letters.

In 1640, on a charge of divers abuses and misdemeanors committed by Witherings in the execution of his said two offices, they were sequestered into the hands of Philip Burlamachi, of London, merchant, who was to execute the same under the care and oversight of the principal secretaries of state; and without tracing at this day the disputes which the conflicting pretensions of different individuals to the possession of these offices gave rise in the year 1642, it will be sufficient to say that, shortly afterwards, the management of the affairs of the Post-office fell into the hands of Mr. Prideaux, who was chairman of the committee appointed by the House to consider the inland department of the Post-office, and was afterwards, under the Commonwealth, Attorney-General to the state. Mr. Prideaux was appointed Master of the Posts in 1644, by the authority of both Houses of Parliament.

The validity of the clause in the grant to Witherings of the inland letter-office, prohibiting any but the persons appointed by the patentee from receiving or delivering letters at any place where the patentee should settle posts, was brought in question, in 1646, before a committee of the House of Lords. Two of the judges were appointed assistants to the committee, and were expressly ordered to report their opinion as to all such particulars concerning the validity of the patent as the committee might think fit to ask them, and they reported, "That the inland letter office patent was well erected; that the clauses of restraint, in the said patent, are void and not good in law; that notwithstanding these clauses be void, yet the patent is good for the rest." The foreign letter-office patent was not referred to the consideration of the committee.

According to the law as expounded by the two judges, no person, under the authority of letters patent from the Crown, could, without an Act of Parliament, lawfully set up any exclusive title to carry mails of letters from one part of the kingdom to another. It appears that in 1650 the Common Council of the city of London, not satisfied with the footing on which Mr. Prideaux, then Attorney-General, had placed the posts, of conveying letters into all parts of the nation only once a week, endeavoured of their own authority to settle posts on the several roads, which were to run twice a week; and this they had actually done in the whole line of the road to Scotland. On a report to that effect from the Council of State, the Parliament resolved, "that the offices of postmasters, inland and foreign, are and ought to be in the sole power and disposal of the Parliament;" and they referred it to the Council of State to consider how those offices might best be settled; and in the mean time to take orders for the present management thereof.

These offices continued, until 1653, to be managed by Mr. Prideaux. They were farmed in 1653, and in 1655 the management of them was intrusted to Mr. Secretary Thurloe on his giving security for the then present rent of 10,000*l.* a year.

In 1657, a Bill for the settling of the postage of England, Scotland, and Ireland was laid, by order of the Protector, before his Parliament, and passed with some amendments. It provided for the establishing one general post-office, and one postmaster-general, to be appointed under letters patent by the Lord Protector and his successors, such officer and his deputies (with certain reservation) to have exclusively authority to carry inland and foreign letters, and of horsing all thorough posts, and persons riding by post to and from any post-roads, with power to levy certain rates for conveyance of letters and horsing of posts; imposing penalties on any persons other than the postmaster-general or his deputies, who shall set up posts for the conveying of letters or horsing posts; providing for the forwarding by post of ship letters, for the exercise of superintendence over the postmaster by the Lord Protector and his successors, and giving power to the Lord Protector and his successors to farm the post-office for life, or for any term not exceeding eleven years.

RAILWAYS.

The following is the sixth report from the Select Committee on Railways:—

The Select Committee appointed to consider whether any and what new provisions ought to be introduced into such railway Bills as may come before this House during the present or future sessions, for the advantage of the public and the improvement of the railway system, and likewise to consider whether any and what changes ought to be made in the standing orders relating to railways, and to report their opinion thereon to the House; and who were empowered to report their opinion from time to time; and who were instructed that they had power to consider of any arrangements advantageous to the public with regard to existing railway companies generally, to which, in the opinion of the committee, Parliament might justly give its sanction; and who were further empowered to report the minutes of evidence taken before to the House; have further examined into the matters to them referred, and have agreed to the following report:—

The committee, in the prosecution of their endeavours to suggest provisions for the more satisfactory and efficient management in future sessions of the proceedings connected with railway Bills, have taken into their consideration two questions: the first, whether they should recommend the introduction of a general railway Act, which might embody in the general law all such enactments as are in the main common to the Acts of incorporation of each particular company; and the second, whether they should advise the resumption, in the next session, of the rule which has been applied experimentally by the House during the present year, namely that of referring all Bills relating to competing lines of railway to select committees formed exclusively of independent members, instead of the ordinary committees taken from the Speaker's list, with the addition of a certain number of independent members; or, further, whether they should propose that a similar mode of proceeding should be adopted in the case of railway Bills of other classes, or even of railway Bills universally.

As respects the first of these two subjects, the committee apprehend that the proceedings upon railway Bills would be simplified, and the Bills themselves rendered much more concise and intelligible, if a general railway Act, providing for all matters common and undisputed, should be passed. They are, therefore, inclined to recommend that a Bill for this purpose should be introduced, and that her Majesty's Government should consider whether it could, with a prospect of advantage, be laid on the table even during the present session, with a view to its at once attracting the notice of members of the House and of parties out of doors, and of giving time for the consideration of their suggestions, in order that it might be re-introduced at the commencement of the next session, and then expeditiously passed into a law. There are some questions of general application, as, for example, that of the power to vary charges, and of the respective rights of railway companies and independent carriers over the lines of railway, which have not yet been finally adjusted; as respects the latter, the committee have recommended in a previous report that its consideration should be postponed until a future period; and as respects the former, the clause now commonly inserted in the Acts, called the Equal-Rate clause, is not free from ambiguity, and the committee doubt whether, if a general Bill be introduced in time enough to pass into a law before the Railway Bills of next year shall come under the notice of the House, it will be practicable to include in it provisions relating to these particular questions. But such provisions might be added at a future period, and in the meantime a certain amount of public advantage would be attained by the course which they recommend.

As respects the constitution of committees on railway Bills, the committee are of opinion that the experiment of the present year has worked in a manner which, when the difficulties, serious in their nature, and almost wholly new, attending the consideration of Bills for the construction of competing lines, are taken into view, would, upon the whole, be deemed satisfactory, and they think the House has particular reason to be gratified with the mode in which the selection of members to serve upon the new committees has been made.

If, therefore, they refrain from offering any prospective recommendation at the present moment, it is not from any mistrust of the results likely to arise from a further or continued application of the same principle, but because they do not consider themselves, as yet, to be in a condition to determine, with the greatest advantage, whether it is desirable to extend the scale of its application, and, if so, in what degree, inasmuch as only experience can shew what effect the previous examination of railway schemes in certain cases, and of railway Bills, by the Board of Trade, will have in reducing the amount and difficulty of the labours attending the inquiries of the committees of the House. It may also happen that one result of these examinations, from which private interests are to be excluded, may be to add some weight-to the arguments which may be urged in favour of the presence of members locally connected upon private Bill committees.

They would, therefore, advise that the question should be postponed until the opening of the next session, when, as they are led to believe, the house will have more ample means than it now possesses of estimating the necessity and advantage of simply continuing, or of continuing and extending, or, on the other hand, of abandoning the system of referring Railway Bills to committees from which local influence is extended.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

The various important statutes of the last session will engage attention for some time, and must necessarily exclude many other matters set down for insertion; but the leisure of the next two months will enable us to bring up all arrears.

We direct attention to the very full and interesting account furnished to us by a member of the Cour Royale, of the proceedings and judgment in the quarrel between the French Bar and the President Seguier. We congratulate the Council sincerely upon the warm support they have received from the rest of the Profession, in their struggle to maintain that position of dignity and respect to which they are in every way entitled. An independent Bar is the strongest bulwark of justice.

THE PROPERTY LAWYER.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT.

We take the earliest opportunity of presenting to our readers a verbatim copy of this important statute. As it does not come into operation until the 1st of January next, ample time will be allowed for its consideration, and we are happy to state that a skilful conveyancer has undertaken to favour the Law Times with a treatise upon its various provisions.

Cap. LXXVI.

AN ACT TO SIMPLIFY THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY.

(August 6, 1844.)

For simplifying the assurance of property by deed, be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows; that is to say,

1. Meaning of words defined: Land, Freehold, Conveyance, Person. Number and gender.—That the words and expressions hereinafter mentioned, which in their ordinary signification have a more confined or a different meaning, shall in this Act, except where the nature of the provision or the context of the Act shall exclude such construction, be interpreted as follows: that is to say, the word "land" shall extend to manors, advowsons, messuages, lands, tithes, tenements, and hereditaments, whether corporeal or incorporeal, and to any undivided share thereof, and to any estate or interest therein, and to money subject to be invested in the purchase of land or any interest therein. The word "freehold" shall extend to customary freehold, or such customary land as will pass by deed, or deed and surrender, and not by surrender alone. The word "conveyance" shall extend to a feoffment, grant, release, surrender, or other assurance of freehold land. The word "person" shall extend to a corporation as well as an individual; and every word importing the singular number only shall extend and be applied to several persons or things as well as to one person or thing; and every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend and be applied to a female as well as a male.

2. Freehold land may be conveyed by deed, without livery of seisin or prior bargain and sale.—That every person may convey by any deed, without livery of seisin, or enrolment, or a prior lease, all such freehold land as he might before the passing of this Act have conveyed by lease and release; and every such conveyance shall take effect as if it had been made by lease and release: Provided always, that every such deed shall be chargeable with the same stamp duty as would have been chargeable if such conveyance had been made by lease and release.

3. Partitions, exchanges, and assignments to be by deed.—That no partition or exchange or assignment of any freehold or leasehold land shall be valid at law unless the same shall be made by deed.

4. Leases and surrenders in writing to be by deed.—That no lease in writing of any freehold, copyhold, or leasehold land, or surrender in writing of any freehold or leasehold land, shall be valid as a lease or surrender unless the same shall be made by deed; but any agreement in writing to let or to surrender any such land shall be valid and take effect as an agreement to execute a lease or surrender; and the person who shall be in the possession of the land in pursuance of any agreement to let may, from payment of rent or other circumstances, be construed to be a tenant from year to year.

5. Contingent interests may be conveyed by deed.—That any person may convey, assign, or charge by any deed any such contingent or executory interest, right of entry for condition broken, or other future estate or interest as he shall be entitled to, or presumptively entitled to, in any freehold, or copyhold, or leasehold land, or personal property, or any part of such interest, right, or estate respectively; and every person to whom any such interest, right, or estate shall be conveyed or assigned, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, according to the nature of the interest, right, or estate, shall be entitled to stand in the place of the person by whom the same shall be conveyed or assigned, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, and to have the same interest, right, or estate, or such part thereof as shall be conveyed or assigned to him, and the same actions, suits, and remedies for the same, as the person originally entitled thereto, his heirs, executors, or administrators, would have been entitled to if no conveyance, assignment, or other disposition thereof had been made; provided that no person shall be empowered by this Act to dispose of any expectancy which he may have as heir, or heir of the body inheritable, or as next of kin, under the statutes for the distribution of the estates of intestates of a living person, nor any estate, right, or interest to which he may become entitled under any deed thereafter to be executed, or under the will of any living person, and no deed shall by force of this Act bar or enlarge any estate tail: provided also, that no chose in action shall by this Act be made assignable at law.

6. No implied warranty to be created by "grant" or "exchange."—That neither the word "grant" nor the word "exchange" in any deed shall have the effect of creating any warranty or right of re-entry, nor shall either of such words have the effect of creating any covenant by implication, except in cases where by any Act of Parliament it is or shall be declared that the word "grant" shall have such effect.

7. No conveyances to operate by wrong, or have greater effect than a release.—That no conveyance shall be voidable only when made by feoffment or other assurance where the same would be absolutely void if made by release or grant; and that no assurance shall create any estate by wrong, or have any other effect than the same would have if it were to take effect as a release, surrender, grant, lease, bargain and sale, or covenant to stand seised (as the case may be).

8. Contingent remainders abolished. Executory devises or estates. Existing contingent remainders to continue.—That after the time at which this Act shall come into operation no estate in land shall be created by way of contingent remainder; but every estate which before that time would have taken effect as a contingent remainder shall take effect (if in a will or codicil) as an executory devise, and (if in a deed) as an executory estate of the same nature and having the same properties as an executory devise; and contingent remainders existing under deeds, wills, or instruments executed or made before the time when this Act shall come into operation shall not fail, or be destroyed or barred, merely by reason of the destruction or merger of any preceding estate, or its determination by any other means than the natural effluxion of the time of such preceding estate, or some event on which it was in its creation limited to determine.

9. Executor or administrator of mortgagee empowered, on discharge of mortgage, to convey the legal estate vested in the heir or devisee.—That when any person entitled to any freehold or copyhold land by way of mortgage has or shall have departed this life, and his executor or administrator is or shall be entitled to the money secured by the mortgage, and the legal estate in such land is or shall be vested in the heir or devisee of such mortgagee, or the heir, devisee, or other assign of such heir or devisee, and possession of the land shall not have been taken by virtue of the mortgage, nor any action or suit be depending, such executor or administrator shall have power, upon payment of the principal money and interest due to him on the said mortgage, to convey by deed or surrender (as the case may require) the legal estate which became vested in such heir or devisee; and such conveyance shall be as effectual as if the same had been made by any such heir or devisee, his heirs or assigns.

10. Receipts of trustees to be effectual discharges.—That the bonâ fide payment to and the receipt of any person to whom any money shall be payable upon any express or implied trust or for any limited purpose, or of the survivors or survivor of two or more mortgagees or holders, or the executors or administrators of such survivor, or their or his assigns, shall effectually discharge the person paying the same from seeing to the application or being answerable for the misapplication thereof, unless the contrary shall be expressly declared by the instrument creating the trust or security.

11. Indenting a deed unnecessary.—That it shall not be necessary in any case to have a deed indented; and that any person, not being a party to any deed, may take an immediate benefit under it in the same manner as he might under a deed-poll.

12. The remedies for the rent and covenants in a lease not to be extinguished by the merger of the immediate reversion.—That where the reversion of any land, expectant on a lease, shall be merged in any remainder or other reversion or estate, the person entitled to the estate into which such reversion shall have merged, his heirs, executors, administrators, successors, and assigns, shall have and enjoy the like advantage, remedy, and benefit against the lessee, his heirs, successors, executors, administrators, and assigns, for non-payment of the rent, or for doing of waste or other forfeiture, or for not performing conditions, covenants, or agreements contained and expressed in his lease, demise, or grant, against the lessee, farmer, or grantee, his heirs, successors, executors, administrators, and assigns, as the person who would for the time being have been entitled to the mesne reversion which shall have merged would or might have had and enjoyed if such reversion had not been merged.

13. Act to commence from 31st December, 1844.—That this Act shall commence and take effect from the thirty-first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, and shall not extend to any deed, act, or thing executed or done, or (except so far as regards the provisions hereinbefore contained as to existing contingent remainders) to any estate, right, or interest created, before the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and forty-five.

14. Act not to extend to Scotland.—And be it enacted, That this Act shall not extend to Scotland.

EXECUTION OF LEASING POWER.

TINDAL, C. J.—My lords, in answer to your lordships' question proposed to the judges in this case, I humbly offer as my opinion that the indenture of lease, as stated in the special verdict, is not a valid execution of the power of leasing given by Benoni Mallett. The power of leasing is given with this restriction (amongst others), "so as upon every such lease there be reserved and made payable during the continuance thereof the best improved yearly rent;" and by the reddendum in the lease, made under this power, the yearly rent is made payable "by equal half-yearly payments on the 6th April and the 11th day of October in every year, in equal portions, except the last half-year's rent, which is hereby reserved and agreed to be paid on the 1st day of August next before the determination of the said term;" and it appears to me that the reservation under which the last half-year's rent is made payable two months and eleven days before the expiration of the last half-year is no compliance with the terms of the leasing power, "that the rent shall be reserved and made payable during the continuance of the term." The restrictions of the exercise of a power are imposed for the protection of the remainder-man, not of the tenant for life; and the restriction in the case "to a rent reserved and made payable during the continuance of the term," is essential for the effectual preventing of the tenant for life from making any portion of the rent payable by anticipation, and appears to me to have been intended for that very purpose: for if the rent for any given portion of the year is made payable by the terms of the lease before the expiration of such portion of the year, no part of such rent can be said to arise, or grow, or to be a continuing rent during the remainder of that portion of the year after such payment has been actually made; and there is nothing but a dry occupation by the lessee without rent for the residue of such portion of the year. There is, therefore, as it appears to me, in this case, a direct breach of the leasing power; a breach which is in favour of the tenant for life, and consequently averse to the interests of the remainder-man; for if the tenant for life chances to die after the 1st of August in the last year, and before the end of the term, he has already received the whole of that half-year's rent; or, if not, it would go to his executors; whereas the whole half-year ought to belong to and become the property of the remainder-man, under the usual form of reservation; and, although it is said the reservation of the last half-year's rent, before the last day of the term, is equally beneficial to the remainder-man and the tenant for life, inasmuch as it gives the remainder-man a power of distraining for the rent, which he could not do after the expiration of the term; yet this is but a small benefit to the remainder-man, who would have all his remedies against the lessee for the last half-year's rent, except that by distress, if the rent be made payable in the ordinary form on the last day; whereas he incurs the certain loss of the whole half-year's rent, if the tenant for life dies as above supposed; and I would cite the words of Mr. Baron Bayley, in the case of Doe dem. Harris v. Morse, which case appears to me to agree in point with the present:—"It is said that these reservations may turn out for the benefit of the remainder-man; but the language of the power is to be regarded, and the tenant for life is not to throw on the remainder-man, without his sanction, the uncertainty of the chances which may turn out to his prejudice." It is obvious that, under this mode of reservation, the lessee might occupy after the death of the tenant for life, without paying any rent to the remainder-man, which never could have been intended by the donor of the power to lease. And if such exercise of the power be, as I conceive it is, against the meaning of the power itself, so also the weight of the authorities is against holding this to be a good execution of the leasing power. The case of Isherwood v. Oldknow (3 M. & Sel. 382), which was relied upon in support of the validity of the execution of this power, does not, when considered, shew it to be good. It is true, the objection to the lease under a similar power with the present was in that case that it reserved the first half-year's rent on the 11th of November, whilst the lease itself was only dated on the 15th of October, and the lease was, notwithstanding, held good; but all the judges rested their opinion on the ground that it appeared on the record that the first half-year's rent was reserved, not by way of anticipation of the rent under that lease, but for the bygone occupation of the premises by the same tenant before the commencement of the lease; not for the occupation under the lease; so that, as they said, there was no fraud on the power. The case of Doe dem. Harris and Others v. Morse (4 Tyrw. 185) cannot be distinguished in principle from the present, and appears to me to be an authority against the validity of the lease now under consideration. That lease was held bad because the power directed the rent to be reserved payable half yearly, and the lease reserved the rent payable at intervals, which did not correspond with the usual half-yearly days for payment of rent. Every observation made by Mr. Baron Bayley shews strongly what his opinion would have been on the present case, besides the observation to which I have already referred. "The tenant for life," he observes, "gets a year's rent for less than nine months' occupation. That may be for his own benefit, but by it he deprives the remainder-man of some of the chances he might have had of receiving a portion of the rent had it been made payable at the end of the year." The case of Doe v. Wilson (5 B. & A. 363) is no authority in support of the validity of the execution of the power now under consideration; for although one objection there taken was, that the rent reserved was made payable at an earlier day than it would have been payable, if made payable at the end of each year, yet that reservation was held good solely by referring to former leases of the same premises in which it had been made payable on the same days; so that the Court held the usual and accustomed rent to have been received, payable in the usual and accustomed manner; whereas, in the present case, there was no evidence whatever either of the terms of former leases or of the present mode of reservation of the last half-year's rent being agreeable to the custom observed in that part of the country where the lands lie, even if such evidence would have been admissible. And as to the dictum of Mr. Justice Powell, in Reg. v. Weston (to which it is said by the reporter that Chief Justice Holt agreed), viz. "that if a man had a power to make leases, reserving the ancient yearly rent annually, yet if it were reserved upon a day before the year was out, as if the year ended at Christmas, and it was reserved at Michaelmas, it would be well pursuant to the power;" I think it improper to give to this dictum which was merely used as an illustration, the force of a well considered decision. It was quite uncalled for; no argument heard upon it; no authority cited in its support. Upon the whole, therefore, I think the weight of the authorities agrees with the reasonable interpretation of the terms of the will creating the power in support of the opinion which I offer to your lordships, that the lease is not a valid execution of the power.

On the 18th of August, 1843, the following judgments were pronounced by the noble and learned Lords, who heard the argument:—

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—My lords, the question in this case is, whether the lease of the 14th of December, 1833, as stated in the special verdict, was a valid execution of the leasing power given by the will of Benoni Mallett. It was one of the restrictions upon the power, that, upon every lease there should be reserved and made payable during the continuance thereof the best improved yearly rent that could be reasonably had for the same, without taking any sum of money by way of fine or income for or in respect of such lease. The lease was made on the 14th of December, 1833, for twenty-one years, from the 11th of October preceding, at the yearly rent of 903*l.* by equal half-yearly payments, viz. on the 6th of April and the 11th of October, in every year, in equal portions, except the last half-year's rent, which was thereby reserved and agreed to be paid on the 1st of August next before the end of the term. It is admitted that the power was well executed, if the last half-year's rent might, consistently with the restrictions in the power, be made payable on the 1st of August. The power requires a yearly rent to be reserved. It is clear that, under and consistently with this power, which says nothing as to the time of payment, the yearly rent might have been reserved and made payable yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly; and I agree with what was said by one of the learned judges, that it follows as a consequence that a yearly rent means a rent payable within each year, not payable merely at the end of the year; and the reservation thereof in the last year of the rent on the 1st of August if made bonâ fide, which is not controverted in the present instance, was within and a due execution of the power. But it has been contended, that, as the yearly rent was to be reserved and made payable during the continuance of the term, and as the last payment was by the provision in the lease to be made on the 1st of August, upwards of two months before its expiration, it was not payable during the continuance, that is, the whole continuance of the lease, and so was at variance with the power. But this depends upon what is meant by a yearly rent reserved and made payable during the continuance of the lease. These words, I think, obviously import nothing more than this, that in every year, as long as the lease shall endure, a yearly rent shall be reserved and made payable. If this be the true interpretation of the power, it is clear there has been no infringement of the restrictions. The evident motive for fixing upon a day for payment before the last day of term was, to insure the right of distress for the benefit of the person, whoever he might be, that should at that period be entitled to the lease. The opinion of Mr. Justice Powell in Reg. v. Weston, though mentioned merely by way of illustration, and in which Chief Justice Holt concurred, is entitled to much attention. It is expressly in point, and coincides with the view I have taken of this question. On these grounds, therefore, I recommend to your lordships to reverse the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber.

Lord BROUGHAM.—My lords, in this case I had not an opportunity of doing more than considering the opinions of the learned judges, with the majority of whom, as at present advised, I concur; but not having heard the whole of the argument, having been obliged to be at the judicial committee of the Privy Council, I shall do no more than say that I entirely agree with the view taken of this case by my noble and learned friend.

Lord CAMPBELL.—My lords, I was present during the whole of the argument, and, as my duty required, very attentively listened to what was argued on both sides, and I have since most respectfully perused the opinions of the learned judges, and have arrived at the same conclusion with my noble and learned friend, that the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber ought to be reversed. I entirely approve of the judgment of the Court in which the action was brought. It seems to me, that the meaning of the condition imposed by this leasing power was merely that the rent during the term should be reserved in respect of the whole of the term, and that the rent should be payable during that term, and if those two requisites were observed there was nothing unreasonable in the mode in which the power was exercised, with a view to the benefit of the estate, and the lease would be valid. Now, here it is clear that a rent was reserved in respect of the whole term, because although the rent was to be paid on the 1st of August, it was with reference to the period at which the term concluded. It was payable within the term, because it was payable on the 1st of August, the day prior to the expiration of the term. Then was not it a reasonable execution of the power? A question was put to the bar, whether, if the rent had been reserved on the first day of every year, that would have been a good execution of the power. That, my lords, might be very doubtful, because it is quite clear, that, if such a condition were imposed upon the tenant, he would not give by any means so good a rent as he would if allowed to occupy for the whole year, and to cultivate the farm, and to receive the rents and profits of the farm six months before any rent was payable; and I do not know whether that would be at all consistent with the good management of the estate; I think, on that ground, that to have made the rent payable on the first day of the year would not have been a reasonable reservation. But when you see that every half-year's rent was made payable at the expiration of the half-year until we come to the last half-year's rent, and that that was reserved, payable on the 1st of August, for the reason that there might be a distress when the crops were on the ground, so as to enforce the payment, it was clearly for the benefit of the estate; and whether the tenant for life or the remainder-man might take advantage of it, it seems to me an entire compliance with the power of leasing contained in the previous settlement. There is no reason to suppose that the settlor looked peculiarly to the benefit either of the tenant for life or of the remainder-man. His anxiety was, that a lease should be executed, which should be consistent with a reasonable management of the estate, and for the benefit of the person who was in the occupation of the estate, whoever he might be. There was here just as good a chance that it might be for the benefit of the remainder-man as for the benefit of the tenant for life. Therefore, upon reason and upon principle, I have no doubt that the power was well executed. I am happy to think that, although there was some dictum of Mr. Justice Bayley which was referred to, which is not very express or directly in point, and which may be explained away, yet, on the other hand, we have, I am sure I speak with the most sincere respect for Mr. Justice Bayley; but, at the same time, I am to weigh his authority against that of Mr. Justice Powell, confirmed by Lord Holt: I must say that his authority does not amount to an equipoise; and then, if we do look at principle, it seems to me, with great respect for the opinion of the dissenting judges, that this was clearly a good execution of the power of leasing.

The Lord Chancellor thereupon moved, that judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber be reversed; and it was reversed accordingly.

Judgment reversed.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE

LORD BROUGHAM.—IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The following circular has been forwarded to us. We have no doubt the publication of it will prove useful:—

"Lord Brougham will, in the course of a few days, circulate through the prisons, and generally through the country, a short and plain statement of the provisions of the Acts for abolishing all imprisonment of debtors, excepting such as have committed frauds on their creditors, or have been guilty of gross extravagance.

"But in the mean time, and to save any delay in their liberation, he begs the keeper of * * * * Gaol to explain to the debtors in his custody that they may obtain their immediate liberation by presenting a petition to the District Bankruptcy Court in the form hereunto annexed, and making an affidavit in the annexed form to the truth of the statements in the petition.

"Lord Brougham hopes that the Bankrupt Commissioners will enable the debtors to swear to such affidavits by sending round a registrar or other officer. Therefore all persons intending to petition should prepare their petitions and affidavits without delay. But if any delay should occur, he strongly recommends swearing the affidavit before a Master Extraordinary, who will also (being an attorney) have the goodness to witness the signature of the petition.

"It is not, however, necessary to employ any attorney in this matter. A debtor, if able to read and write, can write his petition and also write his affidavit by the forms hereunto annexed; and any friend or other person whom he chooses to employ ca. act as his agent for the purpose of transmitting the petition by the post; and such friend or other person may sign as witness to the petition.

"If the schedule is false, or if fraud has been committed, or if gross extravagance has been committed, the debtor will undergo imprisonment by sentence of the court. As one of the newspapers has thought proper to misrepresent the Act in this respect, debtors are hereby advised to observe the matter just stated.

"Brougham.

A Chapter on Beards.—This singular question, "whether barristers can, wearing mustachios, present themselves before the judges of the law courts," was brought before the Court of Cassation, at Paris, on the 6th instant, on a petition presented by MM. Imbardis and Pacros, barristers, practising at the Civil Tribunal of Ambert, against an order of that Court, by which they were forbidden to appear in court wearing mustachios. This order was founded on a decree of the 30th March, 1808, being a confirmation of a resolution of the Parliament of Paris, of the year 1540, which forbids all judges and advocates to wear beards or clothing of a dissolute character. This petition was founded upon several points of form and practice. M. de Gaujal, counsel for petitioners, in stating the case, referred to some highly curious historical details which may be interesting to our readers:—"It was in the year 1143," observed M. Gaujal, "that Louis the Young permitted his chin to be shaved by the Bishop of Paris, in consequence of an interdiction placed on his authority by the Pope. It was from this period that the custom was introduced of shaving the beard. This fashion continued until the reign of Francis I. who suffered his beard to grow in order to conceal a cicatrice on his cheek, caused by a wound inflicted by a Captain de Lorges by accident. Pope Jules II. sanctioned this change. Charles V. acceded to the fashion, and from that period all those who practised this maxim of the court, 'Regis ad exemplar totus componitur orbis,' followed the example given them by a King, an Emperor, and the sovereign Pontiff. In the year 1535, however, the Parliament of Paris wished to restrain the use of the beard, and a decree was passed to forbid gentlemen of the court and the military authorities to suffer their beards to grow." Counsel then gave the names of several judges who refused to conform to the decree of the Parliament, amongst whom were the celebrated Hospital and René de Birague, his successor. In the year 1627 the moustache and imperial began to supersede the use of the beard. Jacques Auguste de Thou, Omer Talon, Jerome Bignon, who lived in the middle of the 17th century, William de Lamaignon, first President in 1657, the Chancellor Letellier in 1685—all these magistrates adopted the moustache and the imperial. The same fashion was adopted by the Bar. The celebrated Patru, who died in 1681, adopted the prevailing mode. Matthew Molé revived the beard of the former grand Chancellors. During the reign of Louis XIV. the introduction of the fashion of wearing large wigs caused the suppression of the beard. Under Louis XV. and XVI. there was no change, except the suppression of the large wigs. The revolution of 1789 modified all the ancient modes, and in the year XI, the Consuls issued the the following decree:—"Barristers and attorneys shall wear a woollen gown, closed in front, with large sleeves, a black cap, a cravat of white cambric plaited, such as those worn by the judges." Counsel then stated that the Bar of Ambert is composed of nineteen barristers. Three of them have suffered their beards to grow. The judges did not object to the beard, but requested them to shave their moustachios, and, on their refusal, the Court forbade them to appear in their presence with moustachios. M. de Gaujal contended that this command was an arbitrary excess of authority; but the Court, after hearing the Attorney-General, dismissed the petition.

A Retrograde Movement.—The unusual circumstance of a barrister being admitted to the roll of attornies recently took place, as appears by a late decision of the Irish Court of Exchequer, upon an application made by the Solicitor-General, who moved that a Mr. Arthur Symes, late a barrister-at-law, might be admitted as an attorney, notwithstanding he had not been articled. It appeared the applicant was brother of a Mr. Thomas Radcliffe Symes, a solicitor, who died suddenly in February last. At his decease several suits remained in an incomplete state, and the application arose from many parties interested, being of opinion their interests would be promoted by the applicant acting as their solicitor. It appears Mr. A. Symes was called to the bar in 1836, and during the last three years he acted as the legal adviser of his brother in the abovementioned suits and actions. Under these circumstances, he applied to the Court to be admitted, and was strenuously opposed by the Law Society. He thereupon petitioned the benchers, and they accordingly gave him permission to be "apprenticed," and ordered his name to be struck off the barristers' roll. The applicant was then debarred, and he at once articled himself. The counsel, in opposition to the application, observed that, "Mr. Symes, after serving an apprenticeship of a full week, now came into court and sought to be admitted an attorney! He supposed the day was not far distant when half-pay officers from the army and navy would be applying to be transformed into attorneys, and that some ordeal should be gone through by candidates for the bar, than that men should be called to the bar with wigs on their heads, and nothing inside their wigs but their heads." The Court, however, thought its power might be exercised in favour of Mr. Symes, and a rule was made that he should be admitted an attorney.

THE STATE TRIALS (IRELAND) APPEAL.—The cause of the Houses of Parliament having adjourned —the Lords to the 2nd, and the Commons to the 5th of next month—is generally understood by the public to be, that judgment may be pronounced by the highest court of appeal in the writ of error, O'Connell and Others v. Reg., previously to Parliament being prorogued. The public, however, are not aware that any specific arrangement was entered into, and a motion submitted upon the subject, and adopted by the House of Lords, on Friday night, just before their lordships rose. From the official documents of that House it appears, that almost immediately previous to the adjournment on that evening the 13th report from the Committee on Appeals was brought up, read, agreed to, and "ordered accordingly." Then follows the last entry on their lordships' minutes of proceedings, and which has reference to the appeal arising out of the late Irish state trials. The form of that entry is as follows:—Gray v. Reg. (writ of error); and O'Connell and Others v. Reg. (writs of error). To be considered on Monday, the 2nd of September next, at 10 o'clock; the Judges then to attend, to deliver their opinions upon the questions of law propounded to them. The House then accordingly "adjourned to Monday, the 2nd of September next, at 10 o'clock."

CORRESPONDENCE.

MORTGAGE TRANSFER STAMPS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Having had the satisfaction to originate this discussion, and having, at a past stage of it, deemed the more brief course to be that of challenging the advocates of Brown v. Pegg to come forward and shew their good sense (in contradistinction to my want thereof), by quoting from the Stamp Acts themselves in support of that decision; seeing, too, that the correspondence was continued without any one responding to that challenge, I therefore wrote to you again, requesting permission to repeat it in a more distinct shape, and although I question not in the least your fairness or propriety in suppressing or deferring my letter, still, perceiving the subject to be renewed in your last paper, in a way, too, which involves the very circumlocution I had intended to avoid, I must now beg of you to give the present letter insertion, by way of carrying out the intent of my preceding ones; after which, if no one chooses to take up the challenge, I will, with your permission, have ready for your then next Appendix a reply embracing all that, on my part, appears to be requisite in having first put the stamp of "insensate" on Brown v. Pegg.

In the mean time I shall consider I have done the Profession some service in educing the letters of Mr. Argles and "J. R." in your last number; although the former of these gentlemen (in a previous letter) has very mistakenly, and, I am willing to believe, quite as unintentionally, attributed to me the notion, which I have nowhere advanced, that there is no progressive duty on mortgage transfers; my notion in that respect was expressly confined to cases of further money advanced; and again I say, that where there is ad val. there is no progressive duty on these instruments—let those who gainsay it shew their authority from the Stamp Acts.

I remain, Sir, yours truly,
August 12, 1844. GEORGE AUSTIN.

HASTY LEGISLATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I perfectly agree in the remarks contained in your last number as to the impolicy of the Legislature hurrying important measures through Parliament at the close of the session, and you might have quoted "The Insolvent Debtors Bill" as a peculiar example. That Bill, abolishing as it does arrest upon final process in any action where the sum recovered shall not exceed 20*l*. in effect destroys the efficiency of the Courts of Request in all parts of the kingdom, and is of immense importance to the lower class of shopkeepers in large commercial towns. The haste, however, in which it was passed rendered it impossible for parties deeply interested in its provisions to give expression to their opinion.

With respect to "The Transfer of Property Bill," you are not quite correct in stating that it has been allowed to pass "sub silentio." The committee of the Manchester Law Association obtained a copy of the Bill when first introduced into the House of Lords, its provisions were carefully examined, and a petition in favour of the measure, and suggesting certain alterations (one of which I find is embodied in the Bill as it now stands), was forwarded to Lord Lyndhurst for presentation.

Before another session, I trust that, through the instrumentality of the proposed union of County Law Societies, the attention of each will be called to every Bill affecting the interests of the Profession immediately after its introduction into either House of Parliament, in order that united efforts may be made in favour or opposition, as the case may require.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

A POINT OF PRACTICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—As a subscriber to your paper, will you be kind enough to answer me the following question, one I think of some importance to the Profession; at any rate, to that portion of it residing in a densely populated manufacturing district like this, where the preparation of building leases is an every-day occurrence?

A mortgages certain leasehold property to B; the interest on the sum borrowed is regularly paid to B, and the mortgagor receives the rents of the property, and treats it in all respects as his own. A, the mortgagor, contracts with C for the lease to C of a portion of the land in mortgage, for building purposes, for a long term of years. A and C request me to prepare a lease, which I accordingly do; and, not knowing who the mortgagee's professional advisers are, forward the draft to him, that he may lay it before them for perusal on his behalf. These gentlemen, on receiving it, write to say that they are entitled to prepare the lease as solicitors to the mortgagee. I reply, that I think, under the circumstances, it is scarcely fair to prefer such a claim; and that, as the mortgagee has never taken possession of the mortgaged property, and has received his interest regularly, the mortgagor ought, in strictness, to be considered as the real lessor, having a perfect right to make a contract for letting so long as such letting is calculated to render the security of the mortgagee better, by increasing the value of the property; concluding my letter by offering to ask the opinion, on the point, of two respectable practitioners, and agreeing to abide by their decision. I have received a reply to my letter, but it merely reiterates the right they claim to prepare the lease, being altogether silent on the subject of my proposition to refer. Under these circumstances, I shall be obliged to you for your opinion, provided you think it of sufficient public importance, and it will not be giving too much trouble.

I may just remark, that I take it to be a settled point that, as a general rule, the lessor's solicitor has the right to the preparation of leases.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.
Heywood, July 30, 1844. ROBT. LEIGH.

[We submit the question to our experienced readers; they can better answer it than we.—Ed. L. T.]

THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I am sure that the attention which you so constantly and ably bestow upon the best interests and welfare of the Profession will not render you insensible of the advantages to be gained from well-considered and fully-matured schemes of improvement in the administration of the law; and therefore I was glad to see that your observations on the subject of the Transfer of Property Bill were directed in censure not of the measure itself, but of the remarkable haste which had characterized its passage into a law.

How desirable and how great a preventive of injustice and hardship is one of its principal provisions, that which says that limitations which would have taken effect as contingent remainders are to be construed as executory devises, needs no further confirmation and proof than are to be found in that very important case of Festing and Others v. Allen and Others, with a report of which you obliged your readers in 3 Law T. 68, in which the three infant children of the tenant for life were held to take no estate, contrary to the direct intention of the testator, and the heir-at-law prevailed by virtue of the stringency of the well-known principles of the law regulating contingent remainders.

Certainly, after reading this case, one finds it difficult to condemn harshly the alteration which this Bill makes in this time honoured rule.

Of the propriety of the provision that contingent and executory interests may be conveyed by deed, there is no room to doubt. Every one at all conversant with the book learning on these subjects, and who considers the late decisions, must at once perceive that to make these interests assignable by deed (exclusively of the efficacy of indenture by estoppel, and the machinery of a fine sur concessit) is merely following out the strong disposition of the Courts to give full weight to arguments of convenience, in opposition to objections merely technical. Many arguments and decisions might be adduced in favour of that admirable provision which preserves the remedies for the rent and covenants in a lease, though the immediate reversion expectant on the determination of the term has happened to be extinguished by merger. It not infrequently happened that the owner of the inheritance, upon a surrender of mortgage term to him of the mortgagee, who had granted an underlease out of his term, was deprived of his remedies against the under lessee by neglecting to keep the term on foot. [The case of Pleasant dem. Hayton v. Rawson (14 East, 234) may be cited, in which the Court recognized the continuance of the immediate landlord's character and functions, notwithstanding his interest was merged, in opposition to the existing rule of law.] The various other provisions of this Act seem devised in the same spirit of accommodating the law of transfer by deed to the law of transfer by will, 1 Vict. c. 26. No one can object to legislative encroachment more than I do; but I do not think that this will be found to be the character of this Bill, which appears to respect the rights while it aims at the amelioration of the doctrines of the Profession.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
J. GILL.
Birmingham, August 13.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

A Correspondent, ZETA, thus corrects an error in a report:—

I was very much surprised to find it stated in the heading to the case of Lyon v. Reed (Law T. of Saturday last), that, "Where reversions of incorporeal hereditaments which pass only by deed are disposed of, there cannot be a surrender of a lease by act and operation of law." Now, so far from this being the case, the judgment assumes, as was to be expected, that a surrender in law may take place in incorporeal hereditaments or reversions, as well as in corporeal hereditaments, and that a surrender in fact of the former must be by deed. The point really decided was, that a demise (in the case of reversions, &c.) from the reversioner to a stranger, or third party, with the consent (actual or presumed) of the lessee does not work a surrender by act and operation of law. It had been decided to do so (in the cases cited in the judgment), where the subject-matter of the demise was corporeal hereditaments; and, according to Lyon v. Reed, the judges refuse to extend the doctrine of those cases to incorporeal hereditaments or reversions. But a surrender in law, as between the reversioner and lessee themselves, or a surrender in the strict sense of the term, may, in the case of incorporeal hereditaments or reversions, result now as before, and is left quite untouched.

A correspondent who wishes to see our suggestions as to Precedents and Forms carried out, sends the following form of copyhold surrender.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 17, 1844.

THE PAST SESSION.

The Session of Parliament just concluded has proved more fruitful in legislation than could have been anticipated a month before its close. Up to that period little, indeed, had been accomplished. But a sudden activity seized the Senate, and in four weeks more important laws were made than ever before were framed in so brief a time.

It will be for the future to shew how far this hasty legislation is consistent with accuracy. It is probable, however, that a world of work has been carved out for the Lawyers by the doings of the last forty days, and probably no small portion of the time of the next session will be occupied in correcting the errors of the last.

But still the fact remains that so many laws have been made affecting so various, and such mighty interests, that there are few of the subjects of the realm, however lofty or lowly, whose welfare will not be directly influenced by them. They will, therefore, require the most anxious consideration, not only of the Profession, but of the public, and we cannot better occupy the leisure of the vacation than by reviewing them seriatim. In this article we propose to take a slight glance at the vast field over which legislation has just extended itself.

In the law of real property a vast change has been introduced by The Transfer of Property Act, the provisions of which were briefly stated last week. As this important measure does not come into operation till the 1st of January, we shall have ample opportunity for giving to its provisions the minute attention they demand.

The Law of Debtor and Creditor has been subjected to vast changes by two statutes, of which one abolishes imprisonment for debt under 20*l.*, greatly extends the remedies against the property of insolvents, and unites the jurisdictions of insolvency and bankruptcy; and the other introduces many valuable provisions for facilitating voluntary arrangements between debtors and creditors, and for placing compositions under judicial control. This Act passed sub silentio, although one of the most important of the session, and, taken in combination with the Insolvent Debtors Act, it effects a complete revolution in that branch of the law to which it belongs. An abstract of this Bill will be found in its proper place, among our record of actual legislation.

There is another class of laws in which the session has been singularly fruitful, and the combined effect of which it is difficult to estimate. These are the series of statutes affecting the commerce of the country, comprising The Bank Charter Act, the two Joint Stock Companies Acts, and The Railways' Regulation Act. No man would venture to prophesy how these novel and most sweeping measures will operate in practice, but upon the face of them they promise to be highly beneficial, by giving a healthfulness to trade through the ample provisions they make for the prevention of fraud

The Joint Stock Companies Act is especially stringent in its requirements, and would seem to make bubble companies henceforth impracticable. It is only to be feared, lest in anxiety to prevent fraudulent speculations, honest ones may be crushed; for certainly with such impediments as this statute throws in the way, it will be extremely difficult to form a joint stock company for any purpose, however desirable. The Railways' Regulation Act was the result of a compromise with the companies, and is rather of general than of legal interest.

Very material alterations have been made in the poor-law. A mighty field for litigation has been closed by the Dissenters' Chapels Act. Other statutes of less immediate importance have signalized a session which threatened to be one of the most barren of recent times.

And the Government deserves commendation for its adoption of a plan which we hope will in future be followed with all measures affecting many interests. It is that of introducing at the close of the session the Bills which it is the purpose of the ministry to propose for legislation during the following session. The advantages of this course are so obvious, that it seems strange why it has not been always observed. By thus laying the suggested changes of the law before the Parliament and the public, ample time is afforded for investigation and discussion; their various bearings are examined, improvements are suggested, objections started; and thus, when the measure comes to be formally considered in the following session, all parties are prepared to handle it practically, and one half the time it would otherwise consume in discussion suffices to fit it for the royal assent.

The session just concluded has given rich promise in this most desirable shape. During the recess the subjects thus liberally submitted by the Government to public and private debate, should engage the serious attention of the Profession, whose members are so peculiarly fitted to criticize them. The Bills that thus are offered for inspection and revision are—

The Criminal Law Consolidation Bill.
The Law of Settlement Bill.
The Justices' Clerks' Fees Bill.
The Medical Reform Bill.
The Criminal Appeal Bill.

The first of these we have already, through the means of our Appendix, placed in the hands of the Profession, to whom it is the most valuable text-book ever published on the subject to which it relates. The others shall appear in our columns, and receive careful consideration. But upon all of them we invite the suggestions of our readers, whose opinions, as practical men having peculiar opportunities for forming a correct judgment, cannot but have great weight with any Government or Legislature. As the organ of the Profession, the Law Times will be heard with respec , whether in support of, or in objection to, any of these projects of laws, and therefore we ask experienced readers freely to express their opinions through our columns, giving to their views the weight of their names subscribed, and so to aid in the making, as they do in the administration, of the laws of their country.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS ACT.

As this statute is of immediate interest, we purpose to present a short analysis of it here, as some time must necessarily elapse before it can appear in its order among our record of actual legislation.

It professes to be an amendment of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116. But it is, in fact, a new law.

The first section provides that a petition for protection from process may be presented to any Court of Bankruptcy without any notice being given to any creditor, or in the Gazette, or any newspaper.

The form of petition is then given, and it is to be verified by affidavit. But, after it is filed, notice is to be given to creditors and in the Gazette, and a public sitting appointed for the first examination and the choice of creditors' assignees; but the commissioner may reject or remove the person so chosen.

The property of the petitioner is to vest in the assignees for the time by virtue of the appointment, and upon petition being filed, the commissioner is to have the like power for seizure of the property of the petitioner, and the examination of him and other persons, as in bankruptcy.

By sec. 6, any prisoner in execution upon a judgment in an action for debt not being a trader, or, being a trader, whose debts are less than 300*l.* may, by petition, be protected from process and from being detained in prison for any debt mentioned in his schedule, and, if so detained, the commissioner may order his discharge. If the petitioner be in custody, and not entitled to be discharged, he may be brought up by warrant.

Wearing apparel, bedding, working-tools, &c. of the value of 20*l.* excepted from the operation of the Act.

The official assignee is to act until the creditors' assignee is appointed, and may sell the property by order of the commission, and make an allowance to the petitioner: the property vested in him is to go to his successor, and if the petition be dismissed, all the acts theretofore done according to the Act are to be good and valid.

The assignees may execute powers which the petitioner might have executed for his own benefit; where they have accepted a lease, the petitioner is not to be liable for rent, and if they do not determine whether to accept the lease or not, the lessor may apply to the court, which shall make such order as the commissioner may deem fit. Assignees are empowered to sue in their own names; to make composition for debts; to submit differences to arbitration; with consent of the major part in value of the creditors given at a meeting duly called, and the creditors are to vote thereat according to the balance due to them on an account fairly stated.

Where the petitioner is beneficially entitled to stock, the commissioner may order a transfer. Suits are not to abate on death or removal of assignees. Goods in the possession, order, or disposition of the petitioner, whereof he was reputed owner, to be deemed his property.

A distress is not to be available for more than one year's rent. Voluntary preference is to be fraudulent and void as against assignees. But it is expressly provided that no conveyance, assignment, &c. shall be so deemed fraudulent and void "if made at any time prior to three months before the filing the petition, and not with the view or intention, by the party so conveying, &c. of petitioning the court for protection from process."

By sec. 20, the provisions of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, relating to frauds upon creditors by secret warrants of attorney to confess judgment, are extended to the assignees of insolvent petitioners.

Sec. 21 enacts that no warrant of attorney or cognovit shall be acted upon against the property of an insolvent petitioner after filing his petition.

The final order is to protect the person of the petitioner from process in respect of the debts named in his schedule, or the claims of indorsees and holders of securities not known to him, and if the petitioner be detained for any such claim, the commissioner may order his discharge.

If it appear to the commissioner that any of the petitioner's debts were contracted by fraud or breach of trust, &c. no day is to be named for making the final order for protection; but if otherwise, a notice of such day is to be given.

Sums payable by way of annuity are to be deemed debts, and the annuitants are to be creditors for the value thereof.

The final order may extend to process for contempt in non-payment of money, and to costs incurred by the creditors, but subject to taxation.

The commissioner may adjourn the final order sine die; but if it be refused or so adjourned, the Court may thereafter, at its discretion, make an order to protect him from further imprisonment, in respect of the debts mentioned in his schedule.

Where there is an error in the schedule without fraud, the operation of the Act is to extend to the actual amount of the debt.

The 31st section directs how the dividend is to be made.

Sec. 32 enacts that outstanding debts, &c. may be sold by order of the commissioner. The proceedings are not to be liable to any stamp or auction duty.

On each petition a sum not less than one-eighth, nor more than one-fifth, in the pound, upon the produce of the estate, is to be paid by the assignees to the Secretary of Bankrupts Act.

The official assignee is to be remunerated at the discretion of the commissioner, but not to exceed 5 per cent. upon the proceeds of the estate.

A table of fees to be made by the London commissioners, with the aid of such of the country ones as the Lord Chancellor shall appoint.

The proceedings, or a duly signed copy, to be receivable in evidence, and the rules and orders under the former Act to be applicable to this one.

Persons wilfully omitting any thing from the schedule to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to imprisonment for not more than three years. Wilfully making a false oath or affirmation punishable as perjury.

A fiat in bankruptcy may issue against a trader having filed a declaration of insolvency upon the petition of the trader himself.

A very useful provision has been introduced. The Lord Chancellor is empowered to direct courts to be held by the country commissioners in various parts of their districts. He may also appoint a taxing officer, whose fee is fixed by the Act. The sums received by him, after deducting the sum allowed for the expenses of his office, are to be paid into the Bank, and in case of sickness, &c. his duties may be performed by deputy.

The registrars who now receive the surplus of certain fees are in future to be paid wholly by salary, and to account for all fees they shall receive. A retiring pension is to be given to them.

The Court may send a registrar to take proof of debts where expedient. The deputy-registrars are to be styled registrars.

The 55th section repeals the provisions of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 29, as to fees receivable by the accountant in bankruptcy, and he is to have a salary instead.

The 57th section abolishes arrest upon final process in an action for debt not exceeding 20*l.* and cost, and the following section provides that persons in execution at the time of passing this Act, when the debt shall be within the above amount, shall be discharged on application to a judge; but if fraudulently obtained, the debtor may be again arrested. Sheriffs, &c. not to be liable for escape, and the judgment is to remain in force notwithstanding the discharge of the debtor.

A power of imprisonment for fraud is given by sec. 59.

Where the judge of an inferior court has ordered payment of money, it is to be recoverable by fi. fa. but such execution is not to issue till after default in payment of the instalment.

The 62nd section gives to the judge the power of suspending execution in certain cases of sickness or accident, and on payment of debt and costs. Bailiffs are held responsible for neglect to levy, and certain remedies are given against bailiffs and other officers.

The 67th section enacts that no landlord of any tenement let at a weekly rent "shall have any claim on any goods taken in execution under the process of any court of law for more than four weeks' arrears of rent."

Claims as to goods taken in execution are to be adjudicated in open court. No distress levied by virtue of this Act is to be unlawful for want of form.

Compensations are to be given to any judge or other officer of any court, or keeper or other officer of any debtors' prison, whose emoluments will be diminished by this Act.

The 72nd section, after reciting that there are many inferior courts for recovery of small debts not presided over by a barrister or attorney, as assessor or judge, enacts that the Secretary of State may appoint a barrister of seven, or an attorney of ten years' standing to be assessor of each of such courts.

Such is a short abstract of the provisions of this important measure. It will, of course, be given verbatim in its proper place among the New Statutes, printed or analysed in our columns. Moreover, it is intended to form, in conjunction with the Debtors and Creditors Act, a volume of the series of the Law Times edition of Important Statutes.

THE FRENCH BAR AND THE PRESIDENT OF THE COUR ROYALE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I am now enabled to transmit you the details relative to the quarrel between the Parisian Bar and the President Seguier, which, as I stated in my last, had not then been permitted to be published, the judgment of the Court not having been notified. On Monday, July 8, the bâtonnier and members of the Council of Discipline appeared before the united chambers of the Cour Royale. M. Seguier was in the chair. As soon as the barristers had taken their seats, the Attorney-General read the letter which had been addressed to the first president, couched in the following terms:—

"TO THE FIRST PRESIDENT.

"M. PRESIDENT—A circumstance which has recently occurred in your court has caused a painful sensation among the Bar. On Monday, 9th of this month, a case, Dalibon v. Beslay came on before you. No barrister appeared. The plaintiff's brief had been refused. M. Mancourt, the defendant's attorney (avoué) read the case. M. Cruey, the plaintiff's avoué, requested a delay, and, as he was urging the necessity of it, taking him for a barrister, you observed:—'No, plead; your cause is a bad one. Barristers now accept all briefs, even the worst, and they know what they are about, for talent is not wanting. We no longer appoint official barristers; they plead every thing; they are not conscientious; I remind them of their oaths.' These offensive words, which offer such a contrast to the sentiments of the Bar, and to the expressions of esteem you have more than once used towards it, grieved it more deeply as they came from such a source.

"The council assembled, verified the facts, and has ascertained that these words, unjust in their general application, were wrongly applied in this particular instance, for it was not a barrister, but an avoué, who had addressed the Court on behalf of the plaintiff. Our young brother barrister, to whom the case had been offered, in obedience to the duties of the Profession, had conscientiously declined the offer, and returned the brief. Under these circumstances, Sir, the members of the council, yielding to unanimous feeling, have considered that these words, which have so deeply wounded the whole order, ought to be publicly recalled, and that as long as they remain unrecalled, it would not be in their power to concur with you in administrating justice. Until then, therefore, we shall cease to appear in your court.

"This proceeding, which would have been peremptorily dictated by the care of our honour, is equally enjoined by the duties of our Profession. Otherwise deprived henceforward of all authority, we should expose the interests of our clients by appearing in their name when we had been deprived of our dignity.

"We remain, with profound respect, Sir,

"Your most humble and obedient servants."

The Attorney-General, after reading the letter, announced that the barristers who had signed it had been summoned before the Court, because, 1st, they had failed in the duties of their Profession; 2nd, they had been wanting in the respect due to the magistracy; and, 3rd, they had exceeded their power in interdicting one of the chambers of the court, and adding, that he hoped an honourable reconciliation was still possible, and would re-establish the amicable intercourse which had existed between the magistracy and the Bar, and which was so necessary to the due administration of justice. The Attorney-General ended by saying he was ready to listen to the explanations of the barristers. The bâtonnier, after reading a written report, thus addressed the Court:—

"Gentlemen,—In entering into explanations which are demanded of us by authority (la voie disciplinaire), the dignity belonging to the Court and to ourselves requires great clearness and absolute candour. The circumstances which have excited amongst our order such a lively, and, allow us to add, such natural and just emotion, are facts which in our eyes are undeniable. We have collected and verified them with the most scrupulous and patient attention, and, after this examination, it was no longer possible to doubt either that the words had been uttered, or of the effect such words might and did produce.

"The integrity of the Bar, its regard for its duties, its faithfulness to its oaths, the conscientiousness of its exertions, and all that constitutes its strength and authority have been publicly injured.

"When such an accusation had been brought by the person of highest rank in the magistracy, silence was neither honourable nor possible.

"This sentiment was spontaneous and unanimous among us, and to understand it, it is not necessary to attribute it to some hypothetical coalition, equally opposed to our habitual conduct and our respect of the laws. It is explained by that bond of honour, the lively traditions of which we have so carefully preserved from time immemorial.

"The hand which had inflicted the evil could alone repair it. This is what we required; we asked for it in a suitable manner, not dreaming there was the slightest peril in our conduct, but, at all events, quite resolved to bear the responsibility of our act.

"Under these impressions, gentlemen, our letter was written and signed. We are convinced that what we have done we had a right to do; and the consciousness that we have done our duty towards the Bar further strengthens this conviction.

"And yet, in execution of your decree, gentlemen, the Attorney-General takes proceedings against and accuses us of having exceeded our power, failed in the duties of our profession, and in respect to the magistracy.

"Exceeded our power! Gentlemen, in the important circumstances in which we are placed, we did not think it necessary to take upon ourselves the office of judge; we did not presume to do so.

"Nevertheless, in abstaining, as members of the council of the order, from passing a decree, we still thought ourselves bound, as advocates, called to the head of the Bar by the votes of our fellow-barristers, to be the first to speak in the defence of the interests of the order.

"Our actions belong to us; we claim them as our own; we have dictated laws to no one. Like our predecessors, we have only set an example of faithfulness and devotedness to our order. If this example is to be followed, it will be enforced by the power of the order, not by the force of any legal proceedings.

"Such is the fact, gentlemen, such is the truth.

"An excess of power cannot properly be complained of, where there has not even been an act of power.

"Failed in the duties of the Profession! Gentlemen, we acknowledge these duties of our Profession. As barristers, we have long and constantly practised them; as members of the council, to enforce the respect due to them, we have occasionally been compelled to employ rigorous measures, which your forbearance has sometimes tempered. Far from disavowing these duties, we should claim them if we were to be deprived of them, for they form our strength and our power. Our authority before you is founded on them, and in them the interests which are intrusted to us take refuge as under inviolable shelter. Above all, in them lies the secret of this traditional energy which has kept our ancient institution erect and honoured, amidst a new world, hostile to any thing like corporations.

"We have failed in the duties of our Profession! Has it been in defending its injured feelings, in identifying ourselves with it, or in asking in its name just and necessary satisfaction?

"Gentlemen, before our voice was raised to complain, we endured much; our professional dignity more than once attacked—our individual interests more than once exposed by injurious words; and we claim no merit for this. But if, under an insult which on this occasion affects the honour of all, we had remained cold and silent, we hesitate not to say that we should have become parties to the degradation of our order. And then all honourable men, magistrates and barristers, might with truth have reproached us with having failed in the duties of our Profession, for we should have broken the sacred trust which at our election was committed to our care.

"Lastly, the Attorney-General tells us we have failed in respect to the magistracy!

"Has it been in addressing a letter to the magistrate? Gentlemen, the satisfaction which is due to us we neither demand from the authorities nor from the hands of justice. We thought and still think it more dignified to claim it directly from the individual. We have neither wished for auxiliaries nor official intermedials; we have appealed from the magistrate to the magistrate himself, which is shewing respect to him of whom we have to complain.

"Has it been in refraining from appearing before the Court of the First Chamber? Gentlemen, to plead, or not to plead, according to our will and our oath, is the condition of our independence, and the law of our Profession. Maintained by the traditions of our order, acknowledged by the Parliaments, this law justifies itself especially in the eyes of reason. Crushed by the decree of 1810, the ordinance of 1822 restored it, and, in following its precepts, we make use of our legal and moral liberty, and fail in respect to no one. We have a right to invoke our privileges; it is our duty to maintain them. Moreover, if we claim them now, you are aware it is not to gratify self-love or wounded pride. These trifling passions are beneath our notice, and would not authorize in our eyes the important measure we have each considered necessary to adopt.

"We have raised our eyes higher, and allow me to add, in conclusion, that this is the important interest it has been our great aim to defend. The law has appointed us to stand intermediate between justice and our clients. Our office is placed under the authority and sanction of an oath; conscientiousness, more than talent, recommends us to the magistracy; it is more in the integrity of the advocate than in his abilities that the fortunes and interests of the families intrusted to his care find a firm and salutary support.

"Our mission, gentlemen, must rest on this pinnacle,—we should not comprehend it, we could not accept it, humbled and abased.

"The magistracy is intrusted with the duty of honouring men who participate with it in the administration of justice, and who have passed their lives in winning, by conscientious exertions, the right of being honoured. It is this right which we claimed in our letter; it is this right which we now claim before the assembled Court."

At the close of this speech, the Attorney-General required the Court to declare void and of none effect the letter addressed to the President, and also the deliberations which had taken place relative to it: to enjoin the barristers who had signed the said letter to resume their offices before all the chambers of the court,(a) and to inflict upon them the disciplinary punishment due for the breach of discipline.

The Court, after mature deliberation, summed up in the following manner:

"1. Touching the competency:

"Inasmuch as the articles 1[illegible] and 103 of the decree of the 30th March, 1808, admit that the full right of jurisdiction in matters of discipline over the members of the order of Advocates belongs to the Court, and that it alone can exercise it in cases of infraction imputed to the council of the order itself:

"2. Touching the question:

"Inasmuch as the letter of the 15th June, 1844, addressed to the first President, and in which the members of the council of the order of Advocates declare that the words attributed to the first President ought to be publicly recalled, and that until disavowed it would not be possible for them to concur with this magistrate in the administration of justice:

"Considering that the said letter, drawn up and signed by all the members of the council collectively, although not entered on the registers of the order, constitutes the united deliberation, and not the individual act of the members who signed it:

"Considering that the object of the said letter, on the part of the members of the council in submitting to a special condition the continuation of their support in the administration of justice before one of the chambers of the court, evidently exceeds the powers of the council, regulated as they are by the laws and ordinances:

"Considering that, conformably to the said letter, the bâtonnier and several members of the council present at the sitting of the first chamber of the court on the 17th of June, refused to plead, and that since then all the members of the order have also absented themselves from the sittings of the same chamber:

"Considering that the rules of the Profession forbid those who exercise it to combine for the purpose of abandoning collectively the pleadings exclusively intrusted to them by the law, and thus to suspend as much as it is in their power the ordinary course of justice:

"Considering that, admitting the resolution adopted by the members of the council of the order to be the result of an erroneous interpretation of the words attributed to the first president, an interpretation which ought to have been outweighed by the proofs of esteem and goodwill so constantly given by the Court to the order of Advocates, for their loyal and useful co-operation in the administration of justice, the letter addressed to the first president, and the facts which followed it, constitute, nevertheless, on the part of the members of the council of the order, a failure in the duties of their Profession, in the respect due to the magistracy, and in the care of the interests whose defence is intrusted to them by the law:"

The Court—

"Orders the suppression of the letter of the 15th June, 1844, according to article 18 of the ordinance of the 20th November, 1822:

"Pronounces against those who signed the said letter the disciplinary penalty of the warning, and condemns them to the expenses:

"Orders that the present judgment should be immediately notified to the members of the council by the Attorney-General.

"Given with closed doors this 8th day of July, 1844, in the Court of Audience of the first chamber, in presence of the Baron Seguier, First President," &c. &c.

This judgment created great surprise, and the following day the bâtonnier and the members of the Council of Discipline immediately resigned, but were all unanimously re-elected; and these elections were so far remarkable, that there has never been an instance of so many voters. Aged barristers, who had retired from public life thirty or forty years, came to give their support to those who had so firmly and vigorously stood up in the defence of the rights of the Bar. Their venerable age of ninety years had not cooled their zeal for the honour of the Profession and society to which they belonged. All the members of Parliament connected with the Bar, whose names are inscribed on the list, attended the election, which was in effect a distinct and unmistakeable protest against the judgment of the Court.

Most members of the Bar in the several departments sent their approval and adhesion to their brethren in Paris; and the President of the advocates at the Court of Cassation came in the name of the council of that order to offer his assistance in appealing to the Supreme Court.

Thus the matter must remain until the Court of Cassation has decided upon the appeal.

All rational men in France unite in this public manifestation which the force of circumstances has drawn forth.

At a time when personal interests have such claims on society, it is worthy of remark that men opposed in political opinions, fortune, and habits, forsake their private interests and join in one feeling for the honour of their Profession.

The further progress of this appeal cannot fail to interest the members of the Profession throughout England, although the exact circumstances could not occur there, and I will send you a full statement of it, and the result.

I remain, Sir, yours truly,

N. T.

Avocat de la Cour Royale.

(a) This was too unreasonable—to compel a barrister to plead against his will would be an absurdity; accordingly, the Court was silent on this point.

Best on Presumptions of Law and Fact.

The next class of presumptions consists of those derived from the course of nature, and which are divided into physical and moral. Thus the law takes notice of the courses of the heavenly bodies, and it presumes all individuals to be possessed of the usual powers and faculties of the human race. Under this division falls the difficult question of the gestation of the human fœtus, which Mr. Best discusses at some length.

So there are presumptions derived from observation of the moral world. Thus every person is presumed to intend the consequences of his deliberate acts; every estate is presumed to be beneficial to the taker, and every man is presumed to accept that which is beneficial to him.

The next chapter is devoted to the presumptions drawn from the habit of society, usages of trade, &c. A usage presumes that agreements are made with reference to it.

"The general rule on this subject is thus laid down by Mr. Starkie:—'Where the terms used in a contract are of dubious meaning, the custom and usage of the country, or of any particular class of persons, as merchants conversant with the term, to use it in a particular sense, is evidence that the parties themselves so intended to use it. But where the meaning of the terms is plain and unequivocal, and, à fortiori, where the law has annexed a particular meaning to the use of the term, it is an universal rule that no evidence can be admitted of a custom or usage to receive such term in a different sense.' (2 Stark. Ev. 363, 3rd edition,—So, it is laid down in Yeats v. Pim (Holt, N. P. C. 95), that "no usage of trade can be set up in contravention of an express contract. All contracts made in the ordinary course of trade, without stipulation, warranty, or express provision, are presumed to incorporate the usage and custom of the trade to which they relate. The contracting parties being cognisant of such customs, are presumed (and the presumption is generally consistent with the truth) to have it in their intention that their contract shall not exclude such usages.'"

Certain presumptions are drawn from the usual course of business in public or private offices. Some of these deserve special notice :—

"Thus, if a letter is sent by post, that is primâ facie proof, until the contrary be proved, that the party to whom it is addressed received it in due course. (Warren v. Warren, 1 C. M. & R. 252, per Parke, B.; Kieran v. Johnson, 1 Stark. 109.) And in the case of Fletcher v. Braddyll (3 Stark. 64), it was held, that the date in the post-mark upon a letter is primâ facie evidence that the letter existed at the time of the date; but then it should be proved that the letter bears the genuine post-mark used by the office whose stamp it purports to bear at the time the letter reached its destination. So, in the case of private offices, where, in order to prove notice of dishonour of a bill of exchange, it was shewn that, on the day after it became due, the plaintiff wrote a letter to the defendant, stating that the bill had been dishonoured; and that this letter was put down on a table, where, according to the usage of the plaintiff's counting-house, letters for the post were always deposited, and that a porter carried them from thence to the post-office; but there was no evidence as to what had become of the letter after it was put down on the table; Lord Ellenborough held, that this was not primâ facie evidence of the letter's having been sent by post; saying, 'You must go farther. Some evidence must be given that the letter was taken from the table in the counting-house and put into the post-office. Had you called the porter, and he had said, that, although he had no recollection of the letter in question, he invariably carried to the post-office all the letters found on the table, this might have done.' (Hetherington v. Kemp, 4 Camp. 194.) So, where, in order to prove that a letter had been sent to India from London by the defendant, a clerk in his office was called, who produced a letter-book, in which the letter was copied in his handwriting, and stated the practice of the office to be for him to copy into the book all letters from India—that, when copied, they were given to the defendant to seal, and afterwards carried, either by the witness or another clerk to the letter-office at the India-house, but that there was no particular place of deposit in the office for the letters that were to be carried. Both the clerks swore that they always carried the letters given them for that purpose, but neither had any recollection of this particular letter. Lord Tenterden said, 'I have great reluctance to refuse this evidence, but am bound to do it. The practice here differs from that in most counting-houses; if the duty of the clerk had been to see the letters he copied carried to the post-office, it might have done; but here there is something else to be done afterwards, and that by the defendant.' (Toosey v. Williams, M. & M. 129.) And in the case of Hawker v. Salter,(a) where one of the plaintiffs' clerks stated that a letter from the plaintiffs, which the witness had copied, giving the defendant notice of dishonour of a bill of exchange, was sent by the post on the morning of the 10th January, but he had no recollection whether it was put in by himself or by another clerk; the whole Court of Common Pleas thought this was not sufficient evidence that the letter had been put into the post."

The usages of trade give rise to other presumptions :—

"Thus, where a partnership is found to exist between two persons, but there is no evidence to shew in what proportions the parties are interested, it is to be presumed that they are interested in equal shares. (Farrar v. Beswick, 1 M. & Rob. 527, per Parke, B.) So, bills of exchange and promissory notes are presumed to have been given for consideration,(b) and after a year from the issuing of a fiat in bankruptcy, it will be presumed that all the creditors have proved their debts, so that a release from those who had proved may be considered as a release from all the creditors."(c)

The next class of presumptions is that of the continuance of things in the state they have once existed, until the contrary is proved. Thus a debt proved is presumed to continue until payment or discharge proved; but statutes of limitations have circumscribed this presumption. A revocation or a surrender will be presumed from circumstances. The absence of a person for seven years unheard of is admitted as a presumption of his death, though not of the time of death; there are also some curious presumptions of survivorship, when several persons perish by a common calamity. Thus :—

"The cases to which we allude are those unfortunate ones which have from time to time presented themselves, where several individuals, generally of the same family, perish by a common calamity, such as shipwreck, earthquake, conflagration, or battle, and where most usually the priority in point of time of the death of one over the rest would exercise an influence on the rights of third parties claiming under them. The civil law and its commentators were occupied considerably with questions of this nature, and it seems to have been a general principle among them (subject, however, to exceptions), that, where the parties thus perishing together were parent and child, the latter, if under the age of puberty, was presumed to have died first, but if above that age, the rule was reversed. (Greenl. L. E. art 29, p. 35; Dig. lib. 34, tit. 5; de Rebus dubiis, 1, 9, sec. 4; 1, 16, sec. 1; 1, 22 and 1, 23.) In the case of husband and wife, the presumption seems to have been in favour of the survivorship of the husband. (Dig. lib. 34, tit. 5, de Rebus dubiis, 1, 9, sec. 3.) All these presumptions were based on the assumption, that the party deemed to have survived was likely, from his superior strength and robustness, to have struggled longer against death than his companions. A full and able examination of the writings of the civilians and old French lawyers on this subject will be found in the 4th volume of Mr. Burge's work on colonial law.(d)

"The law of this country does not appear as yet to have adopted any decided rule on this subject (1 Phill. & Am. Ev. 469; 4 Burge, Col. Law, 27; Greenl. L. E. sec. 29, p. 35), but, whenever it can be done, leaves the question of which of two parties survived the longest to be determined by a jury or ecclesiastical judge, according to the facts of the case, such as the comparative age, strength, and danger to which they were respectively exposed, and any other surrounding circumstances calculated to throw light upon it.(e) Still, however, cases have occurred from time to time, in which there were no such indicia to guide; and as the decisions are not numerous, we will place them before the reader in their chronological order, and then state what appears the legitimate inference to be deduced from them.

"The first (f) arose in the course of the last century. General Stanwix, in October, 1766, together with his second wife and a daughter by a former marriage, set sail in the same vessel from Dublin to England. The ship was lost at sea, and no account of the manner of her perishing ever received. Upon this, the maternal uncle and next of kin of the daughter claimed the effects of the general, on the principle of the civil law, that, where parent and child perish together, and the manner of their death is unknown, the child must be supposed to have survived the parent. Similar claims were, however, put forward by the nephew and next of kin of General Stanwix, who moved the King's Bench for a mandamus to compel the Prerogative Court to grant administration to him. The rule for that purpose was, after argument, made absolute, on the ground that the question of survivorship sought to be established could only arise under the Statute of Distributions, and that the nephew, being next of kin, was entitled to the administration of the goods of the deceased.(g) This case is clearly no decision on the subject, and the suit is said to have been compromised upon the recommendation of Lord Mansfield, who said he knew of no legal principle on which he could decide it.(h) The next case is that of Wright v. Sarmuda, or Wright v. Netherwood, (i) where a man, with his wife and child, embarked from Jamaica, and the vessel having never been seen afterwards, all on board were presumed to have perished. The case involves some other points, but Sir W. Wynne, in delivering his judgment, says, 'I desired the priority of the death of the parties to be considered. I always thought it the most rational presumption that all died together, and that none could transmit rights to another.' This case was followed by that of Taylor v. Diplock,(k) in which J. T. had constituted his wife sole executrix and residuary legatee. Both husband and wife were drowned in a transport on the 14th January, 1814; whereupon a question arose, whether the relations of the husband or those of the wife were entitled to the residue. The point appears to have been fully argued, when the authorities from the civil law and the two previous cases were cited, and the following judgment was delivered by Sir John Nicholl:—'This case is under singular circumstances; it arises upon the grant of an administration, with the will annexed, of J. T.; and the question is, whether the administration is to be granted to the next of kin of the testator or to the next of kin of the residuary legatee. . . . . The first and preliminary question is, on which side lies the presumption? on whom the burden of proof? The administration prayed is not to the wife, but to the husband—primâ facie, it belongs to the next of kin of the party deceased; to him, and to his property, the wife, or next of kin, has a right to administer under the Statute of Administrations. But it is laid down in the books, that, in case of there being a residuary legatee, the statute does not apply. The next of kin has the primâ facie right; but if there is a residuary legatee, he would be entitled; there is no such person here, for the party claims derivatively from the residuary legatee. The burden of proof lies on him to shew that the deceased left a residuary legatee; the next of kin of the residuary legatee is to shew that the wife survived her husband. The same was the rule in the civil law, as has been satisfactorily stated in argument—the proof of the wife's surviving must be shewn, otherwise the deceased left no residuary legatee. . . . The civil law is in favour of the last possessor. Thinking, as I do, that it is incumbent on the next of kin of the wife to prove her survivorship, how stands the case on the evidence? There is no direct evidence as to the point.' [The learned judge here went into an examination of the evidence, which was in some respects contradictory, and, in the course of his observations, says]—'None of the witnesses represent the husband at the moment to have been in a weak infirm state; none represent him as having lost his recollection. Looking at their comparative strength, there is nothing to take away the ordinary presumption, that a man was likely to survive a woman in a struggle of this description; still less is there any thing to prove the contrary. Upon the whole, I am not satisfied that proof is adduced that the wife survived. Taking it to be that both died together, the administration is due to the representative of the husband. I assume that they both perished at the same moment, and therefore I shall grant administration to the representative of the husband. I am not deciding that the husband survived the wife.' The next case is that of Mason v. Mason (1 Meriv. 308).(l) A father bequeathed his personal property to trustees, to pay to each of his children who should be living at the time of his death 5,000*l.* to be paid to the sons at twenty-one, and to the daughters at twenty-one or marriage respectively, with benefit of survivorship, in case any should die before their portions were respectively payable. The testator had ten children, nine of whom survived him; and he had, in January 1809, embarked with his son Francis in a ship bound from Bengal to England, which was lost on her voyage, and all on board perished. The cause came on for further directions, the Master having stated in his report that he was unable to state whether Francis survived his father or not, when Sir W. Grant, M. R. said, 'There are many instances in which principles of law have been adopted from the civilians by our English courts of justice, but none that I know of in which they have adopted presumptions of fact from the rules of the civil law. In General Stanwix's case, I thought the stress of the argument to be in favour of the representatives of the father. There were three contingencies: either the daughter survived the father, or the father the daughter, or both perished at the same instant. In the first of these cases alone would the representatives of the daughter have been entitled, those of the father in either of the two last. There were, therefore, two chances to one in favour of the latter. In the present case, I do not see what presumption is to be raised. Since it is impossible you should demonstrate, I think, that, if it were sent to an issue, you must fail for want of proof.' The plaintiff's counsel, however, pressing the matter, an issue was directed, to try whether the son, Francis, was living at the death of the testator. The result of that issue does not appear to be known. The next case is that of Colvin v H. M. Procurator-General (1 Hagg. N. S. 92, Mich. 1827), where an intestate was drowned, together with his wife, by the upsetting of a boat in the river Ganges. An application for administration having been made by a creditor, Sir J. Nicholl is reported to have said, that, 'in strictness, the representatives of the wife ought to have been cited; but, as the primâ facie presumption of law

(d) We say the old French lawyers, for the Code Napoléon makes the following express and clear provision for cases of this nature, when there are no circumstances from which it can be inferred which party survived. First, if both are under the age of fifteen years, the eldest is presumed to have survived; and if they are both above sixty, the presumption is in favour of the youngest. Secondly, if some are under fifteen, and others above sixty, the former are presumed to have survived. Thirdly, when they all are between the age of fifteen and sixty, and are both of the same sex, the youngest is presumed to have survived; but where they are of different sexes, a male is presumed to have survived a female of equal age, or whose age does not exceed his by a year. All these presumptions, however, only hold good until disproved. (Code Civil, liv. 3, tit. 1, ch. 1, des Successions, arts. 720, 721, 722.)

(e) The old case of Broughton v. Randall (Cro. Eliz. 503) is well known, where a father and son were seized as joint tenants, and to the heirs of the son. Both father and son were hanged at the same time in one cart; but because the son, as was deposed by some of the witnesses, survived, as appeared by his shaking his legs, and probably some other tokens, his wife was held entitled to her dower.

(f) See, however, the case of Hitchcock v. Beardsley (West. Rep. Temp. Hardw 445, June 26, 1738).

(g) R. v. Dr. Hay (1 W. Bl. 640). This case was deemed at the time to be altogether novel, and Mr. Fearne composed two ingenious arguments, one in favour of each of the claimants. See his posthumous works.

(h) Greenl. L. E. 35; note to Taylor v. Diplock (2 Phill. 266). If this be true, it shews that in the opinion of that learned judge, whose acquaintance with the Roman law was pretty extensive, the artificial rules of the Justinian Code on this subject had not then been adopted in this country.

was, that the husband survived, and as the property was small, and the debt large, the decree might pass.' In the next case, In the Goods of Selwyn (3 Hagg. N. S. 748, Hil. 1831), where a party directed, that his wife, if living at his decease, should have all his property, and be sole executrix; and, in the event of her dying in his lifetime, then the will appointed three executors and trustees; the testator and his wife perished at sea on the 18th August, 1831, but no proof could be obtained as to the exact time at which either died; their bodies were found floating near the shore some few days after the wreck. Probate having been prayed on the part of the substituted executors, Sir J. Nicholl said, 'Instances have occurred, where, under similar circumstances, the question has been, which of two persons survived; but in the absence of clear evidence, it has generally been taken that both died at the same moment.' [The learned judge here referred to Taylor v. Diplock.] 'Here the wife and her representatives would have no interest in the effects, unless under the words "in case she should be living at his death." The only difficulty arises from the other clause, providing that the substitution of the executors, and the devise over, shall take effect in the event of her "dying in his lifetime." Without going into the general presumption, that the husband was the stronger, and therefore survived, the intention is so clear, that, whatever might be the construction of the words in other courts, I shall decree probate to the substituted executors in common form; the next of kin making no opposition to the grant, and having it in their power, if they should hereafter see fit, to call in the probate and contest the point.' In the case of The Goods of Murray (1 Curtis, 596, Hil. T. 1837), it appeared that the deceased, with his wife and only child, proceeded on a voyage from Dublin to Quebec; that, during a heavy gale, the vessel struck the land, at which time the deceased was on deck, his wife and child being below in the cabin. The deceased then went below, shortly after which the vessel again struck, and went to pieces, and all three were drowned. The deceased having left a will, bequeathing the whole of his property to his wife, the Court granted administration cum testamento annexo to the next of kin of the husband, as a widower; 'there being (says the report) nothing to shew that the wife survived, the next of kin of the wife consenting.' The next year the case of Satterthwaite v. Powell (1 Curtis, 705, Jan. 31, 1838) came before Sir Herbert Jenner. By a marriage settlement, bearing date the 19th February, 1811, certain property was settled to the separate use of the wife for life, and after her death for the husband for life, in case he survived her; and after the death of the survivor, then, as she should appoint by deed or will, among her children; but in case of the children dying under twenty-one, and unmarried, and in default of appointment, then in trust for her executors, administrators, and assigns, and personal representatives, for their own use. The deceased made no appointment, and died intestate, having been drowned at sea with her husband and four children, when the ship was lost, and every one on board perished. Letters of administration having been granted to her mother, as her next of kin, who died leaving part of the goods unadministered, the question was raised, whether administration of the unadministered effects should be granted to the next of kin, or to the representatives of the husband, and the doctrine of the civil law and Taylor v. Diplock were referred to. Sir H. Jenner, in delivering judgment, said, 'It appeared to me that this point was settled; the principle has been frequently acted upon, that, where a party dies possessed of property, the right to that property passes to his next of kin, unless it be shewn to have passed to another by survivorship. Here, the next of kin of the husband claims the property which was vested in his wife; that claim must be made out; it must be shewn that the husband survived. The property remains where it is found to be vested, unless there be evidence to shew that it has been divested. The parties in this case must be presumed to have died at the same time; and, there being nothing to shew that the husband survived his wife, the administration must pass to her next of kin.' The last case on this subject seems to be that of Sillick v. Booth (1 Y. & Col. N. C. 117, Dec. 2, 1841), in which the question of survivorship among males arose before Knight Bruce, V. C. but the case was decided on the evidence, without touching this point.

"The true conclusion seems to be, that the law of England recognizes no artificial presumption in cases of this nature,(m) but leaves the real or supposed superior strength of one of the parties perishing by a common calamity to its natural weight, as a circumstance proper to be taken into consideration by a jury or ecclesiastical judge called on to determine the question of survivorship, but which circumstance, standing alone, is insufficient to shift the burden of proof. If, therefore, the party, who, by laying claim to property on the ground of survivorship of one individual over another, takes upon himself the onus of proving that survivorship, has no further evidence than the assumption,(n) that, from age or sex, one party struggled longer against their common death than his companion, it seems that no decree would be made in favour of the claim. But, on the other hand, it is not quite correct to say that the law presumes both to have perished at the same moment—this would be to establish an artificial presumption against manifest probability; although the practical consequence is in many cases the same, because, if the party on whom the onus of proof lies cannot shew affirmatively which died first, the question will necessarily be treated by the tribunal as a thing from its nature unascertainable, and that, for all that appears to the contrary, both individuals may have died at the same moment. It is submitted, that, in this way, most, if not all, the cases may be explained and reconciled."(o)

And here we pause again, having still many pages of interesting matter to explore.

(m) Greenl. L. E. art. 29, p. 35; 4 Burge's Colonial Law, 27; 1 Phill. & Am. Ev. 469.

(n) We say assumption, for in many cases it is nothing more. Primâ facie, a male would struggle longer than a female, if they were placed in exactly similar circumstances with respect to the impending danger; but where a ship has foundered at sea, who is to decide that question? And occasionally the superior health or strength of the female would reverse it all. It is right here to allude to a statement made by some modern physiological writers, that, in some species of deaths, the strongest persons perish first. In deaths from the effects of carbonic acid gas, for instance, the female adult is said to survive longer than the male adult. See the authorities cited in Beck's Med. Jurisp. p. 397, 7th edit. who also relates an incident furnished by a modern traveller, who, in giving an account of a caravan coming in want of water in a Nubian desert, says, "that the youngest slaves bore the thirst better than the rest, and that, while the grown-up boys all died, the children reached Egypt in safety."

(o) The presumption of survivorship of mother or child, when both die during delivery, is more properly a medical than a legal question. See, on this subject, Beck's Med. Jurisp. chap. 10, p. 387, 7th edit.

NECROLOGY.

Lord Huntingfield.—We have to notice the demise of the above nobleman, who expired on Saturday last at Heveningham-hall, Suffolk. The deceased, Joshua Vanneck Baron Huntingfield, of Heveningham-hall, in the peerage of Ireland, and a baronet of England, was eldest son of Joshua, first Lord Huntingfield, by Maria, second daughter of Mr. Andrew Thomson. He was born on the 12th of August, 1778, so at his death was within two days of completing his 66th year. He was twice married, namely, first, 2nd April, 1810, to Frances Catherine, eldest daughter of Mr. Challoner Arcedeckne, who died in 1815; and, secondly, 6th January, 1817, Lucy Jane, third daughter of Sir Charles Blois, Bart. who survives his lordship. He leaves an only daughter by the first marriage, the Hon. Mrs. Rowley, wife of Captain Robert Charles Rowley, and an only son by his second lady, namely, the Hon. Charles Andrew Vanneck, now Lord Huntingfield, who was born the 12th of January, 1818, and married, on the 6th of July, 1839, Miss Louisa Arcedeckne, only daughter of Mr. Andrew Arcedeckne.

The Hon. G. H. Neville died at his seat, near Godston, on Monday, in his 84th year. He was only brother to the late and uncle to the present Earl of Arbergavenny, and married 11th May, 1787, Caroline, daughter of the late Hon. Richard Walpole, by whom he has left issue the Rev. Henry Walpole and Mr. Reginald N. Walpole.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

The following scale of charges, reduced more than one-third, has been adopted for Advertisements of Estates for Sale, &c., exceeding 10 lines in length:

For the first 70 words . . . . . 5s.
For every succeeding 30 words . 1s.

THE MONEY MARKET.

The market is heavy, money being rather more in request. In the morning the price for Money was 98¾, and for the Account 98⅞. Now, 98⅞ buyers is the general value. The other stocks are dull. The premium upon Exchequer Bills has declined to 73s.

There has been a good deal of business done in the Dutch Funds. The Two-and-a-Half per Cents. at one period were sold at a fall to 61¼, and the Five per Cents. are now only at 100⅞; Spanish Bonds have remained at 22¼, the Three per Cents. at 33¼; Portuguese Converted are at 43⅞; the Five per Cents. Mexican at 35⅜ ½; and Brazilian at 84¼ ½.

The Railway Shares continue rather dull. Birmingham are down to 123½ and 122½ premium, but this is ex dividend. Generally prices seem steady.

The Pinner Hill mansion and estate in Middlesex, belonging to the Honourable Lady Pell, and which was offered for sale by Messrs. Daniel Smith and Son, on the 29th of May last, and then withdrawn, has been recently sold to Mr. W. Tooke, of Russell-square and Bedford-row, for the sum of 12,000*l*. It was originally the property of Mr. Serjt. Sellon, and by him sold in 1818 to Mr. Serjt. Pell, afterwards Sir Albert Pell, a judge in the Court of Bankruptcy.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Thursday, Aug. 8.

Ex parte LLEWELLYN, re WRIGHT, BURGESS, and TAYLOR.

Jurisdiction of commissioner—Solicitor's lien—Charges for advising.

Where the claim of a solicitor to a lien on a deed is disputed, a commissioner in bankruptcy has no power to decide the question and to direct the deed to be taken from him.

Charges for advice given relating to legal matters may be made by any person, whether a solicitor or not.

This was a petition presented by Mr. Thomas Llewellyn, a solicitor, residing at Tunstall, under the following circumstances. In the year 1842, the petitioner, who was then the managing and articled clerk of a Mr. Baker, of Tunstall, since deceased, was consulted by Burgess and Taylor, two of the bankrupts, relative to their general partnership transactions, and amongst other things prepared a certain deed of covenant, which remained in Mr. Baker's hands up to the month of January, 1843, when the petitioner was duly admitted an attorney and solicitor, and succeeded to Mr. Baker's practice at Tunstall, whereupon the deed in question was, amongst other papers, delivered over to the petitioner by Mr. Baker. The petitioner was consulted by Burgess and Taylor on several occasions subsequent to his admission and up to the time of the bankruptcy, which took place on the 27th of February, 1843. The petitioner, on being applied to by Mr. John Ward, of Burslem, the solicitor to the bankruptcy, to deliver up the deed in question, informed him that he claimed a lien thereon to the extent of 4*l.* 9*s.* for professional business done for the bankrupts, a bill for which had been delivered to them, and admitted to be correct and reasonable, but which, however, Mr. Ward refused to allow, on the ground that as the bill was made out in Mr. Baker's name, the petitioner had no lien on the deed. On the 20th of June last Mr. Ward caused the petitioner to be summoned to the Birmingham District Court of Bankruptcy, to be examined touching the estate of the bankrupts and to produce the deed, and paid him with such summons travelling expenses, at the rate of 10d. per mile. The petitioner obeyed the summons, and produced the deed; whereupon Mr Commissioner Daniell, after the examination of the petitioner by Mr. Ward, ordered the petitioner to deliver up the deed which he refused to do unless his lien was discharged, and explained to the commissioner, that although the bill was made out in Mr. Baker's name, in point of fact items to the amount of 2*l.* 15*s.* 4d. were for business done by the petitioner alone, after Mr. Baker had resigned his practice at Tunstall to the petitioner, and expressed his willingness to deliver up the deeds on payment of that amount only. Mr. Commissioner Daniell, however, decreed that the petitioner was concluded by the bill he had delivered in Mr. Baker's name from setting up his claim individually to any portion of it, and ordered the deed to be delivered up, and upon the petitioner still refusing to obey such order, the commissioner ordered the assistant messenger of the court to seize the deed, which was forthwith done, although the petitioner protested against his so doing. The petitioner then applied for an additional allowance for his loss of time, &c. in obeying the summons, which Mr Ward refused to pay.

The petitioner then presented this petition to the Court of Review, praying that the order of the commissioner might be rescinded, and the deed in question be delivered back to the petitioner, and that he, the petitioner, might be paid and allowed the further sum for his loss of time, &c. in attending at Birmingham in obedience to the summons, together with the costs of the petition.

Russell and Bacon, for the petitioner.

Swanston, for the assignees.

The CHIEF JUDGE said, that with respect to the deed, the commissioner had not power to take it from the petitioner, observing that the suit of clothes in which the petitioner went to the court might as well have been taken from him, for, certainly, the commissioner had as much right to the one as the other. An action of trover had, as it were, been commenced, tried, a verdict given, and execution issued, without the intervention of jury or counsel, by a commissioner in bankruptcy. Such a course of administering justice was new to him. With respect to the further allowance for the petitioner's attendance at Birmingham, the Chief Judge considered the petitioner fairly entitled to the amount asked for, and said that it was unreasonable a solicitor should be taken upwards of fifty miles from his home, lose his time, neglect his practice, besides incurring personal inconvenience, and all for the small sum paid the petitioner by the solicitor to the assignees. With respect to the lien, the Chief Judge said that he had no power to decide that question, and the remedy of the assignees for recovering the deed should have been by action of trover, but the charges of the petitioner were fair and moderate, and as to that portion of them alleged to have been made before the petitioner was admitted a solicitor, they were merely for advising, and were such as any person, whether solicitor or not, might legally claim.

Ordered as prayed.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Saturday, Aug. 17.

(Before Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE.)

Re D. ROSS.

Fraud—Commission agents—Circumstances under which the Court will withhold certificate.

The bankrupt in this case had carried on the business of a commission agent in Love-lane, City, and this day he made application for his certificate.

The application was opposed on the grounds that the bankrupt had gone into speculations at a time when he was insolvent; and that while his gross profits in business were only 322*l.* (in a year and a half), his expenditure was 603*l.* for trade, and upwards of 300*l.* for personal expenses. The bankrupt had also liabilities to the amount of 11,000*l.* hanging over his head, in consequence of a Scotch sequestration which was issued against him in 1842, and he had not obtained his certificate under that sequestration.

It was contended on the part of the bankrupt, that had the parties now opposing carried out their agreement, he would not only have been solvent, but would have had a surplus.

The bankrupt and one of the opposing creditors were examined at considerable length, when

Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE said that this was a case of a party who had liabilities in Scotland to the extent of 11,000*l.* unsatisfied, and who again starts into business and makes a gross profit of 322*l.* in the course of a trading extending over a period of 18 months, while his trade expenses amount to near double his property—namely, 603*l.* and his personal expenses nearly as much as the whole of his profits. Under these circumstances he enters into a large speculation, and in part of these speculations he receives bills to the amount of 11,000*l.*; and I may here say, that a man who enters into such expensive speculations ought not only to be in possession of capital, but ought also to have a much higher credit than a man who had 11,000*l.* of liabilities hanging over him could be supposed to have had. Instead of handing over the money, in pursuance of his agreement, he pays his previously contracted debts, and besides this he had given acceptances for 1,800*l.* payable at 10 and 20 days' date, at a time when it was perfectly impossible to have met them. It is no excuse for him to say that it was in consequence of the other parties not acting up to their agreement. The bankrupt appears to have no regret for having entered into these speculations, and that without the slightest means of payment. There is also against him his vexatious defence of actions; and it is no excuse for him to say that he did so in order to gain time for effecting a composition; for he had no right to throw the burthen upon his creditors, nor to put them to costs. I am, therefore, of opinion that there has been misconduct upon his part, in entering into the speculations to which I have referred, and also his vexatious defence of actions which were brought against him. These circumstances induce me to withhold his certificate for a year and a half from the date of his passing his last examination.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE legislative doings of the past session must continue for a long time to absorb the attention of the Profession. To find a place for such of them as are of the most urgent interest, we are compelled to exclude much other material, and consequently to give to the LAW TIMES an unusual monotony. In addition to the measures already announced for the next session the Government organ positively affirms that an extensive change in the Game Laws is contemplated.

Bills in Progress.

CLERKS OF PETTY SESSIONS, &c.

"A Bill to regulate the Appointment and Payment of Clerks and other Officers of the Courts of Petty and Quarter Sessions of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery."

[Note.—The Words printed in Italics are proposed to be inserted in the Committee.]

Preamble. Appointment of Clerk of Petty Sessions.—Whereas it is expedient to make provision for the appointment and payment by salary of clerks and criers to Courts of Petty Sessions of the Peace; Be it enacted, by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the justices of the peace for each county in England who shall be resident within, or who shall have elected to act more especially for any division or district in each county, and who shall have agreed, on the respective times and places at which they will thereafter severally hold the respective courts of petty sessions, to be thereafter holden within such division or district, and who shall have given notice thereof, under their hands, to the clerk of the peace for the county or division of a county or district in which the same shall be selected, or the major part of them who shall be present at the first general session of the peace which shall be holden next after the expiration of one calendar month after the day of passing this Act, or which shall be holden not earlier than one calendar month next after the day on which such notification as aforesaid shall have been given, shall proceed to fix a time and place for the election of a clerk of petty sessions, for the particular division or district for which they shall have elected to act as aforesaid, of which an entry shall be made by the clerk of the peace, in a book to be kept for the purposes required by this Act, and be signed by the said justices then present, or the major part of them.

2. Salary of clerk of petty sessions to be then fixed.—And be it enacted, That after such time and place shall be appointed as last aforesaid, the said justices, or the major part of them then present, shall proceed to fix the salary to be thereafter paid to the clerk of petty sessions, to be thereafter appointed as aforesaid, of which an entry shall be made by the clerk of the peace in the said book, and be signed by the said justices, or the major part of them, subject to confirmation at the next general session of the peace to be holden for the county.

3. Resolution to be confirmed at the next general sessions.—And be it enacted, That such resolution shall be submitted to a meeting of the justices of the county, at the next general session of the peace to be holden after such resolution as aforesaid; and it shall be competent for the justices then present, or the major part of them, to confirm such last-mentioned resolution, or to reduce the salary to be named as aforesaid, of which resolution a minute shall be made by the clerk of the peace, and be signed by the chairman at such session.

4. Salary to be paid out of county rate.—And be it enacted, That the salary to be so resolved to be paid as last aforesaid, shall be paid out of the county rate, and a copy of the resolution at each of the said last-mentioned meetings shall be sent by the clerk of the peace, certified by writing under his hand, to the treasurer of the county, which shall be his authority for paying and allowing such salary in manner hereinafter mentioned.

5. Election and qualification of clerk.—And be it enacted, That at the time and place fixed for the election, the justices of the peace then present shall elect a clerk of petty sessions, and no person shall be eligible for the office of clerk of petty sessions who shall not have been admitted an attorney of one or more of the superior Courts of Common Law for five years at the least before the date of such election, unless in the case of any person who shall have acted as clerk to the justices of any division before the passing of this Act, whom the justices present at the election, or the greater number of them, shall certify under their hands to be sufficiently qualified by experience and knowledge of the law to perform the duties of clerk of petty sessions.

6. In case of vacancy another election to be made.—And be it enacted, That whenever any vacancy shall arise in the office of the clerk of petty sessions, the same course shall be pursued for the election of a successor to the office, save that the salary may be altered by the justices present, or the major part of them, at any general or quarter session of the peace which shall next follow the occasion of a vacancy in any such office.

7. Clerk of petty sessions to hold office during pleasure of magistrates. And be it enacted, That such person so elected clerk of any petty sessions shall hold his office during the pleasure of the justices of the peace, who shall from time to time act for the division or district for which such appointment shall be made, or the major part of them, and be subject to dismissal by the justices acting for the district or districts for which he shall be so appointed, at a meeting to be called on the written request of any five or more of such justices to the clerk of the peace for the county.

8. Security for discharge of duties may be required.—And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the justices of the peace on their election of any clerk of petty sessions as aforesaid, to require security to be given by their clerk for the due discharge of his office, and payment of all monies received, or which ought to be received by him, in such sum or sums, and with such number of persons as they may deem fitting to declare in writing at the time of such election.

9. Duties of clerk of petty sessions. And be it enacted, that the clerk of petty sessions shall be required to do all the business now done by the clerks of justices of the peace as such, and to advise the justices of the peace for the county in which he shall be appointed, or any of them, in all matters relating to his or their office, on being required so to do, and also to transact all necessary business and duty in relation to directions for the search for, apprehension, detention, committal and prosecution of any offenders, for offences committed within the district for which he shall be appointed, or in any other parts of the county if he shall be so directed by the justices or any two or more of them of his division, at any general or special session of the peace, or any adjournment thereof, or the assizes on all occasions on which such prosecutions shall be conducted at the expense of the county in which he shall be appointed, and prepare, engross, and present the indictments on those occasions, also to assist the justices of the peace, and particularly the justices acting for the division or district for which he shall be appointed, on all occasions when his assistance shall be necessary, whether in or out of court, to attend all courts of petty sessions within the district or division for which he shall be so appointed, the courts of general or quarter sessions of the peace, or all special sessions of the peace, or any adjournment thereof, and the general sessions of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery, whenever it shall be necessary for him so to do, and to assist the clerk of the peace in the duties of his office, and in the taxing and ascertaining the amount of costs, expenses, or charges to be paid out of the county rate, in or about the searching for, apprehension, committal, or prosecution of any offender, or the attendance of any witness or witnesses, or any other expense to which the county rate may be liable, to attend to the recovery and collection of fees, or moneys instead of fees, and of all penalties or sums of money for the use of the county rate, and to keep true and correct accounts of all moneys received or paid by him in the discharge of his duties, which shall be open at all times to any justice of the peace, treasurer of the county, or clerk of the peace of the county; that he shall cause an entry or minute to be from time to time made of the proceedings to be taken by the justices of the peace in any session or sitting, or on any special occasion, which shall remain in the custody of the clerk of petty sessions for the time being, and be a record of the proceedings of such court, and be open to the inspection of any justice of the peace, who shall be at liberty to make or cause a copy to be made of any entry to be kept by such clerk of petty sessions.

10. Notice of irregular attendance to be given to the quarter sessions.—And be it enacted, that if one hour shall elapse from the time appointed for holding any petty session of the peace without the attendance of the clerk or his deputy, the session shall be thereby adjourned until the next day appointed for holding the sessions; and at the next petty session of the peace which shall be holden, an entry of all such adjournments for want of attendance of the clerk shall be made in the minutes of the proceedings, and in case one hour from the time so appointed shall elapse without the attendance of at least one justice, the session shall be thereby adjourned to the next day appointed for holding the petty sessions, and in every such case and also in case one hour shall elapse without the attendance of at least two of the justices, the clerk shall make an entry of the fact in the minutes of the proceedings, and a report of every such failure or irregularity of attendance shall be made by the clerk of petty sessions to the clerk of the peace for the county, who shall lay an abstract of all such reports before the justices assembled in quarter session, and the justices shall cause the clerk of the peace to send a copy of such abstract, with any remarks which they may be desirous of sending therewith, to the Secretary of State: provided always, that any one justice who may be in attendance at the time and place appointed may proceed to act in all matters cognizable at such session for which the presence of two justices is not requisite, and shall then adjourn the session; and any justices who may be in attendance before such adjournment of the session may proceed to act as if they had been in attendance at the time appointed, and nothing herein contained shall authorize the departure of any person summoned to attend such petty session until the matter upon which he was summoned shall have been heard, or until the session shall be adjourned or concluded.

11. Clerk of petty sessions to render an account.—And be it enacted, That each clerk of the petty sessions, to be appointed as aforesaid, shall, at every quarter session of the peace, which shall be held next after each of the four most usual quarterly days in the year, render on oath to the treasurer of the county, which oath the said treasurer, or any justice of the peace acting for the county, shall be authorized to administer, a just and true account of all fines or penalties imposed by any justice or justices to whom he shall act as clerk, and of all sums or fees collected and received by him by virtue of his office, or which, but for his default, he might have collected and received, or which shall have become due and payable on account of such office in and for the then next preceding quarter, according to the form contained in the schedule annexed to this Act, or according to such other form, and with such particulars of receipt or other use, as shall from time to time be directed by any one of Her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, and shall produce all books, documents, or vouchers, which shall from time to time be required by the said treasurer or any justice of the peace for the county, to vouch for the accuracy of the same; and if the said treasurer, or the magistrates of the county, or any three of them, shall be dissatisfied with any account to be rendered as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for him or them to refer the same to one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, who shall, by any officer of the Court of Queen's Bench, or other person, to be by him appointed for that purpose, and by such ways and means as he shall think fit, investigate the said accounts, or any item or items therein, and make, or cause to be made, such allowances or disallowances therein as he shall deem just and reasonable, and such secretary shall under his hand finally settle and certify in writing the amount to be paid or allowed by the clerk who shall render such account.

12. Declaration to be annexed to the account.—And be it enacted, That to every such account shall be annexed a declaration, under the hand of the clerk of petty sessions, to be made before a justice of the peace for the county, affirming the truth and accuracy of such account, and every clerk of petty sessions who shall make any such declaration, knowing the account to which the declaration is annexed to be false in any particular, and being thereof convicted by his own confession or by the oath of one or more credible witnesses before any two justices of the peace for the county, shall forfeit and pay the sum of pounds, to be recovered, if not forthwith paid, by distress and sale of his goods and chattels.

13. And pay amount due to the treasurer of the county.—And be it enacted, That the clerk of petty sessions shall, at the time of rendering such account, pay or cause to be paid to the said treasurer such sum of money as may appear by the account rendered by him, to be from time to time payable by him, and also such further sum as may at any time be certified to be the amount of such fees and fines after such reference as aforesaid, within forty-eight hours after notification thereof by the treasurer in writing to him to be sent by the post.

14. In default made, treasurer to lodge complaint.—And be it enacted, That if default be made in payment as aforesaid within twenty-one days after the same shall be directed to be paid as aforesaid, the said treasurer shall make complaint thereof to any two justices of the peace acting for the county, who shall be thereupon authorized by writing under their hands to stay the payment of any salary to such clerk, and to issue their warrant for levying the amount due, after making all due allowance for salary or otherwise as they may deem proper, having relation to the probable amount received by such clerk for monies not accounted for in the meantime, by distress and sale of goods or other property of any kind or description, and by apprehension and detention of such defaulter, and committal to the debtors' prison of the county until the sum so appearing or certified to be due, together with interest after the yearly rate of five pounds in the hundred, and all costs, charges, and expences in obtaining the same shall have been fully raised and paid, and such clerk shall, by the issue of a second warrant for such purpose as aforesaid, be thereby forthwith removed from his office, and be incapable of re-election thereto, and it shall be lawful, on such payments to be thereupon made, for the treasurer to set off and allow any sum of money which shall be then due for salary to such clerk, or to require the render of an account of all monies received or which ought to have been received by such clerk from the time of rendering the last account, before any allowance of such salary as aforesaid shall be made: provided nevertheless, That if after three days' previous notice of motion to the treasurer for cause shewn before the magistrates of the county at the next general session or quarter session of the peace assembled it shall be made to appear that such warrant was improperly or improvidently issued, such clerk may be restored to his office by the magistrates there present, or the major part of them.

15. If clerk of petty sessions die, account to be rendered by his executors or administrators.—And be it enacted, That in case any clerk of petty sessions shall happen to die before the render of an account or the next quarterly period for rendering of his account, or shall resign or be dismissed from his office, the executors or administrators of the person so dying, or the person himself so resigning or dismissed, shall render such account as aforesaid, and be entitled to payment of the salary proportioned to the time which shall have elapsed since the last render of an account and payment of salary, and that the account shall be enforced by summons and warrant of arrest of the person, and payment of any balance due, which may be enforced by distress and sale, or arrest and detention of the person in manner aforesaid.

16. Justices may appoint crier of petty sessions court. And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the justices of the peace who shall have given notice of the intention to act for any division or district as aforesaid, or the major part of them, at any meeting to be appointed by notice to be given by the clerk of the petty sessions, to the justices of the particular division or district, twenty-one days at the least before the holding of such meeting, to elect a crier of their court of petty sessions, for the purpose of keeping order therein, and performing such other duties as such justices shall from time to time appoint, or in case there shall be any police constables, appointed to such division or district, or any paid constable appointed for the same, by any resolution of vestry, to order one of such constables to perform the duty of crier of the court of petty sessions, and the person to be so appointed shall receive such salary out of the county rate as the justices at the time of such appointment shall order, subject nevertheless to such order or regulation or confirmation of such appointment and salary as the justices to be assembled at the next general or quarter session of the peace shall order, after twenty-one days' notice of such appointment shall have been given in manner hereinbefore directed by the clerk of the county to the justices of the county, and no moneys shall be paid out of the county rate until such order shall have been made in that behalf.

17. Crier to hold office at pleasure of the justices.—And be it enacted, That the crier shall hold his office during the pleasure of the justices of the division, and in case of his dismissal or death, the justices may, from time to time, proceed to the election of another in manner aforesaid, who may be paid in manner aforesaid.

18. Clerks of the peace to render an account of fees received.—And be it enacted, That the clerk of the peace for every county in England, not being a county of a city or town, shall within three months next after the passing of this Act make or cause to be made out and render to one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, or to such person or persons as shall be named by him, an account in writing in such form and with such particulars of receipt or otherwise, as he or they shall require, of all lawful fees and emoluments to which such clerk of the peace shall have been entitled, and which shall have become due or been received in respect of his office or employment as aforesaid, and of all disbursements and allowances made thereout and charges affecting the same in each of the seven years next preceding the first day of January one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, exclusive of any fees which may have been received from any place within the county which shall have ceased to pay any fees to the clerk of the peace of the county, or which shall have been decreased or abolished from any cause whatsoever.

19. If such cannot be made out.—And be it enacted, That in case any clerk of the peace shall not be able to make or cause to be made out any such account as aforesaid for every one of the years for which the same is hereby directed to be rendered, or within the time aforesaid, he shall specify in the account which he shall render the reason why he is not able to render an account for any such year or years as may be omitted.

20. Secretary of State to examine legality of fees and amount of fees.—And be it enacted, That the said Secretary of State, or any persons or person as aforesaid, shall be authorized to inquire into and examine as well the legality as the amount of the fees and emoluments contained in any such account as aforesaid, and of all disbursements and allowances made in respect thereof, and of all charges affecting the same, and to require proof to be made upon oath, either personally or in writing, of any matter into which such secretary or other persons or person as aforesaid may think it necessary to inquire, which oath may be administered by such Secretary of State, or the persons or person as aforesaid, or any one of them, or by a judge or commissioner of any of her Majesty's courts of record at Westminster.

21. Fifty years' receipt the legalized fee.—And whereas it may be difficult in many cases to find any certain rule by which the legality of such fees and emoluments can be strictly ascertained, and it is expedient that the compensation directed by this Act should be made upon equitable principles; be it therefore enacted, That all fees and emoluments received and enjoyed in respect of the said office which the Secretary of State, or persons or person aforesaid, shall deem to be reasonable, and which shall have been received for fifty years before the said first day of January one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, or which shall have been uniformly received in respect of any matter or business which shall have first arisen within the said period of fifty years, by authority of Parliament or other legal authority, shall be deemed to be legal fees and emoluments within the meaning of this Act.

22. Judges of Court of Queen's Bench may be consulted thereon.—And be it enacted, That if the said Secretary of State, or such persons or person to be appointed as aforesaid, shall entertain any doubt as to the propriety or reasonableness of any such fees, or any matter connected therewith, it shall be lawful for him or them to consult thereon the Court of Queen's Bench, or any one or more of the judges of such court, and such court, judge or judges respectively shall give their or his advice and opinion, in writing, on a case to be submitted to them or him thereon as early as the same can be reasonably done.

23. Secretary of State, &c. to ascertain gross and net amount of fee.—And be it enacted, That the said Secretary of State, or the person or persons as aforesaid, shall ascertain the gross and net annual value, according to a fair average of the said seven years as aforesaid, of the lawful fees and emoluments of all such clerks of the peace as aforesaid; and in every case wherein it shall happen that the fees and emoluments relating to any particular year or years shall have been omitted by any clerk of the peace in the account to be rendered as aforesaid, and the Secretary of State, or the persons or person aforesaid, shall be satisfied with the reason given for such omission, the gross and net annual value of the office or employment of such officer shall be estimated by the Secretary of State, or the person or persons to be appointed as aforesaid, according to the best of his or their judgment; and, in order to assist in forming a judgment therein, regard shall be had to the amount of fees and emoluments which in the year or years omitted have been received by other clerks of the peace, the fees and emoluments of whose offices or employment may, in the opinion of the Secretary of State, or the person or persons aforesaid, afford a fair ground of comparison.

24. Gross and net amount to be certified.—And be it enacted, That when the said Secretary of State, or the person or persons aforesaid, shall have ascertained to his or their satisfaction the gross and net annual value of the fees and emoluments of such officers respectively, or any of them, computed as aforesaid, together with the particulars of the disbursements, allowances and charges constituting the difference between such gross and net annual value, they shall from time to time certify the same under their hands to the Lord High Treasurer, or the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the time being, who shall lay copies of every certificate of the said Secretary of State or the person or persons aforesaid, before both houses of Parliament, and cause a copy thereof to be sent to the lord lieutenant of the county for which the particular clerk of the peace shall have been appointed, in respect of whose fees such certificate shall have been made, and to each chairman of the quarter sessions to be held within the county.

25. Legal fees to be received till otherwise directed.—And be it enacted, That, until otherwise directed by lawful authority, all fees, monies, and emoluments that now are or may be legally received in respect of such office of clerk of the peace, shall continue to be received, and shall be accounted for in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

26. Clerk of peace to render account in manner directed every year to Treasury.—And be it enacted, That every clerk of the peace now appointed to that office shall, during his or their continuance or interest in such office or employment, render to one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, upon oath, to be sworn before a judge of one of the said courts, or a commissioner duly authorized to take affidavits therein or otherwise, as the said secretary of state for the time being shall from time to time direct, on the day of in every year, or within ten days then next following, a true account in writing of the gross and net amount of all such fees, moneys, and emoluments as would have been received by such clerk of the peace for his own use, if this Act had not passed, which would otherwise have become due on account of such office, specifying the particulars of the disbursements, allowances and charges, constituting the difference between such gross and net amounts at and for such time or times, in such form and with such further particulars of receipt or otherwise, as the said Secretary of State, or other persons or person to be appointed by virtue of this Act shall fix.

27. Accounts to be examined.—And be it enacted, That in case any one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State shall be dissatisfied with any account to be rendered as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said Secretary of State for the time being, by the examination of such persons as he or any person or persons to be nominated by his order for that purpose shall think fit, and on oath to be administered by any judge or justice of the peace, if he or such nominee or nominees as aforesaid shall deem it necessary to be administered, to inquire into and investigate the said accounts, or any item therein, and all or any of the disbursements, allowances or charges therein contained, and for that purpose to call for any book, document, account or voucher, and to bring any other person or persons, or his or their books and papers before him or them, or otherwise to inquire thereof therein as he or they shall think just and reasonable, and in such inquiry all persons competent to give information in the matters shall assist therein when required so to do, and by means aforesaid to make such allowances or disallowances, and any one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state shall, by means aforesaid, finally settle and certify in writing the net amount of the fees and emoluments to which such account relates.

28. Surplus of fees to be paid to Treasury.—And be it enacted, That in case the net amount of such fees and emoluments which shall have become due to any person who, on the said first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, shall have held any such office of clerk of the peace, shall exceed the net annual value thereof, which shall have been certified as aforesaid, the surplus shall, within seven days after the rendering such account as aforesaid, be paid into the Bank of England to the credit of her Majesty's Exchequer, and shall be carried to the account of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; and if default shall be made in the payment of any such surplus as aforesaid, the amount thereof shall be and be deemed a specialty debt due to the Crown, and recoverable as such; and thereupon any one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state may from time to time, by order under his hand, appoint such person as he shall think proper to receive all the fees and emoluments of the said office in respect of which such surplus is due; and every such person shall accordingly have full power to receive and compel payment of such fees, moneys, and emoluments until such surplus, with interest thereon, and all costs and expenses occasioned by the nonpayment thereof, are satisfied, and the moneys so to be received shall be applied in payment of the same accordingly; and if any surplus shall remain in hand, after making all such payments, the same shall be paid to the person entitled to such office of clerk of the peace: provided always, that every such officer may have and receive out of the county rate so much money over and above the moneys to be certified as aforesaid as the justices of the peace of the county for which he shall be appointed, or the majority of them assembled at any general session of the peace to be holden in and for the said county, after twenty-one days' notice of an intended motion for that purpose given them of such intended motion, shall, by writing under their hands, allow him to receive, as a reasonable compensation for his additional trouble in respect of the increase of the business of his said office or employment, and provided such allowance shall have been first approved by one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, by writing under his hand for that purpose.

29. Deficiency to be paid by treasury out of Consolidated Fund.—And be it enacted, That in case the net amount of such fees, monies, and emoluments which shall become due to any clerk of the peace who, on the said first day of January one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, shall have held any such office or employment as aforesaid, shall fall short of the net annual value thereof, which shall have been certified as aforesaid, every such person shall, during his or their continuance or interest in such office, be entitled to receive from the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, by warrant for that purpose to be made under the hand of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, within one calendar month next after the rendering of such account and approval thereof as aforesaid, by one of the said secretaries of state, the full amount of the difference between the net sum which shall so have become due, and such certified value, and the amount so to be paid shall be charged upon and paid out of the said Consolidated Fund, without any fee or deduction whatsoever.

30. Provision in case of death, resignation, or dismissal of clerk of peace.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That in case any clerk of the peace entitled to receive or required to pay over any sum of money under the provision of this Act shall die or resign, or be dismissed from his office before the termination of any year, the executors or administrators of the person so dying, or the person himself so resigning or dismissed, shall render such account as aforesaid for such part of the year during which the clerk of the peace so dying or resigning, or dismissed, shall have held such office, and shall be entitled to receive or required to pay over an amount proportioned to that part of the year during which such person shall have held the same.

31. No claim for compensation.—And be it enacted, That no person who, after the said first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, shall be appointed to any office of clerk of the peace, or to any office under the provision of this Act, shall, nor shall any clerk of the peace who may appear to the satisfaction of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, or the person or persons to be appointed as aforesaid by virtue of this Act, to have accepted office upon condition of relinquishing any claim to compensation, in case of its abolition, be deemed entitled to prefer any claim to compensation in respect of any alteration of any kind whatever which shall be made by lawful authority in the constitution, process, practice, pleadings, or other proceedings, in respect of which any fee shall have been heretofore received or be payable, or in the constitution, duties, or emoluments of the office of clerk of the peace, or any other office herein named by such authority as aforesaid.

32. Clerk of the peace may be dismissed from office notwithstanding this Act.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any clerk of the peace from being dismissed from any office or employment which he may have held on the said first day of January one thousand eight hundred and forty five, in like manner as he might have been dismissed therefrom if this Act had not been made, or to give him any greater or other interest in any office than he might have lawfully claimed or exercised if this Act had not been made.

33. Duties of clerk of the peace.—And be it enacted, That the clerk of the peace shall discharge all duties now performed by any clerk of the peace, except as herein excepted or otherwise provided, and shall also attend the general sessions of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery of the county, for which he shall be appointed, and perform the duties there, if required, of clerk of assize or clerk of indictments, and shall ascertain the costs and expenses of all parties there who shall claim payment of the same out of the county rate, and make order for payment of the same accordingly by the treasurer of the county, and that the clerks of petty sessions shall assist him in the performance of that duty, in all matters in particular which arise in or near to the division or district in which they shall respectively act.

34. On death, dismissal, or resignation of present clerks of peace, justices to appoint salary, to be paid out of county rate.—And be it enacted, That the justices of each county in England at their next general session of the peace to be holden next after the expiration of one calendar month from the date of the decease, retirement, or dismissal from office of any present clerk of the peace for such county, shall fix the amount of salary to be paid to any future clerk of the peace, which shall be thereafter paid to him half-yearly, and commence from the date of his appointment to office, instead of all fees or other emoluments of office, by the treasurer of the county out of the county rate, without fee; and all fees or monies theretofore collected and received by the clerk of the peace, or which would otherwise have been receivable by him under any form, by virtue of his office, shall thenceforth be duly collected by him, and accounted for in manner hereinbefore directed, and be by him paid to the treasurer of the county in aid of the county rate, notwithstanding that such fees, monies, or emoluments may be now or hereafter given by any legal authority to the custos rotulorum or clerk of the peace by name.

Rights of custos rotulorum as to appointment of clerk of peace preserved.—Provided always, That nothing herein contained shall affect any right which may be vested in or exercised by the custos rotulorum of any county, of appointing persons to the office of clerk of the peace, nor of the justices to be thereafter assembled at any general sessions of the peace to be holden in and for the county, or the majority of them then present, after notice to be given as aforesaid, for altering, increasing, or reducing such salary by certificate as aforesaid: provided always, That any resolution as to the amount of salary shall be certified to and approved by one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, by writing, under his hand, before any payment shall be made in respect thereof.

35. As to future appointments to offices whereof an account is hereby required.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That no future appointment of any person to any office of the clerk of the peace shall be valid, so as to entitle such person to any salary or emolument in respect thereof, until such person shall have given notice in writing of such his appointment to the treasurer of the county, and to one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state as aforesaid for the time being; but nevertheless all fees or emoluments to be received by virtue of such office shall be accounted for to the treasurer of the county for which he shall be appointed in manner aforesaid for the time being, and shall be paid by him in aid of the county rate.

36. False swearing under this Act.—And be it enacted, That every person who shall swear falsely to any matter respecting which an oath either personally or in writing is by this Act required or authorized to be made, and shall be convicted of so doing wilfully and corruptly, shall be guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury.

37. Fees of clerk of assize, &c. to be uniform.—And whereas it is desirable that the fees of clerk of assize, clerks of Arraigns, clerks of indictments, associates, clerks of the peace of counties, and clerks to justices of the peace of counties, and other such public officers, should be uniform throughout England; be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of State to cause to be prepared and to settle and approve such tables of fees to be taken as aforesaid, and from time to time to alter and vary the same at his discretion; but no fees shall hereafter be allowed to be taken on any account whatsoever for or in the nature of traverse fees, nor from any prisoner or person who shall be under recognizances or otherwise, for or in the nature of proclamation or acquittal fees, nor for or respecting the discharge of any recognizance; and when such table of fees shall from time to time be settled and approved by such secretary of state, the fees therein mentioned may thenceforth be lawfully taken by the person therein mentioned, and such tables of fees, so settled and approved as aforesaid, shall be transmitted to the clerk of the peace in each county, and by him distributed to each officer appointed to receive the same, and such fees, and no other, shall be taken by such officer from and after the time to be named by the secretary of state thereon; provided that until tables of the fees so to be taken as aforesaid shall have been made and settled and approved as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the officers and officer before mentioned respectively to take and receive the fees heretofore lawfully receivable by them or him respectively.

38. No fee to be taken but such as are contained in table.—And be it enacted, That after such tables or table of fees shall be respectively settled and approved as aforesaid, it shall not be lawful to take any other fee than such as shall be therein allowed, and that any person who shall take any sum of money by way of fee which shall not be so allowed, shall be subjected to a penalty of five pounds for every offence, which may be recovered by any person who will sue for the same, in any her Majesty's courts of law at Westminster.

39. Not to affect other compensations.—Provided nevertheless, and be it enacted, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prevent any officer named in this Act, by name of his office, from having and continuing to be entitled to receive the compensation awarded or certified to be due to him under or by virtue of any Act of Parliament heretofore passed for that purpose, for the term or time to which he shall have been heretofore adjudged entitled to receive the same by competent authority.

40. Officer appointed to perform duties in person, unless leave be given.—And be it enacted, That no person shall act as clerk of assize, clerk of the peace, or clerk to petty sessions, than the person and persons to be appointed to those offices, except in cases of sickness or other unavoidable causes, or for necessary recreation, and that no person shall act as deputy who has not been previously nominated by the principal, and approved for the particular occasion as follows, that is, the approval of a deputy for a clerk of assize shall be made by the two judges who shall for the occasion go the particular circuit for which he was appointed; the approval of a deputy for the clerk of the peace shall be made by the custos rotulorum and at least five justices of the peace of the county; and the approval of a clerk of petty sessions shall be made by at least three justices of the district for which he shall have been appointed.

41. No addition to salary for deputy to clerk of the peace or clerks of petty sessions.—And be it enacted, That no charges for deputy or for any business in the way of additional charge shall be made on the county by any clerk of the peace or clerk of petty sessions, but that all duties heretofore discharged, or which may hereby or by authority of Parliament or otherwise howsoever devolve on any clerk of the peace or clerk of petty sessions by authority of Parliament, beside those heretofore usually discharged by a clerk of the peace or clerk to justices of the peace, shall form part of the respective duties for which such salary as aforesaid shall be given.

42. On death of officer, records, papers, &c. to be handed over.—And be it enacted, That in case of the death, resignation or removal of any clerk of the peace, clerk of the petty sessions or any other officer mentioned in this Act, all papers and documents relating to his office shall be delivered to his successor, by whomsoever the same may be possessed, and any judge of one of the superior courts at Westminster, or any two justices of the peace acting for the county, division or district to which the same may belong or appertain, shall and may have power to enforce such delivery by order for that purpose, and on further default, by summons and order, and by arrest and detention of any person refusing to obey their order for that purpose, in proof on oath of the possession by such person of any such papers and documents and of the due service of such summons and order respectively on such person personally, or by delivery at his usual place of abode with a member of the House, and in case of refusal on such arrest, such person may be committed to the county gaol until obedience to such orders shall have been enforced; such judge or justices as aforesaid are hereby respectively authorized and empowered, in case of disobedience to any order as aforesaid, to issue a warrant or warrants for search and detention of the papers and documents in any place or places where the same shall be declared on oath before any judge or justice of the peace the same may be suspected to be.

43. Municipal corporations may agree with present or future officer.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the council of any municipal corporation in England, with the approbation of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, to agree with the present or any future clerk of the peace, clerk to the justices, or any other officer of the corporation entitled to the receipt of fees, to pay to any such officer, for the discharge of his duties, any sum of money not exceeding an average estimate of seven preceding years, to be ascertained in such manner as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall direct, or to appoint in like manner such sum of money to be paid to any officer to be hereafter elected to office, out of the borough fund, instead of such fees, and thereupon all fees to be thenceforth taken or received by such officer shall be accounted for and paid over to the treasurer of the borough in aid of the borough fund, in such manner as the said Commissioners of the Treasury shall direct.

44. Act, except as to power to appoint salaries, not to extend to municipal corporations.—And be it enacted, That nothing in this Act contained shall extend to the fees allowed to clerks of the peace, clerks of justices, or constables of any municipal corporation in England, save as to the provision lastly hereby made for paying officers of boroughs by salaries instead of fees, and as to the application of the fees in those cases.

45. Construction of this Act.—And be it enacted, That in the construction of this Act, unless there shall be any thing in the context repugnant to such construction, the word "county" shall include a riding of the county of York, a division of the county of Lincoln, and a liberty, not being an incorporated city, town or borough, and having a separate commission of the peace; and that the words "clerk of the peace" shall include any person acting as such, or any deputy duly appointed; and that the word "division" shall include a county containing only one special sessional division, and a hundred, tithing, wapentake or other division of a county for which special sessions are now legally held, or may be legally held, by virtue of the statutes for the regulation of such divisions, and a liberty, as aforesaid, having a separate commission of the peace, and a division of any such liberty, for which special sessions now are or may be legally held.

46. Extent of Act.—And be it enacted, That this Act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland, or to the city of London, or to the borough of Southwark.

47. Act may be amended.—And be it enacted, That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

NEW STATUTES.

Of the Session 8 Victoria.

Cap. LXX.

An Act for facilitating Arrangements between Debtors and Creditors. (August 6, 1844.)

Petition.—Whereas it is expedient that trust deeds and other amicable modes of arrangement between debtors and their creditors should be facilitated, and that better means should be provided for carrying the same into effect: be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That from and after the first day of September next after the passing of this Act it shall be lawful for any debtor who is unable to meet his engagements with his creditors, such debtor not being a trader within the meaning of the statutes now in force relating to bankrupts, with the concurrence of one-third in number and value of his creditors (testified by their signing his petition), to present a petition to the Court of Bankruptcy, setting forth a full account of his debts, and the consideration thereof, and the names, residences, and occupations of his creditors, and also a full account of his estate and effects, whether in possession, reversion, or expectancy, and of all debts and rights due to or claimed by him, and of all property of what kind soever held in trust for him; and also setting forth that he is unable to meet his engagements with his creditors, and the true cause of such inability and also setting forth such proposal as he is able to make for the future payment or the compromise of such debts or engagements; and that one-third in number and value of his creditors have assented to such proposal; and praying that such proposal (or such modification thereof as by the majority of his creditors should be determined) should be carried into effect under the superintendence and control of the said Court; and that he, the said petitioning debtor, should in the meantime be protected from arrest, by order of the said Court.

2. Preliminary examination. Disqualifications. Meeting of creditors.—And be it enacted, That, upon the presentation of such petition, one of the commissioners of the said court, in such rotation as by order of the said Court shall be appointed, shall privately examine into the matter of the said petition, and for that purpose shall have power to examine upon oath such petitioning debtor, and any creditor concurring in his petition, and any witness produced by such petitioning debtor; and if such commissioner shall be satisfied of the truth of the several matters alleged in such petition, and that the debts of such petitioning debtor have not been contracted by reason of any manner of fraud or breach of trust, or without reasonable probability at the time of contract of being able to pay the same, or by reason of any judgment in any prosecution for breach of the revenue laws, or in any action for breach of promise of marriage, seduction, criminal conversation, libel, slander, assault, battery, malicious arrest, malicious suing out a fiat in bankruptcy, or malicious trespass, and that such petitioning debtor has made a full disclosure of his debts and credits, estate and effects, and is desirous of making a bonâ fide arrangement with all his creditors, and that his proposal to that effect is reasonable, and proper to be executed under the direction of the said Court, it shall be lawful for such commissioner to direct that a meeting of all the creditors of such petitioning debtor should be convened at such time and place as the said commissioner shall appoint, notice of which meeting shall be given in writing to every such creditor not less than seven or more than twenty-eight days before the same is held.

3. President.—And be it enacted, That the said commissioner shall appoint a fit and proper person, being a registrar or official assignee of the said court, or one of the principal creditors of the said petitioning debtor, to preside at such meeting of creditors, and to report the resolutions thereof to the said commissioner.

4. First meeting of creditors.—And be it enacted, That if at such meeting of creditors the major part in number and value, or nine-tenths in value, or nine-tenths in number whose debts exceed twenty pounds, shall assent to the proposal of such petitioning debtor, or to any modification thereof, the president of such meeting shall appoint another meeting of the creditors of such petitioning debtor to be held not earlier than seven or later than twenty-eight days from such first meeting, of which second meeting, and of the purpose thereof, notice in writing shall be personally served on every creditor who was not present by himself or his appointed agent at such first meeting, three clear days at least before the day appointed for such second meeting; provided, however, that the commissioner to whom such petition as aforesaid is referred may, if he shall think fit, make an order, in any special case, that service of such notice at the last place of abode or business of any creditor shall be deemed good service.

5. Second meeting of creditors.—And be it enacted, that if at such second meeting of creditors three-fifths in number and value of all the creditors present, or nine-tenths in value, or nine-tenths in number whose debts exceed twenty pounds, shall agree to accept such arrangement or composition as was assented to at the said first meeting of creditors, and shall reduce the terms thereof into writing, and sign the same, such resolution or agreement (subject to such confirmation as is hereinafter enacted) shall thenceforth be binding and of full force, as well against the said petitioning debtor as against all persons who were creditors of the said petitioning debtor at the date of his said petition, and who had notice of the said several meetings of creditors; provided, however, that such resolution or agreement shall not be valid unless one full third in number and value of all the creditors of such petitioning debtor were present at such second meeting, either in person or by an authorized agent.

6. Confirmation. Certificate. Protection.—And be it enacted, That within fifteen days next after the passing of such resolution or agreement the same shall be submitted to the commissioner acting in the matter of the said petition, who, if he shall think the same reasonable and proper to be executed under the direction of the said court, shall cause the same to be filed and entered of record therein, and shall grant to the said petitioning debtor a certificate of such filing, and shall from time to time indorse on such certificate his protection of such petitioning debtor from arrest; and such petitioning debtor shall be free from arrest at the suit of any person being a creditor at the date of his said petition, and having had such several notice or notices as aforesaid; and any officer arresting such petitioning debtor at the suit of any such creditor, and on sight of such certificate and protection not releasing such petitioning debtor, shall be liable to such penalty as is provided respecting bankrupts in the like case by the statutes now in force concerning bankrupts; provided, however, that no such protection shall be valid in favour of any petitioning debtor who shall be proved to have been about to abscond beyond the jurisdiction of the said Court of Bankruptcy, or who has concealed or is concealing any part of his estate or effects, nor against any creditor whose debt is not truly specified in the said petition, nor against any creditor whose debt has been contracted by reason of any manner of fraud or breach of trust.

7. Temporary protection.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for such commissioner as aforesaid, upon the examination of such petition as aforesaid, to grant to such petitioning debtor a temporary and limited protection from arrest, and such petitioning debtor shall be accordingly free from arrest for such time and within such limits and conditions as shall be specified in the said protection, with the like penalties on any officer arresting him as aforesaid; and it shall be lawful for such commissioner to require such petitioning debtor to give bail for his appearance at the said several meetings of his creditors; and every petitioning debtor shall have such protection from arrest when going to, remaining in, and returning from his necessary attendance on the said commissioner, or the said meetings of creditors, as is enjoyed by any party or witness attending any Court of Record.

8. Vesting of estate.—And be it enacted, That from and after the date of the filing of such resolution and agreement as aforesaid all the estate and effects of such petitioning debtor shall vest in the trustee (if any such shall be appointed) by virtue of such resolutions, and without any deed, as fully as if such trustee were an assignee under the statutes relating to bankrupts; and every such trustee may sue and be sued as if he were such assignee in bankruptcy.

9. Audits.—And be it enacted, That every such trustee as aforesaid shall, once at least in every six months, or oftener if the said commissioner or any two or more of the creditors of such petitioning debtor whose debts amount to one-tenth of the debts of such debtor require it, produce to the said commissioner, on oath or solemn declaration, a full and true account of all moneys, property, and effects of such petitioning debtor which have come to his hands, and of the disposal thereof; and the said commissioner shall examine the same, and shall certify the result of such examination, and shall, if need be, order payment to the creditors of such petitioning debtor, according to the terms of such resolution or agreement as aforesaid.

10. Examinations.—And be it enacted, That if it shall at any time appear to the said commissioner, on the representation of such trustee as aforesaid, or of any two creditors as aforesaid, that such petitioning debtor has not made a true discovery of his estate and effects, or has not duly accounted for any subsequently acquired property (if required by the true intent and meaning of the said resolution or agreement), or has wilfully made any false return of creditors, it shall be lawful for the said commissioner to summon such petitioning debtor to be examined before him upon oath touching such matters; and such summons and examination shall be enforced in such manner as is now practised in the summoning and examination of bankrupts.

11. Special meetings.—And be it enacted, That in case any difficulty shall arise in the execution of the said resolution or agreement, it shall be lawful for the said commissioner to cause a special meeting of the creditors of such petitioning debtor to be assembled; and the resolution of the majority of the said creditors at such meeting, to confirm, alter, or annul the whole or any part of the said resolution or agreement, shall be as valid as if it had been part of the original resolution or agreement: provided, however, that if one-third in number and value of the creditors of such petitioning debtor do not attend such meeting in manner aforesaid, the resolution thereof shall not be valid unless the same is approved and confirmed by the said commissioner.

12. Meeting of creditors.—And be it enacted, That so soon as the said resolution or agreement shall have been carried into effect, and the creditors of the said petitioning debtor shall have been satisfied, according to the tenor of the same, the said commissioner shall cause a meeting of the said creditors to be held before him, and, on being satisfied that the trustee has fully performed his trust, shall give to such trustee a certificate thereof under his hand and seal; and such certificate shall be a full release and acquittance to the said trustee, both in law and equity, for all matters done by him as such trustee: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for such trustee to receive for his services in the execution of his said trust such sum of money as the major part in number and value of the creditors assembled at such last-mentioned meeting shall appoint, subject to the approval and allowance of the said commissioner.

13. Certificate.—And be it enacted, That at such last-mentioned meeting the said commissioner shall give to the said petitioning debtor a certificate, under the hand and seal of the said commissioner, of the filing of the said petition, and of the resolution or agreement of the creditors of the said petitioning debtor, and that the said resolution or agreement has been fully carried into effect; and such certificate shall thenceforth operate to all intents and purposes as fully as if the same were a certificate of conformity under the statutes relating to bankrupts, excepting only that no debt herein excepted from the operation of this Act shall be barred by the said certificate.

14. Rules and orders.—And be it enacted, That for the better carrying into effect the several purposes of this Act it shall be lawful for the said Court of Bankruptcy from time to time to make such rules, regulations, and orders as the said court shall think fit: Provided, however, that such rules, regulations, and orders shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within twenty-one days from the making the same, if Parliament be then sitting, or if not, twenty-one days from the commencement of the session next after the making of such rules, regulations, or orders.

15. Interpretation of Act.—And be it enacted, That this Act shall extend to aliens, denizens, and women; and that all words in the singular number may be interpreted in the plural number, and vice versâ, and that all words in the masculine gender may be interpreted to include the feminine gender; and that this Act be construed beneficially to creditors; and, if any doubts should arise in the construction thereof, that it be construed by analogy to the laws now in force relating to bankrupts and the practice thereof.

16. Act not to extend to Scotland or Ireland.—And be it enacted, That this Act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland.

Cap. XCVI.

An Act to amend the Law of Insolvency, Bankruptcy, and Execution. (Aug. 9, 1844.)

5 & 6 Vict. c. 116. Petition for protection from process may be presented to any court of bankruptcy without any notice given.—Whereas it is expedient to amend an Act passed in the sixth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors." be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That a petition for protection from process under the said Act may be presented to any court or district court of bankruptcy within the district of which the petitioner shall have resided twelve calendar months, without any notice whatever being given to any creditor, or in the London Gazette, or any newspaper.

2. Form of petition. Petition and schedule to be verified by affidavit in the form specified.—And be it enacted, That every petition for protection from process presented after the commencement of this Act to the Court of Bankruptcy, or to any district court of bankruptcy, shall be in the form specified in the schedule hereunto annexed (A. No. 1); and such petition, and the schedule required by the said recited Act to be annexed thereto, shall be verified by an affidavit of the petitioner in the form specified in the schedule hereunto annexed (A. No. 2); and such affidavit shall be sworn in like manner as affidavits in matters of bankruptcy may be sworn by any law now in force relating to bankrupts, and shall be annexed to such petition at the time of filing the same; and if such petition and affidavit shall not be in the form herein prescribed, such petition shall be dismissed.

3. Forthwith after filing of petition a notice to be given to creditors and advertised in the Gazette, &c. and a public sitting of the court appointed for first examination of petitioner and choice of creditors' assignee. Commissioner may reject or remove the person so chosen.—And be it enacted, That the commissioner authorized to act in the matter of such petition shall forthwith, after such petition shall have been filed, cause notice of the filing of such petition to be given, in such manner as the commissioner shall direct, to the creditors named in the schedule of the petitioner, and resident within the United Kingdom, and whose debts respectively shall amount to the sum of five pounds, and to be inserted in the London Gazette and in some newspaper or newspapers circulating within the county wherein the petitioner shall reside, and shall thereby appoint a public sitting of the court whenever the commissioner shall think fit for the first examination of the petitioner; and the commissioner may adjourn such sitting from time to time, and allow the petitioner to amend his schedule and correct any misstatement therein, at the discretion of the commissioner, and the choice of the creditors' assignee shall take place at such sitting, or any adjournment thereof, and shall be made by the majority in number and value of the creditors who may attend, by themselves or their attorneys duly authorized by letters of attorney in that behalf, before the commissioner on such day; provided that the commissioner shall have power to reject any person so chosen who shall appear to him unfit to be such assignee as aforesaid, or to remove any assignee; and upon such rejection or removal a new choice of another assignee shall be made in like manner.

4. Property of petitioner to vest in assignees for the time being by virtue of the appointment.—And be it enacted, that the property of the petitioner shall, for the purposes of the said recited Act and of this Act, vest in the assignee or assignees for the time being, by virtue of the appointment of such assignee or assignees; and every such assignee shall be deemed to be an officer of the court in which the petition shall be filed, and shall be liable as such to the control thereof, provided always, that the property of the petitioner shall in every case be possessed and received by the official assignee alone, save where it shall be otherwise directed by the commissioner: provided also, that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, or the judges and commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy in London, or the majority of them, if authorized so to do by the Lord Chancellor, from time to time to make such orders, rules, and regulations for the security of the property of the petitioner as he or they may judge reasonable and proper.

5. Upon petition being filed, commissioner to have the like power for seizure of the property of the petitioner, and the examination of him and other persons, as in bankruptcy.—And be it enacted, That upon such petition being filed the commissioner shall possess the like power and authority touching the seizure of the property of such petitioner (except as herein otherwise directed), and also to compel the attendance of and to examine such petitioner and his wife, and every person known or suspected to have any of the property of such petitioner in his possession, or who is supposed to be indebted to such petitioner, and every person whom the commissioner believes capable of giving any information concerning the person, trade, business, or calling, dealings, or property of such petitioner, or any information material to the full disclosure of the dealings of such petitioner, and to enforce both obedience to such examination, and the production of books, deeds, papers, writings, and other documents, as by any law now in force relating to bankrupts are possessed by the several courts authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy touching the seizure of property and the examination of any bankrupt or other person under a fiat in bankruptcy.

6. Any prisoner in execution upon judgment in an action for debt, not being a trader, or being a trader whose debts are less than 300l. may by petition be protected from process and from being detained in prison for any debt mentioned in his schedule: and if so detained, commissioner may order his discharge.—And be it declared and enacted, That any prisoner in execution upon any judgment obtained in any action for the recovery of any debt, either not being a trader within the meaning of the statutes relating to bankrupts, or being a trader within the meaning of the said statutes owing debts amounting on the whole to less than three hundred pounds, may be a petitioner for protection from process; and every such petitioner to whom an interim order for protection shall have been given shall not only be protected from process, as provided by the said recited Act, but also from being detained in prison in execution upon any judgment obtained in any action for the recovery of any debt mentioned in his schedule: and if any such petitioner, being a prisoner in execution, shall be detained in prison in execution upon any such judgment, it shall be lawful for the commissioner to order any officer who shall have such petitioner in custody by virtue of such execution, to discharge such petitioner out of custody as to such execution, without exacting any fee, and such officer shall hereby be indemnified for so doing; and no sheriff, gaoler, or other person whatsoever shall be liable to any action as for the escape of any such prisoner by reason of such his discharge; and such petitioner so discharged shall be protected by his interim order from all process for such time as the commissioner shall by such interim order or any renewal thereof think fit to appoint, until the making of the final order for protection, in the same manner as if such petitioner had not been a prisoner in execution: provided always, that after the time allowed by any such interim order or any renewal thereof (as the case may be) shall have elapsed, such petitioner shall not by such discharge be protected from being again taken in execution upon such judgment, but such judgment shall remain in full force and effect notwithstanding such discharge.

7. If petitioner be in custody, and is not entitled to be discharged, he may be brought up by warrant.—And be it enacted, That whenever any such petitioner is a prisoner under any process, attachment, execution, commitment, or sentence, and is not entitled to his discharge in manner aforesaid, the commissioner may, by warrant under his hand directed to the person in whose custody such petitioner is confined, cause such petitioner to be brought before him for examination at any sitting of the court, either public or private, and the expense of bringing such petitioner shall be paid out of his estate, and such person shall be indemnified by the warrant of the commissioner for bringing up such petitioner.

8. In case of death of petitioner.—And be it enacted, That if any petitioner for protection from process shall die after the filing of his petition, the commissioner may proceed in the matter of such petition, for the discovery and distribution of his property, as he might have done if the petitioner were living.

9. Wearing apparel, bedding, working tools, &c. of the value of 20l. excepted from the operation of the Act.—And be it enacted, That the wearing apparel, bedding, and other necessaries of the petitioner and his family, and the working tools and implements of the petitioner, not exceeding in the whole the value of twenty pounds, may be excepted by the petitioner in his petition from the operation of the said recited Act and of this Act, and in such case shall be altogether excluded from the operation of the said Acts: provided always, that such excepted articles, with the values thereof respectively, to be ascertained and appraised, if the commissioner shall think fit, in such manner as he shall direct, be fully and truly described by the petitioner in his schedule, but otherwise the exception thereof shall be of no force as to any part of the same.

10. Official assignee may act until creditors' assignee appointed; may sell the property if commissioner so order, and make allowance to petitioner for his support. Property vested in official assignee to go to his successor. If petition dismissed, all acts theretofore done according to the Act to be good and valid.—And be it enacted, That until an assignee shall be chosen by the creditors of any petitioner for protection from process the official assignee nominated by the commissioner upon the filing of the petition of such petitioner shall be enabled to act, and shall be deemed to be, to all intents and purposes, a sole assignee of the property of such petitioner, and, if the commissioner shall so order, may sell or otherwise dispose of such property, or any part thereof, and make such allowance out of the property of such petitioner for the support of himself and his family as the commissioner shall direct; and the property vested in any official assignee alone, or jointly with any assignee chosen by creditors under the said recited Act, this Act, or either of them, shall not remain in such official assignee alone, or jointly with such assignee chosen by creditors, if such official assignee shall resign or be removed from his office, nor in the heirs, executors, or administrators of such official assignee, nor in the surviving assignee alone, in case of the death of such official assignee, but all such property shall in every such case go to and be vested in the successor in office of such official assignee alone, or jointly with the assignee chosen by the creditors (if any), as the case may be; and whenever any such petition shall have been or shall be dismissed, all sales and dispositions of property, and payments duly made, and all other acts theretofore done by any assignee, or any person or persons acting under his authority, or by any messenger or other person under the authority of the commissioner, according to the provisions of the said recited Act and of this Act, or either of them, shall be good and valid, but the property of the petitioner shall otherwise in such case revest in such petitioner; provided, however, that no action or suit shall be prosecuted or commenced against such assignee, messenger, or other person or persons acting as aforesaid, except to recover any property of such petitioner detained after an order made by the commissioner for the delivery thereof, and demand made thereupon.

11. Assignees may execute powers which the petitioner might have executed for his own benefit.—And be it enacted, That all powers vested in any petitioner for protection from process, whose estate shall, under the provisions of the said recited Act, of this Act, or of either of them, have been vested in an assignee or assignees, which such petitioner might legally execute for his own benefit (except the right of nomination to any vacant ecclesiastical benefice), shall be hereby vested in such assignee or assignees, to be by such assignee or assignees executed for the benefit of the creditors of such petitioner under this Act, in such manner as such petitioner might have executed the same.

12. Where lease accepted by assignees, the petitioner not liable for the rent. Assignees not determining whether to accept the lease, the lessor may apply to the Court.—And be it enacted, That in all cases in which any such petitioner shall be entitled to any lease or agreement for a lease, and his assignee or assignees shall accept the same, and the benefit thereof, as part of such petitioner's property, the said petitioner shall not be liable to pay any rent accruing after the filing of his petition, nor be in any manner sued after such acceptance, in respect of any subsequent non-observance or non peformance of the conditions, covenants, or agreements therein contained: provided that in all such cases as aforesaid it shall be lawful for the lessor or person agreeing to make such lease, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, if the said assignee or assignees shall decline, upon his or their being required so to do, to determine whether he or they will or will not accept such lease or agreement for a lease, to apply to the commissioner, praying that he or they may either so accept the same, or deliver up such lease or agreement for a lease, and the possession of the premises demised or intended to be demised; and the commissioner shall thereupon make such order as in all the circumstances of the case shall seem meet and just, and such order shall be binding on all parties.

13. Assignees may sue in their own names; may make composition for debts, may submit differences to arbitration. Proviso for consent of creditors to compositions and arbitrations.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the assignee or assignees of any such petitioner, and such assignee or assignees shall be hereby empowered, to sue, from time to time as there may be occasion, in his or their own name or names, for the recovery, obtaining, and enforcing of any property or rights of such petitioner, but in trust for the benefit of the creditors of such petitioner, according to the provisions of the said recited Act and this Act, and to give such discharge and discharges to any person or persons who shall be respectively indebted to such petitioner as may be requisite; and to make compositions with any debtors or accountants to such petitioner, where the same shall appear necessary, and to take such reasonable part of any such debts as can upon such composition be gotten in full discharge of such debts and accounts; and to submit to arbitration any difference or dispute between such assignee or assignees, and any person or persons for or on account or by reason of any matter, cause, or thing relating to the property of such petitioner: provided nevertheless, that no such composition, or submission to arbitration, shall be made, nor any suit in equity be commenced, by any such assignee or assignees, without the consent in writing of the major part in value of the creditors of such petitioner, who shall meet together pursuant to a notice of such meeting, to be published at least fourteen days before such meeting in the London Gazette, and also in some newspaper usually circulated in the neighbourhood of the place where such petitioner had his last usual residence before the filing of his petition, nor without the approbation of the commissioner.

14. Creditors to vote according to balance due to them on an account fairly stated.—And be it enacted, That in all matters wherein creditors shall vote, or wherein the assent or dissent of creditors shall be exercised in pursuance of or in carrying into effect the said recited Act or this Act, every creditor shall be accounted such in respect of such amount only as upon an account fairly stated between the parties, after allowing the value of mortgaged property, and other such available securities and liens, shall appear to be the balance due; and that all disputes arising in such matters concerning any such amount shall, upon application duly made in that behalf, be examined into by the commissioner, who shall have power to determine the same, and, if it seem fit, to refer the examination thereof to an officer of the said court: provided always, that the amount in respect of which any such creditor shall vote in any such matter shall not be conclusive of the amount of his or her debt for any ulterior purposes, in pursuance of the provisions of this Act.

15. Where the petitioner is beneficially entitled to stock, the commissioner may order a transfer.—And be it enacted, That if any such petitioner shall at the time of filing his petition, or at any time before such petitioner shall become entitled to his final order according to this Act, have any Government stocks, funds, or annuities, or any of the stock or shares of or in any public company, either in England, Scotland, or Ireland, standing in his own name in his own right, it shall be lawful for the commissioner, whenever he shall deem fit so to do, to order all persons whose act or consent is thereto necessary to transfer the same into the name of such assignee or assignees as aforesaid; and all such persons whose act or consent is so necessary as aforesaid shall be hereby indemnified for all things done or permitted pursuant to such order.

16. Suits not to be abated by the death or removal of assignees.—And be it enacted, That whenever any assignee shall die, resign, or be removed, or a new assignee shall be duly appointed, no action at law or suit in equity shall be thereby abated, but the court in which any action or suit is depending may, upon the suggestion of such death, resignation, or removal, and new appointment (if any), allow the name or names of the surviving or new assignee to be substituted in the place of the former, and such action or suit shall be prosecuted in the name or names of the said surviving or new assignee, in the same manner as if he had originally commenced the same.

17. Goods in possession, order, or disposition of petitioner, whereof he was reputed owner, to be deemed his property. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 55.—And be it enacted, That if any petitioner for protection from process shall, at the time of filing his petition, by the consent and permission of the true owner thereof, have in his possession, order, or disposition any goods or chattels whereof such petitioner was reputed owner, or whereof he had taken upon him the sale, alteration, or disposition as owner, the same shall be deemed to be the property of such petitioner, so as to become vested in the assignee or assignees for the time being of the estate and effects of such petitioner; provided that no transfer or assignment of any ship or vessel, or any share thereof, made as a security for any debt or debts, either by way of mortgage or assignment, duly registered according to the provisions of an Act made in the session of Parliament held in the third and fourth years of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the registering of British Vessels," shall be invalidated or affected by reason of such possession, order, or disposition of the same as aforesaid.

18. Distress not to be available for more than one year's rent.—And be it enacted, That no distress for rent made and levied, after the filing of any petition for protection from process, upon the goods or effects of the petitioner, shall be available for more than one year's rent accrued prior to the filing of such petition, but that the landlord or party to whom the rent shall be due shall and may be a creditor for the overplus of the rent due, and for which the distress shall not be available, and entitled to all the provisions made for creditors by the said recited Act or by this Act.

19. Voluntary preference fraudulent and void as against assignees. Proviso.—And be it enacted, That if the petitioner shall, before or after the filing of his petition, in contemplation of his becoming insolvent, or being in insolvent circumstances, voluntarily convey, assign, transfer, charge, deliver, or make over any estate, real or personal, security for money, bond, bill, note, money, goods, or effects whatsoever, to any creditor or creditors, or to any person or persons in trust for, or to or for the use, benefit, or advantage of any creditor or creditors, or to any person who is or may be liable as surety for such petitioner, every such conveyance, assignment, transfer, charge, delivery, and making over shall be deemed fraudulent and void as against any assignee or assignees of the estate and effects of such petitioner appointed under the provisions of the said recited Act and of this Act, or of either of them: provided always, that no such conveyance, assignment, transfer, charge, delivery, or making over shall be so deemed fraudulent and void if made at any time prior to three months before the filing of the petition, and not with the view or intention, by the party so conveying, assigning, transferring, charging, delivering, or making over, of petitioning the Court for protection from process.

20. Provisions of 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, extended to the assignees of insolvent petitioners.—And be it enacted, That the provisions of an Act passed in the third year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for preventing Frauds upon Creditors by secret Warrants of Attorney to confess Judgment," shall extend to the assignee or assignees of every petitioner for protection from process whose estate shall, after the expiration of twenty-one days next after his execution of such warrant of attorney, or giving of such cognovit actionem as therein mentioned, be vested in an assignee or assignees under the provisions of the said recited Act and of this Act or of either of them, as if the said Act so intituled as aforesaid had been expressly herein enacted; and every such warrant of attorney, and judgment and execution thereon, and every such cognovit actionem, and judgment entered up thereon, and execution taken out on such judgment, as are declared by the said last-mentioned Act to be fraudulent and void against the assignees mentioned therein, shall be deemed equally fraudulent and void against the assignee or assignees of the estate of such petitioner, and such assignee or assignees shall be entitled to recover back and receive, for the use of the creditors of such petitioner, all the moneys levied and effects seized under or by virtue of any such judgment or execution.

21. Warrant of attorney and cognovit actionem not to be acted upon against property of insolvent petitioner after filing his petition.—And be it enacted, That in all cases where any petitioner for protection from process, whose estate shall have been vested in an assignee or assignees under the provisions of the said recited Act and of this Act, or of either of them, shall have executed any warrant of attorney to confess judgment, or shall have given any cognovit actionem or bill of sale, whether for a valuable consideration or otherwise, no person shall, after the filing of the petition of such petitioner, avail himself of any execution issued or to be issued upon any judgment obtained or to be obtained upon such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem, either by seizure and sale of the property of such petitioner or any part thereof, or by sale of such property theretofore seized, or any part thereof, or avail himself of such bill of sale, but that any person or persons to whom any sum or sums of money shall be due in respect of any such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem, or of such bill of sale, shall and may be a creditor or creditors for the same under the said recited Act and this Act.

22. Final order to protect the person of the petitioner from process in respect of the debts or sums herein particularly mentioned. Specification of debts, &c. not necessary in final order.—And be it enacted, That the final order to be made under the provisions of the said Act as amended by this Act shall protect the person of the petitioner from being taken or detained under any process whatever in the cases hereinafter mentioned; (that is to say) from all process in respect of the several debts and sums of money due or claimed to be due at the time of filing the petition from such petitioner to the several persons named in his schedule as creditors, or as claiming to be creditors for the same respectively, or for which such persons shall have given credit to such petitioner before the time of filing such petition, and which were not then payable, or in respect of the claims of any other persons not known to such petitioner at the time of making the final order, who may be indorsees or holders of any negotiable securities set forth in such schedule: provided always, that every such final order may be made without specifying therein any such debt or debts, or sum or sums of money, or claims as aforesaid, or naming therein any such creditor or creditors as aforesaid; and such final order shall be in the form specified in schedule (A. No. 3).

23. If prisoner be detained for any claim in respect of which he is protected, commissioner may order his discharge.—And be it enacted, That if any such petitioner, being a prisoner in execution at the time of filing his petition, shall be detained in prison for any debt or claim in respect of which he is protected from process by his final order, it shall be lawful for the commissioner to order any officer who shall have such petitioner in custody by virtue of such execution to discharge such petitioner without exacting any fee; and such officer shall be hereby indemnified for so doing.

24. If it appear to commissioner that any debts of the petitioner were contracted by fraud or breach of trust, &c. no day to be named for making the final order for protection; but if otherwise, a notice of such day to be given.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That if on the day for the first examination of the petitioner, or at any adjournment thereof, it shall appear to the commissioner that the debts of the petitioner, or any of them, were contracted by any manner of fraud or breach of trust, or by any prosecution whereby he had been convicted of any offence, or without having at the time a reasonable or probable expectation of being able to pay such debt or debts, or that such debts, or any of them, were contracted by reason of any judgment in any proceeding for breach of the revenue laws, or in any action for breach of promise of marriage, seduction, criminal conversation, libel, slander, assault, battery, malicious arrest, malicious suing out a fiat of bankruptcy, or malicious trespass, or that the petitioner has parted with any of his property since the presenting of his petition, the commissioner shall not be authorized in any such case to name any day for making such final order, or to renew such interim order; and in every such case wherein any such petitioner shall have been a prisoner in execution, and discharged out of custody by order of the commissioner under the provision herein in that behalf contained, such petitioner shall be remanded by an order of the commissioner to his former custody; but if none of the matters aforesaid shall so appear, and the commissioner shall be satisfied that the petitioner has made a full discovery of his estate, effects, debts, and credits, it shall then be lawful for the commissioner to cause notice to be given that on a certain day, to be named therein, he will proceed to make such final order, unless cause be shewn to the contrary.

25. Sums payable by way of annuity to be deemed debts, and the annuitants to be creditors for the value thereof.—And be it enacted, That every sum of money which shall be payable by way of annuity or otherwise, at any future time or times, by virtue of any bond, covenant, or other securities of any nature whatsoever, shall be deemed and taken to be debts within the meaning of the said recited Act and of this Act: provided always, that every person who would be a creditor of any petitioner for protection from process for such sum or sums of money, if the same were presently due, shall be admissible as a creditor of such petitioner for the value, and no more, of such sum or sums of money so payable as aforesaid, which value the commissioner authorized to act in the matter of the petition shall, upon application at any time made in that behalf, ascertain, regard being had to the original price given for such sum or sums of money, deducting therefrom such diminution in the value thereof as shall have been caused by the lapse of time since the grant thereof to the time of filing such petition: and such creditor shall be entitled in respect of such value to the benefit of all the provisions made for creditors by the said recited Act or by this Act, without prejudice nevertheless to the respective securities of such creditor, excepting as respects the effect of the final order which shall be obtained by such petitioner under the provisions of the said recited Act and of this Act.

26. Final order may extend to process for contempt in nonpayment of money, and to costs incurred by creditor, but subject to taxation.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That the final order for protection from process shall and may extend to all process issuing from any court for any contempt of court, ecclesiastical or civil, for nonpayment of money or of costs or expenses in any such court, and that in such case such final order shall be deemed to extend also to all costs which the petitioner would be liable to pay in consequence or by reason of such contempt, or on purging the same; and that every final order as to any debt or damages of any creditor of the petitioner shall be deemed to extend also to all costs incurred by such creditor before the filing of the petitioner's schedule in any action or suit brought by such creditor against the petitioner for the recovery of the same; and that all persons as to whose demands for any such costs, money, or expenses as aforesaid the final order obtained by the petitioner shall be adjudged to extend shall be deemed and taken to be creditors of such petitioner in respect thereof, and entitled to the benefit of all the provisions made for creditors by the said recited Act or by this Act; subject nevertheless to such ascertaining of the amount of the said demands as may be had by taxation or otherwise, and to such examination thereof as is herein provided in respect of all claims to a dividend of such petitioner's estate and effects.

27. Adjournment of consideration of final order.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the commissioner, at the time appointed for making the final order for protection from process, or at any adjournment thereof, to adjourn the consideration of such final order sine die.

28. If final order refused, or adjourned sine die, the court, after the lapse of such time as it thinks just, having regard to the insolvency and the conduct of the insolvent, may make an order to protect him from further imprisonment in respect of the debts, &c. mentioned in his schedule.—And be it enacted, That if for any of the causes in that behalf aforesaid no day be named for making the final order, or if the consideration of such final order be adjourned sine die, or such final order be refused, the commissioner shall have the power, after the expiration of such time subsequent to the filing of the petition as, having regard to all the circumstances of the insolvency, and the conduct of the petitioner as an insolvent debtor before and after his insolvency, the commissioner shall think just, and after hearing the petitioner or any of his creditors, or his or their counsel or attorneys, to make an order to protect the petitioner from being taken or detained under any process whatever for or in respect of the several debts and sums of money due or claimed to be due at the time of filing his petition, from the said petitioner, to the several persons named in his schedule as creditors or as claiming to be creditors for the same respectively, or for which such persons should have given credit to the said petitioner before the time of filing his petition, and which were not then payable, and as to the claims of all other persons not known to the said petitioner at the time of making such order, who may be indorsers or holders of any negotiable security set forth in his said schedule: Provided always, that no debtor shall be imprisoned on any process for more than twelve calendar months for any debt contracted before filing his petition, in case the final order shall be refused or shall not be made, or in case the protecting order shall not be renewed.

29. Petitioner taken or detained after obtaining such order may be discharged.—And be it enacted, That if such petitioner shall be taken or detained under any process whatever for any debt or claim in respect of which he is protected from process by such order as last aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the commissioner to order any officer who shall have such petitioner so in custody to discharge such petitioner therefrom, without exacting any fee; and such officer shall be hereby indemnified for so doing.

30. Where error in schedule without fraud, Act to operate upon the actual amount of debt.—And whereas it may sometimes happen that a debt of, or claim upon, or balance due from a petitioner for protection from process may be specified in his schedule so sworn to as aforesaid at an amount which is not exactly the actual amount thereof, without any culpable negligence, or fraud, or evil intention on the part of such petitioner; be it enacted, That in such case the commissioner shall allow the schedule to be amended in that behalf; and in every case in which an amendment of the schedule shall be allowed, the said petitioner shall be entitled to every benefit and protection of the said recited Act and of this Act; and the creditor in that behalf shall be entitled to the benefit of all the provisions made for creditors by the said recited Act and by this Act in respect of the actual amount of such debt, claim, or balance, and neither more nor less than the same, to all intents and purposes, such error in the said schedule notwithstanding.

31. How dividend to be made. Notice of sittings. Examination of objections and claims. Commissioner may require proof of debts.—And be it enacted, That whenever after an audit there shall appear to the commissioner to be in the hands of the official assignee any balance wherewith a dividend may be made, proceedings shall be had forthwith, under the direction of the commissioner, for making such dividend, and also, when it shall appear necessary, for correcting and ascertaining the list of creditors entitled to receive the same; and notice of any sitting of the Court ordered to be held for such ascertaining of debts, or for an audit, or for declaring a dividend thereupon, or for all such purposes, shall be given for such time and in such manner as the commissioner shall from time to time direct; and such dividend shall be made amongst the creditors of the petitioner whose debts shall be admitted in his schedule sworn to by the petitioner, and amongst such other creditors (if any) who shall prove their debts in pursuance of any order of the commissioner to be made in that behalf, in proportion to the amount of the debts so admitted, or so admitted and proved, as the case may be: provided always, that if the petitioner, or any creditor or assignee, shall object in whole or in part to any debt tendered to be so proved as aforesaid, or to any debt mentioned in the schedule of the petitioner, or if any person whose demand is stated in such schedule, but is not admitted therein to the extent of such demand, shall claim to be admitted as a creditor for the whole of such demand, or for more thereof than is so admitted, the said objections and claims shall, upon application duly made, be examined into by the commissioner, and the decision of the commissioner thereupon shall be conclusive with respect to the title of such creditor or creditors to his or their share of such dividend: provided always, that if in any case it shall appear expedient, it shall be lawful at any time for the commissioner, by notice as may be directed in that behalf, to cause all or any of the creditors to prove their debts, in such manner as the commissioner shall require, and to decide upon such debts, and the right to receive dividends thereupon, and to do all things requisite thereto, as aforesaid.

32. Outstanding debts, &c. may be sold by order of the commissioner.—And be it enacted, that if at the expiration of twelve calendar months from the filing of any petition for protection from process there shall remain any outstanding debts or other property due or belonging to the estate of the petitioner, which cannot, in the opinion of the commissioner, be collected and received, without unreasonable or inconvenient delay, it shall be lawful for the assignees, under the direction of the commissioner, to sell and assign such debts and other property in such manner as shall be ordered by the commissioner.

33. Proceedings not liable to stamp duty, nor sales to auction duty.—And be it enacted, That no letter of attorney, affidavit, certificate, or other proceeding, instrument, or writing whatsoever in the matter of any petition for protection from process; nor any copy thereof, nor any advertisement inserted in any newspaper by the direction of any commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy relating to any such matter, shall be liable to or charged with the payment of any stamp or other duty whatsoever; and that no sale of any real or personal estate of any such petitioner as aforesaid, for the benefit of his creditors, under the said recited Act or this Act, shall be liable to any auction duty: provided always, that no such exemption from auction duty shall be allowed unless such sale shall be conducted by a licensed auctioneer, and such auctioneer shall at the time of passing his account thereof produce to the officer of excise a catalogue, signed and certified by the assignees by whose order such sale shall have been made, in manner and form required by the laws of excise.

34. Sum to be paid on prosecution of petition.—And be it enacted, That under every petition for protection from process after the passing of this Act in the Court of Bankruptcy in London, or in any district court of bankruptcy in the country, there shall be paid by the official assignee of the estate and effects of the petitioner, into the Bank of England to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, to the account intituled "The Secretary of Bankrupts' Accounts," a sum not less than one-eighth of a pound per centum and not exceeding five pounds per centum on the gross produce from time to time of the petitioner's estate, such sum, within the limit aforesaid, and the time or times for payment thereof, to be fixed by the Lord Chancellor by any general order for those purposes, and to be applicable to all the purposes of the said account, and to be subject to the like orders as other moneys directed to be paid in to the said account; and that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to lessen or increase such sum, within the limit aforesaid, as to the Lord Chancellor may seem just and reasonable, upon consideration of the amount from time to time standing to the said account, and of the claims from time to time chargeable thereupon.

35. Remuneration to official assignee.—And be it enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act it shall be lawful for the commissioner authorized to act in the matter of any petition for protection from process to direct remuneration to the official assignee for his services in the matter of such petition, in like manner as in bankruptcy, but nevertheless so as such remuneration shall in no case exceed the rate of five pounds per centum on the sum received as produce of the property of the petitioner.

36. Fees.—And be it enacted, That no fee or gratuity shall be received or taken by the Court of Bankruptcy, or any district court of bankruptcy, or any solicitor, auctioneer, broker, appraiser, accountant, messenger, or other officer of any such court, for any thing done or to be done in the matter of any such petition, of or from any person whomsoever, except as hereinbefore authorized, and except such fees as shall at any time be specified in a list thereof to be signed by the commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in London, or the major part of them, and such of the commissioners of the said court authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the country as shall be nominated by the Lord Chancellor for that purpose, and to be approved of by the Lord Chancellor, a copy of which list shall be exposed to view in every such court.

37. Proceedings, or a copy thereof, duly signed, receivable in evidence.—And be it enacted, That any petition for protection from process, and any proceeding in the matter of such petition purporting to be signed by a commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, or a copy of such petition or other proceeding purporting to be so signed, shall in all cases be receivable in evidence of such proceedings having respectively taken place.

38. Rules and orders made under recited Act to be applicable to this Act.—And be it enacted, That the rules and orders made by the judges and commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy under the said recited Act shall extend and be applicable to this Act, except as otherwise provided by this Act: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy acting in London, or the major part of them, and such of the commissioners of the said court acting in the country as shall be nominated by the Lord Chancellor for that purpose, from time to time to alter or vary such rules and orders, or to make other rules and orders, to be approved of by the Lord Chancellor, for the better carrying into execution the said recited Act, as amended by this Act: provided also, that any such rules and orders may be rescinded or varied as the Lord Chancellor shall direct.

39. Persons wilfully omitting any thing in schedule guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to three years' imprisonment. Indictment need only set out the substance of the offence charged.—And be it enacted, That in case any petitioner for protection from process shall, with intention to defraud the creditors of such petitioner, wilfully and fraudulently omit in his schedule so sworn to as aforesaid any property whatsoever, or retain or except out of such schedule as wearing apparel, bedding, or other necessaries, working tools or implements, property of greater value than twenty pounds, every such person so offending, and any person aiding and assisting him to do the same, shall, upon being thereof convicted by due course of law, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and thereupon it shall be lawful for the Court before whom such offender shall have been so tried and convicted to sentence such offender to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for any period not exceeding three years; and that in every indictment or information against any person for any offence under this Act it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged on the person offending, without setting forth the petition, or any proceeding whatever in the matter of such petition, except so much of the schedule of such petitioner as may be necessary for the purpose.

40. Wilfully making a false oath or affirmation punishable as if guilty of perjury.—And be it enacted, That if any person who shall make or take any oath or affirmation under or in pursuance of the said recited Act or of this Act shall therein be guilty of wilful falsehood, every such person, being duly convicted thereof, shall be subject to the same pains, penalties, and forfeitures to which persons convicted of wilful and corrupt perjury are or shall be subject.

41. The Lord Chancellor may issue a fiat in bankruptcy against a trader having filed a declaration of insolvency, upon the petition of the trader himself.—And be it enacted, That the Lord Chancellor shall have power, upon petition made to him in writing by any trader who shall have filed a declaration of insolvency in manner and form prescribed by the statute in this case made and provided relating to bankrupts, and upon payment of the like sum as is payable upon the granting a fiat upon the petition of a creditor, to be carried to and applicable to the purposes of the account in the Bank of England intituled "The Secretary of Bankrupts' Account," to issue a fiat in bankruptcy against such trader, and to authorize the prosecution thereof in the Court of Bankruptcy in London or in any district court of bankruptcy; and that it shall and may be lawful for such court so authorized as aforesaid, upon the application of such trader, and upon proof of the trading and of the filing of such declaration, or upon the application of any creditor or creditors of such trader to such amount as by the said statute required for a petitioning creditor's debt, and upon proof of the matters requisite to support a fiat issued upon the petition of a creditor, to make the adjudication of bankruptcy under such fiat, and all further proceedings under such fiat shall be thenceforth prosecuted and carried on in like manner as if such fiat had been issued and adjudicated upon on the petition of a creditor of the bankrupt.

42. Lord Chancellor may attach the country commissioners to districts.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to attach the several commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy appointed to act in the country to such districts described by her Majesty, with the advice of her privy council, as he shall think fit.

43. Minute of petitions filed to be transmitted to secretary of bankrupts.—And be it enacted, That a minute of every petition filed by any trader under the provisions of the said recited Act as amended by this Act shall be transmitted to the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts at such time and in such manner and form as the Lord Chancellor shall direct.

44. Lord Chancellor authorized to give necessary directions where Courts shall sit. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122. —And whereas it may be expedient that the Courts of Bankruptcy should hold sittings in some matters of bankruptcy, or petitions for protection from process, at some place or places at which such courts have not hitherto been used to sit; be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, at any time or times whenever it shall appear to him under the circumstances of the case to be expedient, by any order or orders, to give the necessary directions in that behalf; and every commissioner and deputy registrar acting under any such order shall have paid to him his travelling and other expenses, in the same manner and out of the same fund as travelling and other expenses are directed to be paid by the Act passed in the sixth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the Amendment of the Law of Bankruptcy," to any commissioner or deputy registrar acting for or in aid of any commissioner or deputy registrar in cases provided for by such Act.

45. Lord Chancellor empowered to appoint a taxing officer. Tenure of office, duties, and removal. General provision as to business of taxing officer.—And be it enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to appoint some fit and proper person, such person being a barrister of not less five years' standing at the Bar, or who shall have practised as a pleader for not less than five years, or who shall have held the office of registrar or deputy registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy for not less than five years, or an admitted attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts at Westminster, or of her Majesty's Court of Bankruptcy, in actual practice, of not less than five years' standing on the roll of such court or courts, to be the taxing officer of the Court of Bankruptcy, and to be called the Master of the said court, at such salary, not exceeding one thousand two hundred pounds per annum, as the Lord Chancellor shall think fit, and to be entitled to an annuity not exceeding two-thirds of such salary, if and when such officer shall be effected with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, such salary or annuity, as the case may be, to be charged upon and paid (without any deduction except the tax on income) out of the same fund and at the same times and in like manner as the salaries or annuities, as the case may be, of the registrars and deputy registrars of the said court; and as and when any vacancy shall occur in such office the same shall be supplied by the Lord Chancellor, by the appointment of some other fit and proper person of like qualifications as aforesaid; and every such taxing officer shall hold his office during his good behaviour, and shall discharge his duties in person, except where otherwise provided by this Act, or by any regulation to be made under this Act, and may be removed from his office by the Lord Chancellor for misconduct; and the business to be transacted by such taxing officer, from and after the passing of this Act, shall be the swearing of such affidavits as may be sworn before any commissioner, registrar, or deputy registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy, and the taxing of such costs taxable by any court of bankruptcy by virtue of any statute now or hereafter to be in force, as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any general or other order direct, subject to review of the Court authorized to tax the same; and the place, time, and manner in which the same shall be conducted shall be such as the Lord Chancellor shall by any such order direct.

46. Sum to be paid on the taxation of bills.—And be it enacted, That upon the taxation by virtue of this Act of any bills of fees, charges, or disbursements there shall be paid to the master such sum as the said master shall decide, not less than one shilling nor more than the sum of ten shillings, and also fourpence a folio, over and above the said sum of ten shillings, for every folio exceeding twenty folios of such bill.

47. Sums received by the master to be paid into the Bank of England, after deducting such sum as the Lord Chancellor thinks fit for expenses of office.—And be it enacted, That the sums so directed to be paid to and received by the master, and also all fees received by him for swearing affidavits, shall be paid by him, at such times as the Lord Chancellor shall by any order direct, into the Bank of England, to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, to the account intituled "The Secretary of Bankrupts' Account," after deducting thereout such sum as the Lord Chancellor shall think fit for the expenses of the said office; and all moneys to be so paid in to the said account shall be applicable to all the purposes of the said account, and be subject to the like orders as other moneys directed to be paid in to the said account.

48. In case of sickness or other reasonable cause, the duty of the master may be performed by deputy.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That if the said master shall from sickness or other unavoidable cause have occasion to be absent from the business of his office for a longer period than two months at any one time, then and in every such case it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to give leave of absence, by his order in writing, to such master, and, if necessary, to appoint a deputy in his place during such time as shall be expressed in such order; and the name of such deputy, and the cause and time of such absence, shall be stated in such order; and such deputy may, if occasion require it, be changed by the Lord Chancellor; and every deputy so appointed shall be paid out of the said fund as the salary of the said master is chargeable upon such remuneration for his services as the Lord Chancellor shall direct in such order, not being in any case less than one-third of the amount of the salary of such master.

49. Registrars, &c. who now receive the surplus of certain fees to be paid in future solely by salary. 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56.—And whereas the registrars and deputy registrars of the Court of Bankruptcy, in addition to their respective salaries, are entitled to and now receive the surplus of certain fees authorized to be taken, and the payment or partial payment of such officers by fees has been found to be objectionable; be it enacted, That instead of the salaries and surplus fees heretofore received by such registrars and deputy registrars there shall, from and after the eleventh day of October next, be paid to them by the governor and company of the Bank of England, out of the fund placed to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, intituled "The Secretary of Bankrupts' Account," by virtue of any order or orders of the Lord Chancellor to be from time to time made for that purpose, and without any draft from the accountant in bankruptcy, the several salaries hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, the net yearly sum of one thousand two hundred pounds to each of the registrars of the said court appointed under an Act passed in the reign of his late Majesty, intituled "An Act to establish a Court in Bankruptcy," and his successors in such office; the net yearly sum of one thousand pounds to each deputy registrar of the said court, acting as such in the city of London, and his successors in such office; and the net yearly sum of eight hundred pounds to each deputy registrar of the said court, acting as such in the country, and his successors in such office; which salaries shall be free from all taxes, deductions, and abatements whatsoever out of the same or any part thereof (except the tax on income), and shall be paid quarterly, on the eleventh day of January, the eleventh day of April, the eleventh day of July, and the eleventh day of October in every year, by equal portions; and that if any person for the time being holding any of the said offices shall die, resign, or be removed from the same, the executor or administrator of the person so dying, or the person so resigning or being removed, shall be entitled to receive such proportionable part of his salary as shall have accrued during the time that such person shall have executed his office since the last payment; and that the successor of any such person so dying, resigning, or being removed as aforesaid shall be entitled to receive such portion of his salary as shall be accruing or shall accrue from the day of such death, resignation, or removal.

50. Fees to be accounted for.—And be it enacted, That from and after the eleventh day of October next all fees received and taken by or accounted for and paid over to the chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy shall be paid by him, at such times as the Lord Chancellor shall by any order direct, into the Bank of England, to the credit of the accountant in Bankruptcy, to the account entitled "Interest arising from the Bankruptcy Fund Account," after deducting thereout such sum as the Lord Chancellor shall think fit for stationery and other incidental expenses of the offices of the chief registrar and the Court of Review; and that the salaries and sums of money to clerks, ushers, and other under-officers of the Court of Bankruptcy heretofore paid by the chief registrar out of such fees shall thenceforth be paid by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England out of the fund standing to such account, under such order or orders as may from time to time be made by the Lord Chancellor, but subject and without prejudice to the payment of all salaries and sums of money by any Act or Acts now in force directed or authorized to be paid thereout; and that on or before the first day of March, one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, if Parliament be then sitting, or, if not, within fourteen days from the commencement of the then next session of Parliament, there shall be laid before Parliament by the said chief registrar a return, made up to the thirty-first day of December then last, of the total amount of all fees received by or accounted for and paid over to him, and of the payment over to the Bank of England (such payment over to the Bank of England to be certified by the Accountant in Bankruptcy), and that a like return shall be afterwards made by him annually at the same period for the year ending the thirty-first day of December then last.

51. Retiring pension to registrars.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, by any order or orders to be by him from time to time made on a petition to be presented to him for that purpose, to order (if he shall think fit) an annuity or clear yearly sum of money to be paid to any person executing the office of chief registrar, registrar, or deputy registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy, and acting in London or in the country, not exceeding two-thirds of the yearly salary which such person shall under this Act be entitled to at the time of presenting such petition, to be paid out of the interest and dividends that have arisen or may arise from the securities now or hereafter to be placed in the Bank of England to the account intituled "The Bankruptcy Fund Account" (but subject and without prejudice as aforesaid), if and when such person shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, and shall be desirous of resigning the same; and the annuity or yearly sum mentioned in such order or orders shall be paid by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England out of the interest and dividends of the said securities (but subject and without prejudice as aforesaid) by equal quarterly payments, on the fifth day of January, the fifth day of April, the fifth day of July, and the tenth day of October in every year, to such person, from the period when he shall resign his said office, for the term of his life, free from taxes, except the tax on income.

52. Compensation to T. A. Warburton for having performed the duties of deputy registrar.—And whereas one of the deputy registrars of the Court of Bankruptcy has since the twenty-first day of November, one thousand eight hundred and forty-two performed the duties of taxing officer; and during that period the duties of deputy registrar were discharged by Thomas Acton Warburton, esq. barrister-at-law; be it enacted, That out of the fund placed to the credit of the accountant in Bankruptcy, intituled "The Secretary of Bankrupts' Account," there shall be paid to the said Thomas Acton Warburton, by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, by virtue of an order in writing of the Lord Chancellor, such sum of money, not exceeding eight hundred pounds, as the Lord Chancellor shall think reasonable.

53. Court may send a registrar to take proof of debts, &c. where expedient. Examinations to be taken down.—And be it enacted, That the court authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy or any petition for protection from process, shall have power, whenever it shall seem expedient to such court, to direct a deputy registrar of such court to act in the prosecution of such fiat or petition for proof of debts, and the examination of parties or witnesses on oath, or for either of such purposes, subject to such rules and regulations as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time think fit to make in that behalf; the travelling expenses of such officer to be settled by such court, and paid out of the estate of the bankrupt or petitioner, as the case may be, and such officer so acting shall have and exercise the power vested in such court for proof of debts and examination of parties or witnesses, except the power of commitment: provided always, that all such examinations of parties or witnesses shall be taken down in writing, and shall be annexed to and form part of the proceedings under such fiat or petition, as the case may be.

54. Style of deputy registrars of the Court of Bankruptcy.—And be it enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act the deputy registrars of the Court of Bankruptcy and their successors, whether acting in London or in the country, shall be called the registrars of the said court.

55. Repealing provisions in 5 & 6 Wm 4, c. 29, as to fees receivable by accountant in bankruptcy.—And whereas by an Act which passed in the sixth year of the reign of King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for investing in Government Securities a portion of the Cash lying unemployed in the Bank of England belonging to Bankrupts' Estates, and applying the Interest thereon in discharge of the Expenses of the Court of Bankruptcy; and for the Relief of the Suitors in the said Court; and for removing Doubts as to the Extent of the Powers of the Court of Review and of the Subdivision Courts," it is enacted that the salaries hereinbefore provided shall be in lieu of all fees and emoluments whatsoever, and that all such fees and emoluments, whether for commission, brokerage, or otherwise, as are now receivable by the said accountant-general of the Court of Chancery in matters of bankruptcy, shall, from and after the appointment of the said accountant in bankruptcy, be received by him and paid into the Bank in the name of the said last-mentioned accountant, and be carried to the credit of the said account to be intituled "Interest arising from the Bankruptcy Fund Account," and be applicable to all the purposes of the said account: And whereas the said enactment requires alteration; be it enacted, That the said enactment shall be repealed.

56. Salary of accountant.—And be it enacted, That the salary allowed to the accountant shall be in lieu of all fees and emoluments whatsoever, and that the accountant shall not, directly or indirectly, receive any sum either for commission, brokerage, or otherwise, but only the sum expressly allowed to him as his salary; that from henceforth the broker shall transact the brokerage business of the accountant's office upon such terms as the accountant and any two of the commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor shall, with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor, determine; and that the sum paid to the broker shall be charged by the accountant to the estate for which the investment or sale shall be made; and that when such sum to be paid to the broker shall be determined, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to direct the payment or any part of it to be made from such time retrospectively and prospectively as to him may seem just.

57. Arrest upon final process in an action for debt not exceeding 20l. and costs abolished.—And whereas it is expedient to limit the present power of arrest upon final process; be it enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act no person shall be taken or charged in execution upon any judgment obtained in any of her Majesty's superior courts, or in any county court, court of requests, or other inferior court, in any action for the recovery of any debt wherein the sum recovered shall not exceed the sum of twenty pounds, exclusive of the costs recovered by such judgment.

58. Persons in execution at the time of passing this Act, where the debt shall not exceed 20l. and costs, shall be discharged on application to a judge. Proviso for discharge fraudulently obtained. Sheriffs, &c. not liable as for escape. Judgment to remain in force notwithstanding the discharge of the debtor.—And be it enacted, That all persons in execution at the time of passing this Act, upon any judgment obtained in any of the courts aforesaid in any action for the recovery of any debt wherein the sum recovered shall not exceed the sum of twenty pounds, exclusive of the costs recovered by such judgment, shall and may, upon the application of every such person or persons for that purpose, made at any time after the passing of this Act, to a judge of one of her Majesty's superior courts of law at Westminster, or to the court in which such judgment shall have been obtained, to the satisfaction of such judge or court, be forthwith discharged out of custody as to such execution by an order of such judge or court: provided always, that if it shall happen that any such discharge shall have been unduly or fraudulently obtained upon any false allegation of circumstances, which, if true, might have entitled the prisoner to be discharged by virtue of this Act, such prisoner shall, upon the same being made to appear to the satisfaction of the judge or court by whose order such prisoner shall have been so discharged, be liable to be again taken in execution, and remanded to his former custody by an order of such judge or court: provided also, that no sheriff, gaoler, or other person whatsoever shall be liable as for the escape of any such prisoner in respect of his enlargement during such time as he shall have been at large by means of such his undue discharge as aforesaid: provided also, that, for and notwithstanding the discharge of any debtor or debtors by an order of any such judge or court in manner aforesaid, the judgment whereupon any such debtor or debtors was or were taken or charged in execution shall nevertheless remain and continue in full force, to the intent and purpose that the judgment creditor or creditors may have and take remedy and execution upon every such judgment against the property and effects of any such debtor or debtors, in such manner and form as such creditor or creditors otherwise could or might have done in case such debtor or debtors had never been taken or charged in execution upon such judgment, and it shall be lawful for such creditor or creditors to have and take such remedy and execution.

59. Power of imprisonment for fraud.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That if at any time it shall appear to the judge who shall try such cause, being either a judge of one of the superior courts, or a barrister or attorney at law, that the defendant, in incurring the debt or liability which may be the subject of demand, has obtained credit from the plaintiff under false pretences, or with a fraudulent intent, or has wilfully contracted such debt or liability without having at the same time a reasonable assurance of being able to pay or discharge the same, or shall have made or caused to be made any gift, delivery, or transfer of any personal property, or shall have removed or concealed the same with an intent to defraud his creditors or any of them, it shall be lawful for such judge, if he shall think fit, to order that such defendant may be taken and detained in execution upon such judgment in like manner and for such time as he might have been if this Act had not been passed, or for any time not exceeding six calendar months in any case in which the time for which a person taken in execution under process issuing out of any such court could lawfully be detained in custody, according to the constitution of the said court, before the passing of this Act, is less than six calendar months, whether or not execution against the goods and chattels of such defendant shall have issued as hereinafter provided.

60. Execution against the goods.—And be it enacted, That whenever the judge of any such court shall have made an order for the payment of money the amount shall be recoverable, in case of default or failure of payment thereof forthwith, or at the time or times and in the manner thereby directed, by execution against the goods and chattels of the party against whom such order shall be made; and the clerk of the said court, at the request of the party prosecuting such order, shall issue, under the seal of the court, a writ of fieri facias, as a warrant of execution to one of the bailiffs of the court, who by such warrant shall be empowered to levy, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such party within the jurisdiction of the said court, such sum of money as shall be so ordered, and also the costs of the execution; and all constables and other peace officers within their several jurisdictions shall aid in the execution of every such warrant.

61. Execution not to issue till after default in payment of instalment.—And be it enacted, That if the judge of any such court shall have made any order for payment of any sum of money by instalments, execution upon such order shall not issue against the party until after default in payment of some instalment according to such order, and execution or successive executions may then issue for the whole of the said sum of money and costs then remaining unpaid, or for each successive instalment and costs remaining from time to time unpaid, as the judge shall order, either at the time of making the original order, or at any subsequent time, under the seal of the court.

62. Power to suspend execution in certain cases.—And be it enacted, That if it shall at any time appear to the satisfaction of the judge of any such court, by the oath or affirmation of any person, or otherwise, that any defendant is unable, from sickness or unavoidable accident, to pay and discharge the debt or damages recovered against him, or any instalment thereof ordered to be paid as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the judge, in his discretion, to suspend or stay any judgment, order, or execution given, made, or issued in such action for such time as the judge shall think fit, and so from time to time until it shall appear, by the like proof as aforesaid, that such temporary cause of disability has ceased.

63. Execution to be suspended on payment of debt and costs.—And be it enacted, That in or upon every such warrant of execution issued against the goods and chattels of any person whomsoever the clerk of the court shall cause to be inserted or indorsed the sum of money and costs adjudged, with the increased costs allowed for such execution; and if the party against whom such execution shall be issued shall, before an actual sale of the goods and chattels, pay or cause to be paid or tendered unto the clerk of the said court, or to the bailiff holding the warrant of execution, such sum of money and costs as aforesaid, or such part thereof as the person entitled thereto shall agree to accept in full of his debt or damages and costs, together with such fees as shall have been lawfully incurred by him in the suit on which such execution issued, the execution shall be superseded.

64. Bailiffs made answerable for neglect to levy.—And be it enacted, That in case any bailiff of any such court who shall be employed to levy any execution against goods and chattels shall, by wilful or notorious neglect or connivance or omission, lose the opportunity of levying any such execution, then, upon complaint of the party aggrieved by reason of such neglect, connivance, or omission (and the fact alleged being proved to the satisfaction of the Court out of which execution issued, on the oath of any credible witness), the judge shall order such bailiff to pay such damages as it shall appear that the plaintiff has sustained thereby, not exceeding in any case the sum of money for which the said execution issued, and the bailiff shall be liable thereto; and upon demand made thereof, and on his refusal so to pay and satisfy the same, it may be recovered against him by such ways and means as are provided for the recovery of debts adjudged in the said court.

65. Remedies against bailiffs and other officers.—And be it enacted, That if any bailiff or officer of any such court, acting under colour or pretence of the process of the said court, shall be charged with extortion or misconduct, or with not duly paying or accounting for any money levied by him under the authority of the Court, it shall be lawful for the judge to inquire into such matter in a summary way, and for that purpose to summon and enforce the attendance of all necessary parties in like manner as the attendance of witnesses in any suit before him may be enforced, and to make such order thereupon for the repayment of any money extorted, or for the due payment of any money so levied as aforesaid, and for the payment of such damages and costs, as he shall think just; and in default of payment of any money so ordered to be paid the same may be recovered by such ways and means as are provided for the recovery of debts adjudged in the said court.

66. Execution against the goods to be within the provisions of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 17.—And be it enacted, That every sale of goods which shall be taken in execution under process issuing from any such court for the recovery of small debts shall be taken to be within all the provisions of an Act passed in the eighth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act to extend the Provisions of an Act made in the Fifty-seventh year of King George the Third, for regulating the Costs of certain Distresses."

67. Landlord's lien for rent restrained.—And be it enacted, That no landlord of any tenement let at a weekly rent shall have any claim or lien upon any goods taken in execution under the process of any court of law for more than four weeks' arrears of rent; and if such tenement shall be let for any other term less than a year, the landlord shall not have any claim or lien on such goods for more than the arrears of rent accruing during four such terms or times of payment.

68. Claims as to goods taken in execution to be adjudicated in court.—And be it enacted, that if any claim shall be made to or in respect of any goods or chattels taken in execution under the process of any court for the recovery of small debts, or in respect of the proceeds or value thereof, by any landlord for rent, or by any person not being the party against whom such process has issued, it shall be lawful for the clerk of the court out of which such execution issued, upon application of the officer charged with the execution of such process, either before or after any action brought against such officer, to issue a summons calling before the Court out of which such execution issued both the party issuing such process and the party making such claim, and thereupon any action which shall have been brought in any of her Majesty's superior courts at Westminster, or in the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, or in any local or inferior court, in respect of such claim, shall be stayed; and the court in which such action shall have been brought, or any judge thereof, on p. of the issue of such summons, and that the goods and chattels were so taken in execution, may order the party bringing such action to pay the costs of all proceedings had upon such action after the issue of such summons; and the judge of the court for the recovery of small debts out of which such execution issued shall adjudicate upon such claim, and make such order between the parties in respect thereof, and of the costs of the proceedings, as to him shall seem fit; and such order shall be enforced in like manner as any order made in any suit brought in such court.

69. Distress not unlawful for want of form.—And be it enacted, That where any distress shall be made for any sum of money to be levied by virtue of this Act the distress itself shall not be deemed unlawful, nor the party making the same be deemed a trespasser, on account of any defect or want of form in the information, summons, conviction, warrant of distress, or other proceeding relating thereto, nor shall the party distraining be deemed a trespasser from the beginning on account of any irregularity which shall afterwards be committed by the party so distraining, but the person aggrieved by such irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action upon the case.

70. Compensations to persons whose emoluments will be diminished.—And be it enacted, That every person entitled to any fees or salary for his services as a judge or other officer of any court, and every keeper or other officer of any debtors' prison, whose emoluments shall be diminished under the operation of this Act, so far as the same relates to or restrains imprisonment for debt, shall be entitled to make a claim for compensation to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury within twelve calendar months after the passing of this Act; and it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, in such manner as they shall think proper, to inquire what were the lawful fees and emoluments of the claimant or claimants before the passing of this Act in respect of which such compensation should be allowed, and how the same have been affected under this Act, by reason of the decrease of the number of causes or otherwise; and the commissioners in each case shall take into account the manner of appointment of every such judge, officer, and person, and his term or interest in his office or employment, and all other circumstances of the case, and shall award such gross or yearly sum, and for such time, as they shall think just to be awarded, upon consideration of the special circumstances of each case, and shall order and direct such compensation to be paid out of the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

71. Inquiry into amount of compensation.—And be it enacted, That the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall have power from time to time to appoint such and so many persons to be commissioners for enabling them to ascertain the amount of compensation to be awarded under this Act as to them shall appear fit and necessary; and every such commissioner shall ascertain the gross and net annual value, according to a fair average of seven years before the passing of this Act, or, if the Court shall not have been established with its present jurisdiction for seven years, then for the period during which the court shall have been established with its present jurisdiction, of any fees and emoluments the consideration of which shall be referred to him by the said commissioners of the treasury, and shall be empowered to inquire into and ascertain as well the legality as the amount of such fees and emoluments, and the manner of appointment of the person entitled thereto, and his term or interest in his office or employment, and such other circumstances of the case as shall be necessary for ascertaining the amount of such compensation.

72. Appointment of assessors of inferior courts.—And whereas there are divers courts of request and other inferior courts for the recovery of small debts not presided over by a barrister or an attorney at law as judge or assessor; be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the commissioners of any such court, if they shall think fit, with the approval of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, to appoint any person, being a barrister who shall have practised as a barrister for at least seven years then last past, or an attorney at law of one of the superior courts of common law at Westminster, or of the court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, who shall have practised as an attorney for at least ten years, to be the assessor of such court, and to direct what fees shall be paid to such assessor by the suitors of such court, not exceeding the fees in the schedule marked (B) hereunto annexed; and it shall be lawful for the said Secretary of State to remove any such assessor for incompetence or misbehaviour: provided always, that no assessor so to be appointed shall be deemed to be entitled to any compensation for the loss of his office, or for any diminution in the value thereof, by reason of the passing of any general Act for the recovery of small debts.

73. Construction of the Act.—And be it enacted, That in construing this Act, the word "property" shall mean and include all the real and personal estate and effects of the petitioner within this realm and abroad (except the wearing apparel, and such other articles of the value in that behalf aforesaid as may by this Act be excepted from the operation of the said recited Act and this Act), and all the future estate, right, title, interest, and trust of such petitioner in or to any real or personal estate and effects within this realm or abroad which such petitioner may purchase, or which may revert, descend, be devised or bequeathed, or come to him before he shall have obtained the final order, and all debts due or to be due to such petitioner before he shall have obtained such final order; and the words "oath" and "affidavit" shall mean and include affirmation, where by law such affirmation shall be required or may be taken in place of an oath; and all powers given to or duties directed to be performed by the Lord Chancellor may be performed by the Lord Keeper or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal; and the word "judge," as applied to any court for the recovery of small debts, shall mean and include the county clerk, judge, steward, and assessor, or the person holding or presiding in such court; and every word importing the singular number only shall extend and be applied to several persons or things as well as one person or thing, and bodies corporate as well as individuals; and every word importing the plural number shall extend and be applied to one person or thing as well as several persons or things; and every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend and be applied to a female as well as a male (unless, in the cases above specified, a different construction shall be provided, or the construction be repugnant to the subject matter or context); and the provisions of the said recited Act and of this Act shall be construed by analogy to the law of bankruptcy, except where otherwise therein respectively expressed, and in the most beneficial manner for promoting the ends intended by the said recited Act and by this Act.

74. Recited Act not to be affected, except as herein provided.—And be it enacted, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal, affect, or in any manner alter the provisions of the said recited Act, except so far as herein above expressly provided, or except so far as the provisions of the said recited Act may be inconsistent with or at variance with the provisions of this Act.

75. Act may be altered this session.—And be it enacted, That this Act may be altered, amended, or repealed by any Act to be passed in the present session of Parliament.

Form of Petition for Protection from Process.

To the Court of Bankruptcy, London.

or

To the District Court of Bankruptcy.

The humble petition of

[Insert at full length the name, address, and quality of the petitioner, and also the description of the trade or business or (if more than one) trades or businesses which he carries or has carried on during his twelve months' residence within the district of the court.]

Sheweth, that your petitioner is not a trader within the meaning of the statutes now in force relating to bankrupts.

[If a trader, strike out the word "not," and add after the word "bankrupts" the words "but owing debts amounting in the whole to less than 300l."]

That your petitioner has resided twelve calendar months within the district of this honourable court; that is to say,

[Insert the places and periods of residence.]

That your petitioner has become indebted to divers creditors, whose names are inserted in the Schedule (A.) [or as the case may be] to this his petition annexed, and that he is unable to pay his debts in full.

That your petitioner has examined the said schedule, and that such schedule contains a full and true account of your petitioner's debts, and the claims against him, with the names of his creditors and claimants, and the dates of contracting the debts and claims severally, as nearly as such dates can be stated, the nature of the debts and claims, and securities (if any) given for the same, and that there is reasonable ground in his belief for disputing so much of the debts as are thereby mentioned as disputed, and also a true account of the nature and amount of his property, and an inventory of the same, and of the debts owing to him, with their dates, as nearly as such dates can be stated, and the names of his debtors, and the nature of the securities (if any) which he has for such debts; and that the said schedule doth also contain a balance-sheet of so much of his receipts and expenditures as is required by this honourable court in that behalf, and doth fully and truly describe the wearing apparel, bedding, and other such necessaries of your petitioner and his family, and his working tools and implements.

That your petitioner has not parted with or charged any of his property (except for the necessary support of himself and his family, and the necessary expenses (not exceeding £) of this his petition, or in the ordinary course of trade), at any time within three months of the date of filing this his petition, or at any time with a view to this petition.

That your petitioner is desirous that his estate should be administered under the protection and direction of this honourable court, and that he verily believes such estate is of the value of £ at the least unincumbered, and beyond the value of his wearing apparel, and other matter which your petitioner is authorized to except by this Act, and that the same is available for the benefit of his creditors.

(a) That your petitioner submits to this honourable court the proposal for the payment of his debts contained in the said schedule.

That your petitioner is ready and willing to be examined from time to time touching his estate and effects, and to make a full and true disclosure and discovery of the same.

Your petitioner, therefore, prays such relief in the premises as by the statutes now in force for the relief of insolvent debtors may be adjudged by this honourable court.

And your petitioner shall ever pray, &c. &c.

COMMONS' REPORT.

After the restoration, Charles II. granted, by letters patent, August 14, 1660, to Henry Bishopp, for the term of seven years, the office of the master of running messengers, formerly held by Lord Stanhope and others, &c.; and by a separate indenture, dated September 1, agreed to farm to the said H. Bishopp, for the term of seven years, all powers and profits expressed in the "pretended" Act of 1657, for the annual rent of 21,500*l.* payable quarterly. The said Bishopp agreed, at the rates stated in the said "pretended" Act of Parliament, and no higher rates, to defray the whole charges of maintaining the said office; the king agreeing that the Parliament shall be moved speedily and effectually to pass an Act of Parliament, in the due and usual form, for settling the said postage and the profits thereof on his Majesty, as part of his said Majesty's revenue.

On the 12th of September, 1660, it was ordered by the Lords and Commons, in Parliament assembled, that the office of postmaster, and the postage and carriage of letters, domestic and foreign, should continue to be exercised by the same persons now employed thereon by his Majesty, their agents and servants, according to the same rates and rules now practised, and without the interruption of any person or persons whatever, until the 6th day of November next ensuing. And in December, 1660, an Act was passed agreeing nearly, mutatis mutandis, in its enacting clauses with that of 1657.

The passing of this Act was followed by a proclamation for quieting Bishopp in the execution of his office. On his surrendering it in 1663, it was granted to Daniel O'Neale, one of the grooms of the chamber, who farmed it for the remainder of Bishopp's original term, and on the same conditions. A proclamation followed O'Neale's appointment. An Act passed in 1663, for settling the profits of the Post-office on the Duke of York and his heirs male; and two proclamations followed, one in 1669, the other in 1683, for enforcing the due execution of the said Acts. On the expiry of O'Neale's lease, in 1667, Lord Arlington was appointed Postmaster-General, and a proclamation followed for quieting him in the execution of his office. No statute for altering the management of the Post-office, or the rates of postage, was passed during the reign of James II. and William III. nor until the 9th year of Anne.

In reviewing that period of the history of the country which commences with 1641, your committee beg to notice the following incidents, as bearing on the subject of their inquiry.

Repeated stoppages of the foreign mails were made by the orders of the two Houses, and committees were appointed, composed of the members of both Houses, to open and read the letters stopped. On one of those occasions Mr. Pym reported the answer of the Lords to a message from the Commons to stop the foreign mails, "that they did yield to the opening of letters; but it would be very inconvenient if often used."

The opening and detention of the letters coming from France and Antwerp in Nov. 1641, led to a complaint to the King and to the Lords from the ambassador of the republic of Venice.

The preamble to the Act of Cromwell's Parliament for settling the postage of England, Scotland, and Ireland, enumerates among the advantages of the post, that it is the best means "to discover and prevent many dangerous and wicked designs which have been and are daily contrived against the peace and welfare of the Commonwealth, the intelligence whereof cannot well be communicated but by letter of escript."

It scarcely needed this evidence to prove that during the Protectorate recourse was had to the expedient of opening letters. This fact is sufficiently apparent from the number of letters designated as "intercepted letters," in the state correspondence of Secretary Thurloe.

No preamble similar to that which the Act of Cromwell contains appears in the statute of Charles II. for erecting and establishing a Post-office. But in the lease granted to Bishopp, of the profits to arise from the Post-office under the Act, which Parliament was to be moved by his Majesty speedily and effectually to pass, it is agreed that the lessee shall permit and suffer the said Secretaries of State for the time being, or either of them, from time to time, and at all times during the proposed term, to have the survey and inspection of all letters within the office or offices aforesaid, at their or either of their discretion. And the same power is reserved to the Secretaries of State in the lease granted to Bishopp's successor, O'Neale.

In the proclamation which immediately followed the passing of the statute of 1660 1, the practice of opening, by authority of the Secretary of State, letters lawfully conveyed, is not mentioned; but in the proclamation which followed the appointment of Bishopp's successor, O'Neale, the words occur, which correspond to those afterwards introduced into the statute of Anne:—

"And we do further charge and command that no postmasters or other officers, that shall be employed in the conveying of letters, or distributing of the same, or any other person or persons of quality or condition soever they be, except by the immediate warrant of our principal Secretaries of State, shall presume to open any letters or packets not directed unto themselves, or that they, or any other persons whatsoever, do stop any Mayl in the passage to or from London, or any other place whither the same is consigned and directed, but shall truly and faithfully deliver the same, without any opening, concealing, or retarding the delivery thereof." These words are not repeated in the subsequent proclamations of 1667, 1669, 1683, and 1685.

As to letters unlawfully conveyed, it is directed in the proclamations of 1660 1 and 1667, that they be seized and sent to the Privy Council; in those of 1669, 1683, and 1685, that they be considered as letters of dangerous consequence, and be seized and sent to one of the Secretaries of State, or to the Privy Council, to the end that the persons conveying or sending them may be proceeded against according to law; in that of 1663, that they be seized and carried to the General Post-office, "there to be disposed of for the benefit of all such of his Majesty's loving subjects as may be concerned therein."

Although, after quoting the cited clauses from the leases granted to Bishopp and O'Neale, and the words from the proclamation of 1663, no reasonable doubt can be entertained that the governments of the different monarchs who reigned between 1660 and 1711 had frequently recourse to the practice of opening letters, yet the only instance during that period that has come under the notice of your committee, is that of Coleman, one of the victims of the Popish plot.

Your committee now come to the period subsequent to the passing of the 9th of Anne, the first statute which recognized the practice of opening letters, now under consideration.

Before they proceed to avail themselves of the information laid before them, which has proved to them that the 40th and 41st sections of this Act did not remain a dead letter, they will notice several occasions in the last century on which, both in Parliament and in courts of judicature, this practice was brought distinctly under public attention.

About eleven years after the passing of the Act, viz. in the year 1722-3, in the course of the proceedings had on passing the Bills of Pains and Penalties against the Bishop of Rochester, and his two associates, Kelly and Plunket, the principal evidence adduced against the parties accused was that of post-office clerks and others, who, in obedience to warrants from the Secretary of State, had detained, opened, copied, and deciphered letters to or from those parties. In the committee on the bill against Atterbury, in the House of Peers, the clause of the statute of Anne was referred to and commented on by the bishop's counsel, who raised a doubt whether the copying of a letter were sanctioned by the Act; but in no one of these three cases was any question raised as to the legality of the warrants.

In 1735, complaint being made in the House of Commons by certain of the members, that their letters had been opened and read by the clerks of the Post-office, on the pretence of ascertaining whether or no the franks of those members were counterfeited, and a copy of his Majesty's warrant, whereby letters of members and certain public functionaries were permitted to pass free from postage, being read, it was ordered that the copy of the said warrant be referred to the consideration of a committee, and that they do examine the matter thereof, and report the same, with their opinions thereon, to the House; and on the committee making its report, the House resolved, inter alia, "That it is a high infringement of the privilege of the knights, citizens, and burgesses, chosen to represent the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament, for any postmaster, his deputies or agents, in Great-Britain or Ireland, to open or look into, by any means whatsoever, any letter directed to or signed by the proper hand of any member without an express warrant in writing under the hand of one of the principal Secretaries of State for every such opening and looking into, or to detain or delay any letter directed to or signed with the name of any member, unless there shall be good reason to suspect some counterfeit of it, without an express warrant of a principal Secretary of State, as aforesaid, for every such detaining or delaying."

Sir Robert Walpole and Mr. Pelham are said to have agreed to the appointment of this committee, on an understanding that it should not inquire into any thing that might tend to discover the secrets of government. In 1742, however, the secrets of Sir Robert Walpole's Government were somewhat rudely pried into by the secret committee appointed "to inquire into the conduct of the Earl of Orford, during the last ten years of his being First Lord of the Treasury, and Chancellor and Under Treasurer of his Majesty's Exchequer."

That committee in its report gave a description of the establishment for inspecting letters, as maintained by the governments over which Sir Robert Walpole had presided; but abstained from stating on what particular occasions that establishment had been made available.

It appears from the information laid before your committee, that under the pressure of the rebellion of 1715, which followed almost immediately on the downfal of the administration of Sir Robert Walpole, his successors issued warrants for stopping and opening post letters of a very general and unlimited character.

In the year 1758, Dr. Hensey, a physician, was tried on a charge of high treason, being accused of a treasonable correspondence with the enemy. The principal evidence on which he was convicted was that of a letter-carrier and a Post-office clerk, the latter of whom had opened Dr. Hensey's letters, and delivered them to the Secretary of State.

In 1764, a select committee of the House was appointed to inquire into the abuses of franking letters; and the chairman, Mr. Dyson, was directed by the committee to move the House, "That it be an instruction to the committee, that they have power to inquire into the abuses committed at the Post-office, by opening inland letters:" the motion, however, was negatived.

The last instance that has come to the knowledge of your committee, in which this power was exercised under circumstances of public notoriety, is that of the trial of Horne Tooke for high treason, in 1795. A letter written to him by Mr. Joyce, a printer, was intercepted at the Post-office, and was stated by the prisoner to have been the immediate occasion of his apprehension. On his requiring its production, it was produced in court by the Crown officers, and given in evidence.

It is now so long since any public trial has taken place, in which facts ascertained by opening and detaining letters at the Post-office have been adduced in evidence, that it seems to have been nearly forgotten by the public that such a practice ever existed.

Your committee, having gone through the proofs, of a more public character, that the governments of past times have authorized the detaining and opening of post letters, and given notoriety to the exercise of that authority, and that the fact has, on several occasions, been brought under the notice of Parliament and the courts of law, proceed now to shew (from evidence of a more secret and confidential nature) to what extent this practice has been carried on, by the same authority, during the past and present centuries. Before entering, however, on this head of inquiry, they consider it proper to observe, that they have had before them, with few exceptions, every person now living who has held the seals of Secretary of State, for Home or Foreign Affairs, since the year 1822, as well as two noblemen who have discharged the office of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, and several persons who have held confidential situations under them; and they have further examined the present Postmaster-General, the secretaries of the Post-office for England and Ireland, together with several of the most confidential officers in every branch of the Foreign-office, the Home-office, and the Post-office; and that all these witnesses, without exception, have made to your committee the most full and unreserved disclosures; so much so as to have rendered it superfluous for your committee to examine any other witnesses.

Of the number and nature of warrants for opening and detaining post letters issued by Secretaries of State, from the year 1712 to the year 1798 inclusive, your committee are able to render only a very incomplete account, compiled partly from the books of the Home Department, partly from the records at the State-Paper-office. It appears that, during that term of years, it was not the practice to record such warrants regularly in any official book.

That this account is what the committee describe it to be, very incomplete, is manifest from the small number of warrants that enter into it, considering the length of the term of years. From 1712 to 1798 inclusive, a term of 87 years, the number of warrants, of which any account has been obtained, is but 101; and of that number 11 only belong to the last 20 eventful years of the term, including the period of the French Revolution. In this account, moreover, certain cases are not included, in which it is known, from reports of public trials, and other independent sources of evidence, that letters were opened and detained, such as those of Atterbury, Plunket, Kelly, Hensey, and Horne Tooke.

From the commencement of the present century, if not from an earlier period, down to the present time, the practice has been, with very few exceptions, for such warrants to issue only from the Home-office, although another Secretary of State has occasionally signed the warrant in the absence of the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

Sir James Graham's Bills for regulating Parochial Settlements and for fixing the fees of Magistrates' Clerks, Clerks of the Fees, and Clerks of the Assize, are in type, but at the moment we write it is uncertain whether it will be possible to find room for them, in consequence of the urgent necessity for publishing some new statutes, an immediate acquaintance with which is essential to the practitioner; but they sh[illegible] appear with the least possible delay. When time has been permitted for the mature consideration of the provisions of these important measures, they will be made the subject of attentive review in the columns of the Law Times.

The following letter has appeared in one of the daily papers. Its remarks are very just:—

CLERKS OF PETTY SESSIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—I beg to direct your attention to the following clause in the Bill which has been recently introduced into the House of Commons:—

"And be it enacted, That if one hour shall elapse from the time appointed for holding any petty session of the peace without the attendance of the clerk or his deputy, the session shall be thereby adjourned until the next day appointed for holding the sessions; and at the next petty session of the peace which shall be holden, an entry of all such adjournments for want of attendance of the clerk shall be made in the minutes of the proceedings. And in case one hour from the time so appointed shall elapse without the attendance of at least one justice, the session shall be thereby adjourned to the next day appointed for holding the petty sessions; and in every such case, and also in case one hour shall elapse without the attendance of at least two of the justices, the clerk shal make an entry of the fact in the minutes of the proceedings, and a report of every such failure or irregularity of attendance shall be made by the clerk of petty sessions to the clerk of the peace for the county, who shall lay an abstract of all such reports before the justices assembled in quarter session, and the justices shall cause the clerk of the peace to send a copy of such abstract, with any remarks which they may be desirous of sending therewith, to the Secretary of State; provided always, that any one justice who may be in attendance at the time and place appointed may proceed to act in all matters cognizable at such session for which the presence of two justices is not requisite, and shall then adjourn the session; and any justices who may be in attendance before such adjournment of the session may proceed to act as if they had been in attendance at the time appointed, and nothing herein contained shall authorize the departure of any person summoned to attend such petty session until the matter upon which he was summoned shall have been heard, or until the session shall be adjourned or concluded."

From the discussion to which this measure has given rise both in Parliament and beyond the walls of St. Stephen's, justices and justices' clerks were led to expect that some well-digested and complete measure would have been introduced, far different to the crude, ill-designed, and ill-drawn Bill, as at present prepared. The Bill bears sufficient testimony on the face of it that no practical person, no well-skilled practitioner, thoroughly acquainted with his subject, was consulted in framing it; and I imagine that it never can be intended seriously attempt to pass a Bill with such enactments. The clause which I have set forth is far too absurd and ridiculous to form part of a statute; yet pray remark the spirit in which it is framed, ill-concealed by the scant cloaking of its words. If the clerk makes default in attendance for one hour he is to enter his default in the minute-book, and report his own default to the clerk of the peace, which of course would be very likely to be most punctually done! Then if one hour should elapse without the attendance of one justice, and one hour should elapse without the attendance of two justices, a report of such irregularity of attendance is to be made by the clerk of the petty sessions to the clerk of the peace, who is to lay the report before the justices of the county in general sessions, and from them the report is to reach the Secretary of State, whereupon, no doubt, the Secretary of State will write word to the justices, "Really you are very naughty boys for not attending punctually to your task; just look at the hours I have recorded against you for being absent; I must prevent this, and impose a task upon you and a fine, which shall be this—henceforth you must have a paid magistrate who will attend to the minute." This attempt to introduce stipendiary magistrates throughout the country, under the cloak of paying clerks to the justices fixed salaries, is a clumsy and a stupid trick. I do not think that the contrivance is a scheme of Sir James Graham's, but of some puppets which pull the string behind the shelter of a screen. The consideration of this matter affects country gentlemen generally, and as a ten-hours Bill and a twelve-hours Bill engaged the attention of Parliament during the last session, it seems that a one-hour Bill is to engage the serious attention of the next one. It is, however, a measure fraught with far too great interest to members and country gentlemen generally to be lightly passed over.

I have the honour to remain, yours. very obediently,

August 20. Pous.

Mr. Baron Alderson, adopting Lord Bacon's advice, is in the habit of giving advice to the aristocracy from the judgment-seat, and though his lordship's obiter dicta may not strictly fall within the judicial province, they are marked by very good feeling as well as very good sense, and those for whose benefit his counsels are designed would do well to follow them. Not long ago he made some justly severe observations on the practice of noblemen associating with black-legs for the purpose of gaming, and the remarks of the learned baron made a considerable impression on the public, though it remains to be seen what effect they will have on the aristocratic class they were especially intended for. As a proof, however, that his lordship's observations were not dictated by a spirit of haughty exclusiveness, we may refer to a few words he is reported to have spoken in the course of his recent charge to the grand jury in the county of Suffolk. The following are the terms in which he is said to have expressed himself:—

"In a neighbouring county which I passed through on the circuit, this time, I had what I am afraid I shall not have here—a day of rest; and I went out into the country, and had the pleasure of seeing a match of cricket, in which a noble earl, the lord-lieutenant of his county, was playing with the tradesmen, the labourers, and all around him, and I believe he lost no respect from that course; they loved him better, but they did not respect him less. I believe that if they themselves associated more with the lower classes of society, the kingdom of England would be in a far safer, and society in a far sounder condition. I wish I could put it to the minds of all to think so, because I think it is true."

We concur in the tone and spirit of these observations, which many liberal deplorers of the gloomy disaffection existing among the labouring classes would profit by paying attention to.—Morning Herald.

Whitehall, Aug. 17, 1844.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Mr. Serjeant Adams to be Assistant Judge of the Court of Sessions of the Peace in and for the county of Middlesex.

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has been pleased temporarily to appoint Edward Jeremiah Lloyd, esq. as the Vice-Chancellor of the Duchy, in place of Francis Ludlow Holt, esq. who is labouring under indisposition.

Game Laws.—It may save both the Chronicle and the Times an infinite deal of declamatory writing as to the origin, effects, and defects of our game laws, to be told that the Home Office has for some time past been making very extensive inquiries on the subject; and that there is every reason to believe that another session of parliament will not pass without a complete revision of those laws. We may also add, that since Sir James Graham has been at the head of the Home Department, the evidence on which convictions and committals for poaching have been founded, has, in every case of alleged severity, been required by him from the convicting and committing magistrates; and that in not a few cases the term of imprisonment has been shortened, or the immediate release of the convict been ordered by the Home Secretary. On every account it is, then, most desirable that the administration of the game-laws during the approaching autumn and winter should temper mercy with justice, and a broad distinction be taken, by magistrates, between poachers from necessity and poachers from idleness and confirmed vicious habits. —Morning Herald.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

Already there is considerable difference of opinion in the reading of the new insolvent law. Lord Brougham has published his construction of it, and flatly contradicts a deliberate judgment of Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque. But Lord Brougham, as the parent of the law, may be supposed rather to be guided by what he purposed to enact, while the learned Commissioner looks only to what was really enacted, and which is the best foundation for a legal judgment, the Profession will not hesitate in deciding. But this is only the first-fruit—a slight specimen—of the difficulties consequent upon hasty legislation.

On reference to the Acts in question, and the rule of Court made pursuant to the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, we have little doubt that the attestation of an attorney is necessary; but after the schedule has been filed, the insolvent may conduct the proceedings in person; and Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque, after a conference with three other commissioners, has again decided according to his first opinion. On the question of fees to be charged to prisoners for preparing their schedule, Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque stated on Thursday that the commissioners had consulted on the subject, and were of opinion that 5*l.* or 6*l.* was sufficient to be paid in the first instance.

We direct attention to an advertisement calling a meeting of the members of the Profession for the purpose of putting a stop, if possible, to the sham lawyers and other interlopers by whom the Profession is so seriously injured. We trust that effective measures will be taken.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

Lord Brougham has issued the following instructions as to the provisions of the recent statute:—

"The Act of this session, 1844, introduces no new system; it only makes such additions to the Act of 1842 as experience had recommended:—

"The two Acts of 1842 and 1844 taken together completely put an end to imprisonment for debt. Whoever is in debt to an amount not exceeding 20*l.* exclusive of costs, if there has been a judgment, is protected absolutely from all imprisonment; and if he is at present in prison, he is immediately discharged, upon application to the Court which ordered his arrest. Whoever is indebted to an amount exceeding 20*l.* has only to petition the Court of Bankruptcy if he lives in London, or the district court if he lives in the country, and he obtains an order protecting him from arrest, or an order for his discharge if he is already in prison. He must surrender his property, and give an account of that, and of his debts. This is all he has to do; and unless he shall be found by the Court to have been guilty of fraud, or of crime, or of gross extravagance, he is free from all arrest. If he is found to have practised any fraud, as having obtained goods on false representations, having made away with his property to defraud his creditors, or having committed any breach of trust, and so forth, or if he has incurred debt. upon a judgment in an action on assault, slander, seduction, or other wrongful acts, or if he has run extravagantly into debt, without any means whatever, or even any probable expectation, of paying it, he does not obtain his immediate discharge, but may be imprisoned for a time by order of the judge who examined the whole case. But it no longer depends upon the will of the creditor whether or not the debtor shall be imprisoned, or if imprisoned, how long he shall remain in confinement; this now depends solely on the Court; and the Court has no power to order or to continue the imprisonment for more than twelve calendar months, in any circumstances. This imprisonment is manifestly not punishment for debt, but punishment for crime, and it is absolutely necessary that such punishment should be inflicted, to protect honest creditors against the frauds and other malpractices of dishonest, evil-disposed, or grossly extravagant persons.

"It is also to be borne in mind, that no debtor can obtain either the protecting order, or, if in custody, the liberating order, unless he discloses the nature and amount both of his debts and credits, and property, and that this property, and those credits are taken possession of by the court, and distributed among his creditors, if the final order for his protection is made.

"All persons who are not traders within the bankrupt laws, or who, being such traders, do not owe above 300*l.* are entitled to take the benefit of these Acts, 1842 and 1844, whether they are in custody or not. Person being traders within the bankrupt laws, and owing more than that sum, are left to the remedies and the process provided by those laws in the case of bankrupts.

"Debtors of 20*l.* and under do not come within the description of persons who must obtain their protection or liberation by means of the Court of Bankruptcy. They cannot be now arrested at all for such small debts; if already arrested, they are unconditionally set free, their property only being liable to the process of their creditors. But if it shall appear to the judge trying the cause, that any such debt of 20*l.* or under was incurred by fraud, or by running wilfully in debt without any reasonable prospect of being able to pay, or that the debtor has fraudulently made away with his property, or removed or concealed it with intent to defraud his creditors, then the judge may order his imprisonment, as a punishment for such misconduct, but only for such time as the Small Debt Cou t now has power to imprison, and in no case for more than six calendar months.

"To obtain the protection given by the statutes 1842 and 1844, it is necessary that the debtor should present a petition to the London Court of Bankruptcy, or the District Court of Bankruptcy, and make an affidavit, in the form set forth in the schedule. Each sheet of the petition and schedule should be signed by the petitioner, and attested by some one acting either as his agent or as his attorney.

"In order to obtain a protecting order, or an order liberating from custody, or in any way to obtain the benefit of these Acts, 1842 and 1844, it is not necessary to employ an attorney or solicitor. Any one may act as a debtor's agent, and sign as witness to his affidavit. Any one may sign the petition and schedule; for the order of the Court of Bankruptcy, requiring an attorney to sign the several sheets of the petition and schedule, does not require that it should be an attorney-at-law; any one may act for another as a common attorney. Also the late Act, 1844, expressly allows the petition to be witnessed by an attorney or agent.

"The affidavit must be sworn before a master extraordinary in Chancery, who is also a commissioner for taking affidavits. All attorneys and solicitors are masters extraordinary, and are bound to take affidavits without being employed professionally by the parties.

"As certain writers in the newspapers have completely mis-stated the provisions of these Acts (1842 and 1844), especially representing them as inflicting no imprisonment or other punishment upon persons who run in debt through gross and culpable extravagance, it is necessary to attend particularly to the foregoing statement of the law. There can be nothing more mischievous as regards the interests of honest tradesmen, nor more wantonly cruel as regards thoughtless and extravagant persons, than to encourage the latter running in debt beyond any hope of being able to pay, by telling them that they may do so with impunity. It is believed that the error here pointed out arose from great inadvertence, or from a desire to attack the late measures of the legislature; but its consequences are equally mischievous, whatever may have been its origin.

"Another Act has just passed to render compositions of debtors with their creditors more easy and advantageous to all parties; but as it relates not to the release of persons in custody, there is no occasion here to state its provisions.

"Brougham (Penrith), Aug. 15, 1844."

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Edward Handscomb, of Ampthill, in the county of Bedford, gent. and Alexander Anderson, gent. of Aberdeen, to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

Revising Barristers.—Mr. William Yardley, of Shrewsbury, has been appointed by Mr. Justice Coleridge revising barrister for North Cheshire; and Mr. Townshend for Montgomeryshire and Merionethshire. Uvedal Corbett, esq. has been appointed by Lord Chief Justice Tindal to revise the lists of voters for the county of Hereford for the present year.

The Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales have appointed William Wakeford Attree, esq. barrister-at-law, to be an assistant-tithe commissioner for special purposes; and he did, on the 19th day of this present month, take the oath prescribed by the Act of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, intituled "An Act for the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales," before George Hill, esq. of Brighton, in the county of Sussex, a Master Extraordinary in her Majesty's High Court of Chancery.

Lord Brougham's Circular on Imprisonment for Debt.—Yesterday the schedules of several insolvents confined in Whitecross-street Prison were prepared for filing in the Court of Bankruptcy, in order to obtain their liberation; but some difficulty was experienced in consequence of a decision pronounced by Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque on Saturday being in direct opposition to the circular recently issued by Lord Brougham on imprisonment for debt. It seems that Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque is of opinion that an attorney at law, and not any agent whom an applicant may appoint, must attest the signature of an insolvent to the several documents before they can be filed in the court, and that every page of a schedule should be attested in the same manner. Lord Brougham, on the contrary, distinctly states that any one may sign the schedule, and that an attorney at law is not required. There are always "agents" about a prison, and those insolvents who think to get their proceedings prepared for a less sum than a respectable attorney would charge will find themselves grievously mistaken; besides, the hurried manner in which such persons will proceed with the view of obtaining a discharge, will probably occasion the omission of some important matter, and lead to subsequent proceedings against a debtor, so that a respectable attorney will be found in many instances the best party to employ. There seems to exist a good deal of misunderstanding on the law of insolvency. There are two systems in operation. Under the Act of the present sessions a person can now, without previous notice, whether in person or not, petition the Court of Bankruptcy; but its provisions only extend to traders whose debts do not exceed 300*l.*; those traders above 300*l.* must have recourse to another tribunal, as also the parties whose applications are rejected in the Court of Bankruptcy, in addition to uncertificated bankrupts, &c. Parties are required under the Act to make a proposal for the gradual payment of their debts.—Times.

The New Law for Abolishing Imprisonment for Debt.—Singular and various have been the effects of the new Act. The commissioners at the City Court of Requests refused on Saturday last to grant executions against the bodies of debtors, notwithstanding a clause in the Act constituting the court specified that it was not to be affected by any general Act till six months after the passing of such Act. The commissioners at the Borough Court of Requests closed their court on Friday for a few days, to consider the effect of the Act while some long conversations as to the bearings of the Act, took place at the Sheriffs' and Secondaries' Courts on Tuesday and yesterday, between the Under-Sheriff and counsel, and Mr. Thomas and Mr. Secondary James. At the City Court of Requests yesterday three petitions were presented to the commissioners from prisoners in Whitecross-street, praying for their discharge under the new Act. The name of the first was George Grant, horse-dealer, confined for a debt of 9*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.* after about six weeks' imprisonment. The second, Cornelius Alford Jaquin, for a debt of 6*l.* 16*s.* who was unfortunately taken in execution on the 8th inst. the day before the Act came into operation, but which thus somewhat fortunately was passed so as to relieve him so soon. The third, John Rooney, for a tally bill of 4*l.* 12*s.* 5*d.* He had been in gaol for thirty-six days, and had only to remain about six days longer, when he would have been released from the debt altogether; whereas now, like all other prisoners (a fact which may not be generally known), any goods now, or which may at any future time be in his possession, will be liable to the execution, which, for such purposes, will remain in full force. The whole of the above prisoners were, after some consultation between the commissioners and their legal advisers, declared entitled to be discharged forthwith; and orders for that purpose were immediately drawn up, and forwarded to the Governor of Whitecross-street prison, when they were at once released from custody.—Standard.

The Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt.—The above Act, which received the royal assent on the 9th inst. by commission, came into operation on Saturday last, when a number of debtors who had been imprisoned in the different metropolitan prisons for debts under 20*l.* were liberated, and the same course will be adopted in all the other gaols for debt throughout the country, with the exception of those persons who stand committed for penalties due to the Crown. At the same time, the sheriffs of London and Middlesex, as well as of Surrey, have given directions to the keepers of the respective gaols in the county not to take in any person whose debt is under the sum stated in the Act. With some of the keepers a difficulty has arisen as to whether the clause means the amount to consist of the bonâ fide debt, or whether it is to include costs. If the latter were the case, the benefit would be but slight, as, for instance, some two or three thousand actions are annually brought in the Palace Court, Sheriffs' Court, and Secondaries' Court of London, Middlesex, and Surrey, in which, with but few exceptions, the debt never amounts to 20*l.* but the costs in none of these courts are ever less than 15*l.* By the operation of this Act one of the gaols will be entirely abolished, at the same time effecting a saving to the City of London of between 400*l.* and 500*l.* a year. The prison alluded to is the Borough Compter, situate in Mill-street, Tooley-street, the establishment of which consists of a chaplain, governor, matron, and turnkeys; while the class of persons committed were those taken in execution under process from the Borough Court of requests on tally bills. Strange as it may appear, yet it is no less true that within the last seven years there has only been three persons confined within the walls of the above prison whose debt, on which the arrest was founded, exceeded 20*l.*; and by Wednesday the Borough Compter will be uninhabited, except by the governor and matron. Similar results will attend the Courts of Requests. As an instance of the immense number of persons summoned to these minor courts, some idea may be formed when it is stated that the fees to the two clerks of the Borough Court of Requests exceeds 1,200*l.* annually, and which is paid by the unfortunate debtor. As the law of arrest is thus abolished, summonses will, of course, decrease. It is said that those persons whose vested rights have been injured by the new Act intend to apply, as the town clerks of the old corporations did on the passing of the Reform Act, for compensation.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

PROJECTED UNION OF THE LAW SOCIETIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—Considerable progress having been made in the formation of a General Union of Provincial Law Societies, I beg to send a sketch of the proposed objects and regulations, and shall be glad if you will give it a place in your columns, for the consideration of those members of the societies who may have the advantage of being readers of the Law Times.

It is intended that the first meeting of deputations shall be held in Manchester in the month of January next; the time and place, when finally determined upon, to be advertised in your paper.

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

Thos. Hodgson,

Hon. Secretary to the Yorkshire Law Society.

Castlegate, York, Aug. 20, 1844.

UNION OF PROVINCIAL LAW SOCIETIES.

OBJECTS AND REGULATIONS.

The objects of the Union shall be,—

1st. To promote the interests, and watch over all legislative and other interference with the just rights of the Profession.

2nd. To assist in obtaining all useful and practical amendments of the law.

3rd. To adopt measures for maintaining the respectability of the Profession.

REGULATIONS.

1st. That the Union shall consist of all such provincial societies as shall signify their intention of joining on or before the day of 1845, and of such other societies as shall be subsequently admitted by the Union, and a deputation from each society shall meet about the time of the opening of Parliament annually, in Manchester, or at such other town as shall be determined on at any general meeting of the Union, in order to determine upon opposing such measures as may be detrimental, and supporting such as may be beneficial, to the Profession and the public, and to adopt means of mutual and effective co-operation; such deputations to consist of not more than two members from each society.

2nd. That a special meeting of the Union shall be called by the secretary of the Union at any time, by a resolution to that effect passed at a meeting of the committee of at least three provincial societies, such resolution to be forwarded by the secretary of each such society to the secretary of the union.

3rd. That each provincial law society joining the Union shall contribute £ yearly to the general expenses.

4th. That there shall be a president, two vice-presidents, a treasurer, and a honorary secretary of the Union, to be elected annually.

5th. That at the annual general meeting, the president, vice-presidents, treasurer, and honorary secretary, and other members shall be selected from the members by the meeting, and the body thus chosen shall be the committee until the next annual meeting. The committee shall have power to make by-laws, and adopt all such proceedings in the name of the society as they may think proper, and generally shall be invested with full power to do all such acts as they may think necessary for practically and effectually carrying out the objects of the Union, being indemnified by the Union against all expenses to be thereby incurred, and shall have full control over the funds for the purposes of the Union, and shall meet when they consider it necessary for the interest of the Union, or at the call of the secretary.

6th. That all communications be addressed to the honorary secretary, at the office of the Union at Manchester.

7th. That the Union shall arrange the mode of the different societies acting together in concert, when necessary for effecting the above objects, and such others as may be beneficial to and have the general concurrence of the Profession.

8th. That no political or party question shall be discussed or entertained at any meeting of the Union.

9th. That any alteration of the rules shall be entertained at a special or annual meeting only.

To Readers and Correspondents.

One, &c. (Wolverhampton).—We recommend our correspondent to forward a simple statement of the facts to the Incorporated Law Society, and also to any Law Society of which he may himself be a member. The libel-law forbids the insertion of his letter.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 24, 1844.

TO READERS.

In consequence of the many statutes passed at the very close of the session, and of which so unusual a proportion are of such legal interest as to require either to be given entire or copiously analyzed, it is impossible to preserve the regular order of their appearance without postponing many that are of urgent importance to the practitioner.

It has, therefore, been determined forthwith to print such as require immediate study; and when the chapter comes in its regular turn among "the New Statutes," to state the title only, and refer, for the Act itself, to the page in which it has previously appeared.

It is with this intent that we present to-day the Insolvent Debtors and the Debtors and Creditors Acts, and to make room for them, we have omitted a great deal of the usual material of a number, and curtailed the wonted commentaries upon professional subjects. But it is hoped that the arrangement which will give to the reader the most important of the statutes at the earliest moment will be satisfactory to him, and that he will approve of this partial departure from the order of the chapters.

LAW TIMES EDITION OF IMPORTANT STATUTES.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS ACT.

We are happy to announce that the second of the above series of useful statutes will comprise the recent Insolvent Debtors Act, and the Debtors and Creditors Act.

It is edited by J. Angus Homes, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

The plan which has been adopted with this is very similar to that which was found so useful in the Edition of the Registration Act. The new statute has been incorporated with the old one, of which it is an amendment; the parts of each are distinguished by different types; illustrative notes and some useful forms are added, and a very copious index enables the practitioner instantly to find any subject he needs. The Debtors and Creditors Act is added, and it is hoped that as a whole it will form a useful volume for the office.

Its bulk will necessarily be greater than is that of the Edition of the Registration Act; therefore, until it is in type, it will be impossible to name the price; but it will be as moderate as was that of its predecessor.

It is now passing through the press with all the rapidity consistent with correctness, and we trust it will be ready for delivery in the beginning of next week. An advertisement, written later than this notice, will probably afford more precise information as to price and day of publication, and to that the reader is referred. It may be had by order of any bookseller in the country, but, for obvious reasons, it will be necessary to be particular in ordering it as "Homes's Insolvent Act, Law Times Edition."

It has been suggested that the Poor Law Amendment Act should form one of the series; the suggestion is under consideration.

The two Acts relating to Joint Stock Companies and the Railways' Regulation Act will form one volume, but it will be produced more at leisure, as there is not the same urgency for their appearance.

REGISTRATION APPEAL CASES.

IN reply to many communications, we beg to observe that the REGISTRATION APPEAL CASES have been delayed by an accident, the particulars of which it will be unnecessary to name. They are now in the press, and will be ready for delivery at the beginning of next week, quite in time for use at the ensuing registration.

THE VERULAM SOCIETY.

The First Part of the CRIMINAL LAW CASES has been published.

The Second Part of the REAL PROPERTY and CONVEYANCING CASES is almost ready, and, with the REGISTRATION APPEAL CASES, will be delivered to the members in a few days.

The Third Part of BITTLESTON and SYMONS'S MAGISTRATES' CASES will appear during the vacation: but the various reporters requiring their autumn holidays, no further issue than the above will take place until their return to town in October, and then we have to announce the prospectus of the "Practice of the Law."

THE CRITIC.

[New Publications will receive early and impartial criticism in this department of the LAW TIMES, if forwarded to the Office, 29, Essex-street, addressed to the Editor.]

New Books.

Remarks on the Present State of the Law of Debtor and Creditor, with Suggestions for its Improvement. By THOMAS TURNER A BECKETT, Attorney-at-Law. London, 1844. Butterworth.

AN accident has prevented an earlier notice of this pamphlet, which we much regret, for the subject has lost some of its interest in consequence of recent legislation. But the late statute is far from a complete measure; it is merely a step in the right direction; it was hastily carried through the Parliament; it is the handiwork of the most injudicious of law reformers; it is based upon no principle; it was conceived in spite, and carried to prevent a more honest and impartial measure; and it is impossible that a scheme so devised and so executed can be other than full of faults, or that any long time can elapse before its amendment will be demanded by the country and conceded by the Legislature.

All contributions upon such a topic from men of experience and reflection cannot, therefore, but be welcome as preparatives for those further inevitable changes, and to Mr. A BECKETT are due the thanks both of the Profession and of the public for this unambitious but convincing statement of the results of his long experience as an attorney in reference to the Law of Debtor and Creditor, and the amendments that are required to be made in it.

He sets out by remarking that the community complain of the trouble and expense attendant upon the enforcing the payment of debts about which there is no real dispute, and more especially those which are of small amount. Upon this fact two questions suggest themselves—1st, How does the expense arise? 2nd, How can it be lessened?

First, the expense is occasioned by the uniformity of law proceedings requiring the same formulas to be observed whether one pound or a thousand be at stake, and whether the claim be resisted nominally only or bonâ fide.

Second, How, then, can the expense thus occasioned be lessened?

Mr. A BECKETT says, by "facilitating arrangements of a friendly nature between debtor and creditor, and rendering a vexatious defence to a suit a matter of so serious a character as to intimidate persons from having recourse to this dishonest proceeding."

This has been sought to be effected by the Debtors and Creditors Act of the late session.

But we are of opinion that other more stringent remedies might be devised.

Thus, it might be enacted, that upon service of process for debt, the defendant shall, upon entering appearance, state whether he does so for the purpose of disputing the debt, and if not, then that judgment against him shall be signed forthwith. If the suggestion be made, and he does not go to trial, he should be liable to pay full costs to the plaintiff as between attorney and client; if he go to trial, the jury should be required to state, as part of their verdict, whether the defence was or was not bonâ fide. If they find it not bonâ fide, in like manner full costs should be payable by the defendant. If, on the other hand, he do not pay the debt and costs, whether with or without trial, he should, if he apply for the benefit of the Insolvent or Bankrupt laws, be punishable with imprisonment as a fraudulent debtor, at the discretion of the judge of the court before which he appears, and if he evade his creditor so as to escape the operation of those laws, he should then be punished criminally for the misdemeanor of cheating his creditors. Other provisions might be introduced for abbreviating legal processes in cases of debts not disputed, which would readily suggest themselves to the framer of such a measure.

We throw out these suggestions for the consideration of the Profession, and turn again to the pages of Mr. A BECKETT.

He also recommends a simplification of the forms of procedure, and here his long experience will be listened to with respect.

"Professional experience enables me unhesitatingly to declare that the heavy cost and intolerable delay, so much complained of in proceedings in the common law courts, attach entirely to those which occur between the plea and the trial. Where the debt does not exceed 20*l.* judgment may be obtained by default in a little less than a fortnight, at an expense of about 4*l.* 4s. and for larger sums in the same time, at one of about 6*l.* 6s. If, however, the defendant plead, and the plaintiff proceed thereupon to trial, the costs are quickly increased in suits for small demands to 15*l.*, 20*l.*, and sometimes 50*l.* and in those for larger amounts than 20*l.* to from 40*l.* to 100*l.*

"Every demand must, if disputed, be supported by legal evidence. To obtain this evidence, the necessary witnesses must be subpœnaed, who must be remunerated for their loss of time, and be in attendance from day to day until the cause be disposed of. In suits tried in the superior courts, they may be so in attendance for many days together, and the cause may, after all, go over until another sittings, when the process of subpœnaing and remunerating must be repeated. In actions before the sheriff, the same evil exists in a lesser degree, though there a cause is frequently 'in the paper' for three or four days, at a cost to the plaintiff for witnesses' expenses, varying according to their number, from 1*l.* to 10*l.* per diem. In addition to the costs of witnesses, there are counsel and court fees to be discharged; it may, therefore, be easily understood how the heavy expense of a trial arises, and how little it is dependent upon the pecuniary value of the point at issue.

"And whom does this great cost benefit? Not the attorney, for it lies in a mere naked outlay, upon which there is no profit whatever—not the witnesses, for they are barely remunerated for the loss and inconvenience their attendance exposes them to—not the jury, for the amount received by them individually is contemptible."

The lawyer is blamed for the cost of a trial, but he is not a gainer by it; he would prefer on all occasions an amicable settlement to a harassing suit, in which he has to bear the blame of failure, without reaping either honour or profit by success.

Mr. A BECKETT complains with justice of the stringent rules of evidence, which often exclude the best testimony, and he then directs attention to the County Courts Bill, and he thus comments upon the provisions of that project, which aim at the exclusion of professional assistance.

"The disadvantages to the creditor of this proceeding have now to be considered. They are two-fold: the entailing upon him a loss of time, of greater value, possibly than the redress of his grievance; and the exposing him to difficulties in asserting his rights, which to the great majority of individuals would be found insuperable.

"The person who would seriously propose to cheapen any commodity in daily use, by passing a law to prevent its being sold at a profit, would be deemed a madman; but as law gives to the party righted nothing more than he feels he was entitled to without its assistance, and the person who is compelled to do justice dislikes the process by which it has been extorted from him; any proposal, however visionary, that offers a prospect of rendering it less costly, is sure to be received with favour by the multitude. Many persons, if told that law is a science—that its professors should be men of intelligence and station in society, and remunerated in the exercise of their callings proportionately to their skill and social position, will insist that it should be divested of its scientific character, and made available to all without cost or labour. Every reflecting person admits the impossibility of thus dealing with it; but were its theory and practice never so simple, it would be found a practical hardship upon every suitor to be compelled to seek justice in his own person.

"Law cannot be beneficially administered unless regulated by fixed principles, and carried out by settled forms of procedure; and a man who is not a lawyer can no more conduct a legal contest without professional assistance, than he who knows nothing of tailoring can make a coat on being supplied with cloth and sewing implements.

"It will, however, be objected, that it has never yet been proposed to deprive a man of professional assistance, but that it is intended to fix the remuneration at so low a rate as to place it within the reach of all. An immense boon this would indeed be to the public, if, while the amount of remuneration were thus reduced, the services required for it could be secured. But it is mere mockery to tell a person he shall only be compellable to pay a certain price for an article which no one will supply at that sum. And when I state that the attorney's fee, for his services in bring a contested claim under 10*l.* to a decision, has been proposed to be limited to 6s. 8d., and above 10*l.* and under 20*l.* to 13s. 4d. the virtual prohibtion of professional assistance, under such an arrangement, must be admitted.

"The practical working of the alteration would be the feeing of a number of needy and disreputable agents at the creditor's private cost, or the abandonment of the claim; thus bringing about a remedy against the present evils analogous to cutting off a limb to heal a wound, or killing a patient to put an end to his disease.

"A striking proof of the inefficacy of attempting to cheapen law proceedings by disallowing the fair cost of proper legal assistance, may be observed every day of hearing causes at the Sheriff's and Secondaries' courts. No fees to counsel are allowed in costs in the cases there decided, but, in at least two-thirds, counsel are employed at the private expense of the plaintiff or defendant; thus converting a restriction that was intended to be a boon to the public into a direct tax upon justice."

Mr. A BECKETT then proceeds to propose his palliatives for evils which he thinks cannot be entirely removed in the existing constitution of civilized society. In the alterations he suggests he contemplates the following objects, having reference more to the lessening temptations to litigation than diminishing its cost.

He proposes that personal service of process should, in all cases, be dispensed with, upon an affidavit being made of three attempts to effect such personal service, and of a copy of the writ being left with some inmate of the defendant's house, and that the plaintiff may thereupon, at the expiration of eight days, enter an appearance for the defendant.

He combats the objections raised to this, and shews how well it works in practice in the cases of notices of declaration, notices to quit, and a host of others.

He next devotes considerable attention to the facilitating of arrangements between debtors and creditors; but as this has been effected by the new statute, it will be useless to dwell upon it.

By the bye, we observe that Mr. A BECKETT, in page 26, proposes that the jury should state its opinion of the bonâ fides of the defence, as we had ventured to suggest in an earlier part of this notice.

His next recommendation is to facilitate the proof of debts under 20*l.*; but, before he states his plans for accomplishing this object, he thus comments upon the necessity of severely punishing vexatious defences.

"Those who are compelled to pay the costs they cause to be incurred, suffer in this way sufficiently for their folly; but those who, without any present means or future prospect of bearing the charges they wantonly occasion, should be severely punished for what degenerates from folly into crime. This is an offence which society does not sufficiently reprobate. There is a strong feeling in favour of a man's right to defend himself, and as strong a prejudice against the character of law proceedings, and under these influences the moral sense of the public is blinded, in a great degree, to the guilt of a person who, after incurring a debt he is unable to discharge, wantonly inflicts upon his creditor a very heavy additional loss. This dishonest act does now, under some circumstances, meet with punishment, but it is one from which a man frequently escapes, and which, when suffered in the degree it is inflicted, appears to me most inadequate to the offence.

"The Insolvent Court is the only tribunal where this punishment is awarded; and the indisputable evidence it requires of the act complained of, and the slight grounds on which an excuse for litigation is admitted, often deter a creditor from pursuing a demand which is being recklessly resisted, and more frequently still from incurring the trouble and expense of opposing the debtor when he applies to be discharged from it altogether.

"The evident disposition of the Insolvent Court to view indulgently the commission of this offence may be accounted for, by a desire to make allowance for the great temptations a man in embarrassed circumstances is under, to delay the consummation of his ruin. Hoping, as it were, against hope, such a man will seldom believe that he must really sink until he finds himself submerged. He is ever believing that some unforeseen circumstance will arise to prop his falling fortunes;—that the friend may at last be found to afford the assistance he requires;—that creditors may after all grant the indulgence sought for;—that if he can but gain a few days' time all will be well. Who could not find an excuse for a man so tried, delaying, by the simple act of pleading, the process which strips his home and seals irretrievably his ruin? Once enable a man to gain, without cost, the delay that, by running himself and his creditor to expense, he can now obtain by process of law, and seldom indeed will he pursue the latter course in preference to the former. A debtor might sometimes take unnecessary advantage of the delay thus easily obtained; but as the time granted would necessarily be short, the amount of the payment to be delayed small, and the cost of the indulgence, though not large in itself, sufficiently onerous, but little fear need be entertained of its being very frequently needlessly solicited.

"In proportion, however, as the temptation to vexatious litigation is diminished, its punishment should be rendered more certain and severe. To secure certainty, the jury should be at liberty, in all cases, in giving its verdict, to state its opinion of the bona fides of the defence, and, if it find that the action has been resisted without reasonable grounds, this fact should be certified on the record by the judge, and the certificate taken as conclusive evidence.

"As a further check to litigation, I propose to facilitate the proof of debts under 20*l.* thereby lessening the chance of successful resistance to a just demand, from a deficiency of legal evidence to support it.

"The strictness of the proof at present required in contested cases renders it frequently extremely difficult to support before a jury demands of the simplest nature and most insignificant amount. It by no means unfrequently occurs that those denied by a plea, which the defendant does not appear in court to support, fail altogether for want of proof; and some cases, where the defendant puts in no plea whatever, but leaves the plaintiff to get a verdict for such an amount as he can prove himself entitled to, terminate in obtaining merely nominal damages. Could a defendant beforehand know the weakness of the plaintiff's legal proofs, hundreds of cases that are now compromised would be left to be judicially decided, and finish with the loss of the demand. In numerous instances there is no legal evidence of the delivery of the goods or the performance of the work in respect of which the claim is made; the smallness of the amount and the situation in life of the suitor having caused the necessary precaution as to future proof to be dispensed with, or made the plaintiff himself the only person capable of speaking to the facts of the case. An illustration from my own experience will explain this more clearly. A jobbing carpenter was employed to do work, to obtain payment for which he was compelled to sue his debtor. He had performed all the labour with his own hands, and the debtor had the audacity to defy him, by telling him that as he was no witness for himself he could not substantiate his claim. The only course open was to subpœna every member of the defendant's family—a difficult proceeding in the first place, and most dangerous testimony to trust to in the next. Some of the younger witnesses were forbidden by the defendant to appear, but the others were obliged to admit sufficient to convince the jury of the justness of the claim, and a verdict was ultimately obtained for the whole amount, though not without considerable difficulty, made up, as it was, of a number of small items. Circumstances, however, frequently occur, in which, if the plaintiff's evidence is excluded, none whatever can be obtained."

His remedies may be thus stated:—To admit the evidence of the parties; to permit the plaintiff to file an affidavit of the debt, and of the circumstances under which he seeks to recover it, which, unless met by a counter affidavit, should be conclusive evidence of the facts deposed to; if the defendant dispute them, he to be at liberty to cross-examine the plaintiff in open court, if reasonable cause be shewn to a judge before the trial for requiring his attendance on the trial for this purpose.

He then proposes to enlarge the powers of creditors over the property of their debtors, and lessen the means now available for its concealment:—

"I would recommend that the enactment of the last Bankrupt Act, on the subject of the claims of landlords, and that of the 6 Geo. 4, with respect to those of individuals upon property left by them in the control of the bankrupt, should be applied to writs of execution, thereby preventing such writs from being postponed, to the payment of any sum to the landlord exceeding six months' rent, and giving them effect upon all property of which the defendant, at the time of levying the writ, was suffered to be the ostensible owner, with the consent of the true owner thereof."

The new statute has effected this desirable object. The benefits to be anticipated from it are thus stated:—

"The readiness with which this enactment could be applied to executions is obvious. The advantages resulting to the creditor from such an alteration would be great. The clause in the Bankrupt Act was introduced for the purpose of preventing persons from obtaining a false credit, by appearing to possess property which really did not belong to them; it being wisely considered that those who, even without any fraudulent design, contributed to this state of things should suffer from the loss occasioned by it. The moral justice of the arrangement is indisputable, and need not here be insisted upon. I cannot conceive any train of reasoning by which it could unanswerably be made to appear to lose any of its virtue in being applied to property seized under writs of execution. The enormous amount of fraud it would defeat, every legal practitioner could give decisive evidence of, by illustrations from his own practice. The litigation that would be avoided would be very great, as, notwithstanding the hopelessness of resisting, in general, the fraudulent claims set up to a debtor's property, there are cases so outrageous as to destroy all prudential considerations, and terminate in law-suits—cases which, though few, compared with the large number that are never disputed, are yet sufficiently numerous to occupy much of the time of the courts of justice."

The last point to which this excellent essay addresses itself is "the want of a proper system of punishment for fraudulent debtors." This was amply provided by Lord COTTENHAM'S admirable measure, swept away by Lord BROUGHAM, and subsequently partially restored by Sir JAMES GRAHAM among the thirty clauses which he was obliged to add to Lord BROUGHAM'S bungling Bill when it was flying through the House of Commons, having passed the Lords in so imperfect a shape as to be worthless and impracticable. We subscribe to every word of the following:—

"There is, in the first place, a very imperfect notion on the mind of the public generally, of the vast magnitude of the offence against society of which a fraudulent debtor is guilty. Insolvency is of so frequent occurrence, and is so often brought about by misfortunes which the utmost prudence and integrity cannot avert, that it is generally looked upon rather as a calamity than a crime. When it is the result of unforeseen losses it should be regarded with compassion; where it is the consequence of mere folly or incaution, with forbearance; but when, as is frequently the case, it is nothing more than the climax of a career of fraud, it should be most severely punished. All these distinctions would be readily recognized by the community if the law assisted it in doing so; but there is so little variation in the mode of dealing with insolvents of every class, and so few are the means afforded of distinguishing them, that the profligate and fraudulent pass in the general mass, not only unpunished, but without any diminution of their capabilities of inflicting future injury on society by the exposure of their past delinquency. He must be a very persevering man who, having already suffered a heavy loss by the act of a fraudulent debtor, has the courage to pursue him through all the paths the law leaves open for his escape, knowing that the additional expense is certain and irrecoverable—that success is most doubtful—that the debtor's punishment will be slight, and that the probability is, that the whole business will conclude by the creditor being treated as a persecutor, and the debtor compassionated as an oppressed man.

"I can suggest one remedy only; viz. that the contracting a debt fraudulently, and concealing property from a creditor to which he is entitled, shall be considered as a criminal offence, punishable by imprisonment with hard labour, proportioned to its aggravation. No rational fear need be entertained of this alteration operating with undue severity. Juries are generally merciful, and would be disposed to be particularly lenient in trying cases of this description, the uncertainties of business making them feel that as none of them are secure from insolvency, they should be cautious in visiting as a crime that which might come upon any of them as a misfortune. An enactment of this nature would, at any rate, meet those cases of swindling which, having been managed so as to give them the character of a transaction between debtor and creditor, evade the grasp of the criminal law. These cases, which figure constantly in the police reports, are altogether unpunished, as the utter irresponsibility of the swindlers makes any attempt to recover the money by the aid of the civil law perfectly Quixotic.

"Were I to attempt to point out the wickedness of a studied fraud in contracting a debt, or the gross dishonesty of withholding from a creditor the property that should be available for the satisfaction of his demand, I should write a series of truisms which would be very impatiently read. Every one admits that a debt so contracted is—to use a common expression applied to such transactions—'worse than a highway robbery,' yet its punishment is merely nominal."(a)

In a postscript, Mr. A BECKETT notes with approval the provisions in the last County Courts Bill, that it should be put in force only at such times and places as her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, shall think fit, for thus an opportunity will be offered for seeing how it works, before it is applied everywhere. Mr. A BECKETT'S anticipations of the scene will, we doubt not, be verified to the letter.

"If the Bill should have the effect I anticipate, the number of cases that will come before the courts to be created will exceed near a hundred-fold those which are now decided before the sheriff; but this will arise from the want of any distinction between defended and undefended cases. The latter, which so vastly preponderate over the former, never, under the present state of things, come before any court at all; while, by the system proposed to be introduced, they will have to take their turn with the former. When this 'turn' will arrive, if the cases are to be heard patiently, it will be for the suitor to discover; and in hanging about the court from day to day, with his witnesses at his heels, he will most assuredly have ample time for meditation on this point. It is quite certain that there will be a vast deal of bustle in getting through the business, and, perhaps, a little confusion in the hearing and deciding cases, when conducted by plaintiffs and defendants in person, made up of the stupid and the cunning:—women (young or old, as the case may be), and a sprinkling of minors. There will be a considerable amount of bawling for witnesses—of elbowing, pushing, and swearing, outside the court or inside, as the accommodation afforded for suitors may allow; and the whole affair will, no doubt, have a most business-like appearance. But the real question to be ascertained will be, what do the suitors think of it all? It will be difficult for her Majesty's Privy Council to trace them out, and talk the matter quietly over with them; and I can point out no other safe test for ascertaining whether such a court would be preferred to the existing tribunals, than by giving suitors a choice of both; and finding by official returns, to be taken after a fair time for trial had elapsed, which has been the most frequently resorted to."

We now take leave of this pamphlet with high respect for the right feeling, good sound sense, and extensive legal and practical knowledge of the excellent author, whose advice will, we trust, be often tendered upon the many subjects relating to Law Reform which must occupy public and professional consideration for some years to come.

(a) Lord Cottenham, by his Bill for improving the law of debtor and creditor, which seems likely to be carried—from the table to the shelf—makes the fraudulently contracting a debt a criminal offence.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Wednesday, May 1.

CAUTY v. HOLDITCH.

Injunction to restrain a resale—Specific performance—Property sold under the direction of the Court.

Where a sale took place under the direction of the Court, and, consequently, no deposit was required, it was held not to be sufficient ground for directing a resale that the purchaser was the son of the owner of the property, interested in preventing a sale, and a person without property or any known resources for completing his purchase. He was, however, a person of good character, denied collusion with his father, and had strictly conformed to the practice of the court in his biddings and subsequent proceedings.

This was a motion by way of appeal from the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England. Cauty, the father of the plaintiff, was interested in certain mines in Wales, upon which Holditch, the defendant, had advanced money, and having instituted a suit, obtained an order for the sale of the property. At the sale before the Master, the present plaintiff, the son of the elder Cauty, was the highest bidder for the property. The defendant treated that bidding as merely colourable, and was about to proceed to resell the estate by auction. The sale was fixed to take place at the Auction Mart on the day of this application.

Wakefield and Glasse now moved to restrain the defendant from reselling the mines. Affidavits as to the bona fides of the plaintiff in making the purchase and his personal respectability, were read. It was admitted he had no property, and was employed at a salary as captain of the mine. He, however, swore that he was neither in debt nor distress, and that he was not without resources. No deposit was required, that being the usual course when sales take place under the direction of the Court. The title was now before counsel.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Does young Cauty say where the funds are to come from?

Wakefield.—Possibly he may expect to procure a loan on the property as soon as the title has been approved. The sale took place on the 25th of January, 1844, and the abstract was returned with the observations of counsel on the 14th of February. Though the plaintiff paid no deposit, he subjected himself to commital by signing the bidding-book. They relied on the established practice of the Court.

Rolt for the defendant.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Might not the plaintiff say this is a valuable property, and by making the purchase prevent a sale to a stranger in the hope of being able to complete it by getting some one to stand in his place? One view of the transaction might be that he did it to defeat Holditch; another, that he made the purchase to prevent the property being sacrificed, and that he bought it with the expectation of getting some person to take it.

Wakefield, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is quite clear that he had no money of his own, and he does not point out his resources. The affidavits shew that young Cauty is a man of good character; and though he has no property, he knows the working of the mines, and their value; there is, therefore, no ground to say that his bidding was necessarily illusive. Neither was there any thing in his previous conduct which would lead to that inference. Looking at all the circumstances, there was nothing irregular or improper in his acts. He had a right to bid at the sale according to the rules of the court, on speculation; and if he shall not perform his contract, he will be subject to the penalty of contempt. If, therefore, his purchase was bona fide, if the bidding was not made for the purpose of protecting his father's interest, there is nothing to impeach it. If so, there ought not to have been an order for a resale. The motion to restrain the resale must be granted. There will be no costs of the application to the court below, but each party must pay his own costs.

[Before the case was finished, the sale had taken place, and the defendant Holditch was declared the highest bidder at 1,000*l.* a sum stated to be greatly below the real value of the property. Upon the decision having been pronounced, the contract was at once rescinded, and a deposit which had been paid by the defendant returned.]

Saturday, July 27.

Re WORSLEY.

Application—Rehearing petition after compromise made and performed, on the ground that the party objected to such compromise, refused.

Sir William Worsley appeared in person to support a cause petition presented by himself, by which he prayed that a petition heard and determined some years ago might be reheard.

In a cause Sir Wm. Worsley was reported by the Master to be indebted to Miss Worsley in a balance of 4,000*l.* Sir William had objected, before the Master, to that finding, and on the application to confirm the Master's report, he presented a petition against its confirmation, and alleging various errors therein.

The two petitions came on to be heard together in 1831, when Sir Edward Sugden, who was Sir William Worsley's counsel, agreed to a compromise, by which his client was to pay 2,000*l.* That money had been accordingly paid.

Romilly and James, contrà.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—After a compromise has been fairly made by the counsel of the party, the matter cannot be reheard. Petition dismissed.

REED v. PIKE.

Practice—Defendant attached for contempt in not putting in an answer—Pauper defendant—Suitor's fund—New orders—Discharge of prisoner.

Where a defendant, who is in contempt for not answering, puts in his answer without payment of costs, a subsequent order that he may defend in formâ pauperis will not relieve him from the payment of costs then already incurred, and he can only be discharged from custody under the Insolvent Act.

The defendant Pike had been attached on the 2nd of May last for want of an answer, and on the 29th of May he was brought up to the bar of the court by habeas corpus and committed. On the 1st of June he was admitted to defend in formâ pauperis. This, however, would not relieve him from payment of prior costs, for which he therefore remained in contempt. On the 22nd of June he filed his answer, and an order was afterwards made for a reference to the Master, to inquire whether the defendant was of ability to pay costs. Neither the sixth nor seventh rules of Sir Edward Sugden's Act applied to this case. The sixth rule only applies where the answer had not been put in, and here the answer had been filed. The seventh order applies only where the Master reports upon the poverty of the prisoner.

A motion was now made to discharge the prisoner, and a cross-motion to take the answer off the file, on the ground that the defendant, at the time of filing it, was in contempt.

Cooper, for the motion.

Smith, for the cross-motion, cited Bright v. Taylor (MSS.), before the Vice-Chancellor of England. The 16th and 17th sections of the Act provide for the case of this prisoner, who must obtain his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act.

Cooper, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I think these two clauses (the 16th and 17th sections of 1 Wm. 4, c. 36) apply to the Insolvent Debtors Court only. It is quite clear, from the 16th section, that costs are to be considered as a debt, and when you come to the 17th section, by which it is enacted that "the court of equity in which the suit is depending shall, upon the application of the party in contempt, discharge him from the same, except as to the costs thereof, for which he shall remain in custody, and such costs shall be deemed within the provision lastly hereinbefore contained, and he shall be dischargeable therefrom as if the process were for non-payment of money or costs," it is quite clear that this is a following up of the former section. He has cleared his contempt for not answering, but the costs still remain.

Motion for discharge of the defendant refused.

ALLIBONE v. JONES.

Contempt in not answering—Construction of 17th rule of the 15th section of 1 Wm. 4, c. 36.

Cooper moved, under the 17th rule, to discharge the defendant, who since his commitment had put in his answer, but had not paid the costs.

Jervis, contrà.—Bright v. Taylor is a consent cause. The 17th rule is not applicable; contempt for not putting in an answer is carefully provided for by preceding rules.

Cooper, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I think it is clear that the proper construction of the 17th rule is, that it does not apply to a case of a defendant being in contempt for not answering. The different clauses go on consecutively; the object of the 6th and 7th rules is to get the act done, and there the costs are specially provided for, but the 17th rule does not apply to this case. The great object of the Act was to get the answer put in, and here that has been done. Where the commitment is for not doing an act, the Court discharges the party from his contempt on doing the act, but that does not clear the costs. The defendant cannot be discharged until he has paid the costs.

JUDGES' CHAMBERS.

Wednesday, Aug. 14.

(Before Mr. Justice MAULE.)

Re W. SMITH, the elder.

An application can be made to a judge at chambers on an execution of "any court," the words of the 59th section being, "to a judge of one of her Majesty's superior courts of law at Westminster, or to the court in which such judgment shall have been obtained."

This was an application by summons on the attorney for the detaining creditor to shew cause why the prisoner should not be discharged out of the custody of the marshal of the Queen's Prison, under the 59th section of the Act to amend the law of insolvency and execution, on the ground that the debt for which he was detained did not exceed the sum of 20*l.*

On the part of the prisoner, it was proved, by a copy of the rules, that the debt was under the amount prescribed.

MAULE, J. asked if there was any affidavit of the debt. He should in all cases require an affidavit.

It was stated that the summons was opposed, and therefore no affidavit was needed.

MAULE, J. said he had already made orders ex parte on affidavit that the debts were under 20*l.* leaving the parties to apply to the court out of which the judgment was obtained if there was any fraud.

Several objections were urged on the part of the detaining creditor. The prisoner was in custody on a judgment obtained in the Palace Court, to which court he should have applied, as the creditor could then shew that he came within the exceptions of the 59th section, and was a party entitled to his discharge.

MAULE, J. decided that he could entertain the application.

It was then urged that circumstances could be shewn to prevent the prisoner being discharged. The Act contemplated that at "any time" it could be shewn that a party was not entitled as a matter of course to his liberation.

On the part of the prisoner it was contended that such circumstances could only be shewn on the trial of the cause, and that, at all events, the words "that if at any time it shall appear to the judge who shall

"try the cause," could not have reference to his lordship, as the action was brought in the Palace Court.

It was contrà insisted that the words of the 59th section had reference to subsequent application; the provision mentioned, besides the improper contracting of a debt, other points, such as a fraudulent transfer of property, which could not be proved on a trial; and, further, the concluding part of the clause shewed that such applications could be heard "whether or not execution against the goods" had been issued.

MAULE, J. held that he could make an order of discharge, which he made accordingly.

It is understood that application will be made to the court out of which the judgment was obtained to bring the party under the 59th section, in order that he may be retaken. The point is an important one.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.—HEREFORD.

CROWN COURT.

REG. v. ADDIS.

It is not felony to take a horse and ride him forty miles away, there leaving him, if there was no attempt to sell or dispose of him.

Indictment for stealing a horse.

The horse was taken by the prisoner out of a stable near where he lived at Byton, in Herefordshire, with a bridle, and ridden by him to Bewdley, on his way to Birmingham, a distance of forty miles, where he left the horse at an inn.

W. H. Cooke contended for the prisoner that, wishing to see Birmingham, he took the horse merely to assist him along his road, and not with intent to steal him.

ATCHERLEY, Serjt.—If a person, without leave or authority, takes a horse for frolic or any purpose without intent to steal, he is not guilty of felony. This intent must be gathered from the circumstances, especially from the disposition to sell the animal. In this case the prisoner does not appear to have ever offered the horse for sale, but when he arrived at the inn at Bewdley, he had the horse fed, and then went to sleep elsewhere, and, moreover, he returned to the neighbourhood whence he took the horse, and where he was well known. Verdict, not guilty.

Davies prosecuted, and

W. H. Cooke defended the prisoner.

MONMOUTH SUMMER ASSIZES.

REG. v. JAMES.

If a gun be presented at a person, loaded with gunpowder and bullet, but not primed, so as to be capable of going off, it is not a felony under 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 3, neither can the prisoner be convicted of an assault.

Indictment for attempting to discharge a certain gun, loaded and charged with gunpowder and bullet, at and against one George Godwin.

It appeared by the evidence that the prisoner, being in possession of a house, presented a gun at a person who came to claim entry; that the gun was wrested from him; that, in a cavity in the stock handle, there were found, under a sliding lid, several bullets; that the gun was loaded, but that, on attempting to discharge it, it did not go off, and, on looking at the pan, there was no powder, excepting what adhered to the sides, and insufficient to admit of discharging the gun.

It was admitted that, as the gun was not so loaded as to be capable of doing the harm intended, there must be an acquittal of the felony, according to the decision in Rex v. Carr (1 Rus. & Ry. 377), cited in 1 Greaves' Russ. on Crimes, 723.

Greaves contended that, though the felony was not proved, the prisoner had been guilty of an assault in presenting the gun at Godwin, who had no means of knowing that the gun was not primed, and thus an assault had been committed by presenting the gun in any way so as to create fear and alarm. (Reg. v. St. George, 9 Car. & Payne, 483.)

TINDAL, C. J.—According to the general law on the subject, it is not necessary that the person should be actually struck in order to constitute an assault. It is true, in this case, that the person might have been in such a position that he might have been struck, but you exclude that supposition by evidence that the gun was so loaded that it could not go off by any possibility; therefore, it is no felony; and, for the same reason, it is not a case in which there could have been an assault.

Greaves, for the prosecution.

Beadon, for the prisoner.

REG. v. ENGLAND and ROBINS.

A shed or cabin, though built of stone, roofed, and with door, fireplace, and window, does not constitute a house in cases of arson, under 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 3, where the building has not been slept in with permission of the owner.

Indictment for setting fire to a house.

It appeared that the building in question was a shed or cabin, used at some lime-works for the workmen to dry themselves in, and to eat their food. It had four walls built of limestone, a roof of brown turf and straw, supported by strong pieces of wood; there was a door, a fireplace, and a chimney, but no window. It was proved that no men slept there regularly, but that occasionally a man had slept there, without permission to do so. There was no furniture in the place, excepting the benches on which the men sat to eat their food.

Greaves contended that this constituted a house under the statute. He cited Rex v. Smith (1 M. & Rob. 256).

TINDAL, C. J.—We must not pare down the nature of a house within the meaning of the statute so as to exclude a very poor cottage; but here it is clear that there was no occupation at all; and the person who slept there had no sort of authority or permission from the owner to do so, and was in fact a mere trespasser. This does not constitute a house, and the prisoner must be discharged. Verdict, not guilty.

Greaves, for the prosecution.

W. H. Cooke, for the prisoner.

REG. v. VAUGHAN.

The plea of insanity is supported by shewing that the prisoner was incompetent to know that the particular act in question was a wrong one.

Indictment for stealing a cow.

It appeared that the prisoner had had his cow taken from him under an illegal distress; that, with a view of recovering her, he had gone to the prosecutor's close in the night, who had purchased his cow, and taken another cow out of it. It was also proved that, owing to this and various other losses, the prisoner's mind was affected, and he was under an impression that every one was robbing him; whereupon the defence of insanity was taken.

TINDAL, C. J.—It is not mere eccentricity or singularity of manner that will suffice to establish the plea of insanity; it must be shewn that the prisoner had no competent use of his understanding so as to know that he was doing a wrong thing in the particular act in question. Verdict, not guilty.

Rickards, for the prosecution.

Symons, for the prisoner.

Circuit Reports.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.
DEVIZES SUMMER ASSIZES, 1844.

(Before Mr. Justice PATTESON.)

Friday, Aug. 16.

REG. v. CHARLES WISE and OTHERS.

Demurrer—Indictment—Contra formam statuti.

Where an offence was created by one statute, and a subsequent statute merely altered the punishment, without altering the offence, an indictment concluding "against the form of the statutes" (in the plural) is bad on demurrer.

Indictment for a riot and beginning to demolish a house, the property of the prosecutor. It concluded "against the form of the statutes, &c." in the plural.

Slade, for the prisoners, demurred, on the ground of the conclusion being "against the form of the statutes," instead of "the statute." The offence in this case was created by one statute, and subsequently another statute was passed, changing the punishment, but in no way affecting the offence. The offence, therefore, was against one statute only, and the conclusion should have been in the singular.

PATTESON, J. said that the judgment of the Court must be for the prisoners. The demurrer was good. An objection, the converse of this, had been taken at Dorchester, and in that case he had decided against the objection, which was, in fact, a decision in favour of the objection now raised.

Slade, for the prisoners.

Saturday, Aug. 17.

REG. v. JOHN RUSSELL.

Evidence—Certificate of conviction.

On an indictment against a convict for an escape, a certificate stating that prisoner had been convicted of two larcenies, and sentenced to two several terms of transportation of seven years, sufficiently sets out the substance and effect of the indictment, and is admissible in evidence under 5 Geo. 4, c. 84, s. 24.

Prisoner was indicted for escaping from custody, being at the time under sentence of transportation. To prove the prisoner a convict, Hadow, for the prosecution, put in a certificate, given by Mr. Bellamy, under stat. 5 Geo. 4, c. 84, s. 24, which stated that the prisoner had been convicted of two larcenies, and sentenced to two several terms of transportation of seven years each for the said larcenies.

Hodges, for the prisoner, contended that the certificate was insufficient. By the above statute a certificate was made evidence provided it set out the substance and effect of the indictment upon which the prisoner had been convicted. This certificate did not do so, and therefore was not evidence of the conviction.

Hadow, for the prosecution, contended that inasmuch as the certificate set forth that the prisoner had been indicted for a larceny, convicted, and sentenced to be transported, it sufficiently stated the substance and effect of the indictment.

PATTESON, J. said that he considered that the certificate in question sufficiently complied with the requisitions of the statute, and he should receive it in evidence.

The prisoner was subsequently, on other grounds, Acquitted.

Hadow, for the prosecution.

Hodges, for the prisoner.

CLERKENWELL POLICE COURT.

Friday, Aug. 23.

GENEROUS HELPMATE SOCIETY v. WILLIAM HUMPHREYS.

On this case being called on, an individual stated that he appeared on behalf of the defendant.

Horry, for the complainants, inquired whether he was an attorney.

The party replied that he had handed to the magistrate his authority to appear, and believed that it was satisfactory.

Horry pressed for a definite reply to his question, when the person alluded to said that he was the clerk of Mr. Rivolta, an attorney.

Mr. COMBE desired to learn the object of the inquiry.

Horry said that, not to impede the investigation at a later stage, he intended at once to object to a clerk examining a witness or addressing the Bench, as not being a person legally entitled to do so.

Mr. COMBE remarked, that he did not see that he was called on to pronounce an opinion on the point.

Horry apprehended that the magistrate would not allow an illegal act to be committed in his presence. The law nowhere authorized an attorney's clerk to conduct a case in any court. He was an individual not known to the law, which, wherever it allowed a person to appear and plead in court for another, specified counsel or attorney only, as in the Bankrupt and Prisoners' Counsel Acts. Besides, an attorney was only a deputy, and could not appoint another to do that by a dash of his pen which he could only do himself after five years' servitude and the payment of large sums of money. The system of practising in police and other courts by persons pretending to be clerks to attorneys, but, in reality, acting only in the names of the latter, had now become so extensive, that no method existed to destroy the abuses of which so many complaints had lately been made, except by insisting on the presence of the principals, leaving the clerks to their real official duties. He then alluded to the decisions of the Commissioners of Bankruptcy, during the last year, that clerks could not legally act as advocates before them, and quoted a recent decision of Mr. Serjt. Goulburn, that even articled clerks who were actually qualifying themselves to act in courts of justice were equally excluded.

Mr. COMBE said that he did not care about the decisions of courts of bankruptcy. The decisions of the courts of requests might just as well be quoted. He should give no opinion, but leave the clerk to act on his own responsibility.

The clerk said he was quite prepared to meet any responsibility.

Horry advised him not to be too rash in incurring the risk of a heavy fine and a long imprisonment, and was proceeding to argue that he could not be heard, when

Mr. COMBE remarked that the circular letter of the Secretary of State, some years since, directed the magistrates to hear attorneys or their authorized clerks, and it could hardly be supposed that Mr. Marck Phillips, who was one of the first lawyers of the day, would have advised a minister like Lord John Russel to send such a letter, had it been illegal, to allow attorneys' clerks to conduct cases before police magistrates.

Horry doubted very much whether that letter was intended to intimate that a clerk was to be heard like a counsel or attorney, or, if such were the fact, then he would submit that the letter had no foundation in law. As, however, the learned magistrate had intimated a disinclination to decide the point, allowing the clerk to act at his peril, he would not urge the question, which he had reason to believe would be hereafter submitted to the opinion of the Queen's Bench.

The case was then continued.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

BY the publication of some of the New Statutes, we record what has been done in the last session, and by the insertion of Sir James Graham's Bill for Amending the Law of Settlement, we put it in the power of our readers to consider its bearing at their leisure, and afford them ample time to discuss its merits and defects. The new Acts relative to Bankruptcy, Insolvency, and Execution, it will be seen from the advertisements, form a volume in the LAW TIMES series of Important Statutes. We have noticed it in another place. Some comments upon the Six Clerks Compensation Job will be found in the leading article.

Whereas it is expedient that the law of settlement should be rendered more simple, and that the laws relating to the removal of the poor should be consolidated and amended; be it therefore enacted, by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That from and after the passing of this Act, so much of the following Acts of Parliament as relates to the settlement of persons in parishes, or the removal of poor persons from the parishes to which they are chargeable, except so far as any of the said Acts may repeal the provisions of any former Act, shall be and the same is hereby repealed; (namely) an Act made in the thirteenth and fourteenth years in the reign of King Charles the Second, "For the better Relief of the Poor of this Kingdom;" an Act made in the third year of the reign of King William and Queen Mary, "For the better Explanation and supplying the Defects of the former Laws for the Settlement of the Poor;" an Act made in the eighth and ninth years in the reign of King William the Third, "For supplying some Defects in the Laws for the Relief of the Poor of this kingdom;" an Act made in the ninth and tenth years of the reign of King William the Third "For Explaining an Act made the last Session of Parliament, intituled, 'An Act for supplying some Defects in the Laws for the Relief of the Poor of this Kingdom;'" an Act made in the twelfth year in the reign of Queen Anne, "For making perpetual the Act made in the thirteenth and fourteenth years of the reign of the late King Charles the Second, intituled 'An Act for the better Relief of the Poor of this Kingdom, and that Persons bound Apprentices to or being hired Servants with Persons coming with Certificates, shall not gain Settlements by such Service or Apprenticeships;' and for making perpetual the Act made in the sixth year of her present Majesty's reign, intituled, 'An Act for the Importation of Cochineal from any Ports in Spain during the present War, and six months longer;' and for reviving a clause in an Act made in the ninth and tenth years of the reign of the late King William, intituled, 'An Act for settling the trade to Africa, for allowing Foreign Copper Bars imported to be exported;'" an Act made in the ninth year in the reign of King George the First, "For amending the Laws relating to the Settlement, Employment, and Relief of the Poor;" an Act made in the third year of the reign of King George the Second, "For continuing and amending an Act for regulating the Price and Assize of Bread; for Relief of Bankrupts whose Certificates were not allowed before the Expiration of a late Act for the better Preventing Frauds committed by Bankrupts; for allowing further Time for Enrolment of Deeds and Wills made by Papists, and for Relief of Protestant Purchasers and Lessees, and for making further Provision concerning Certificates relating to the Settlements of Poor Persons, and the charges of maintaining and removing certificated Persons;" an Act made in the thirty-first year of the reign of King George the Second, "To amend an Act made in the third year of the reign of King William and Queen Mary, intituled 'An Act for the better Explanation, and supplying the Defects of the former Laws for the Settlement of the Poor, so far as the same relates to Apprentices gaining a Settlement by Indenture; and also to empower Justices of the Peace to determine Differences between Masters and Mistresses and their Servants in Husbandry, touching their Wages, though such servants are hired for less Time than a Year;'" an Act made in the thirteenth year in the reign of King George the Third, "For the better Regulation of Lying-in Hospitals and other Places appropriated for the charitable Reception of Pregnant Women, and also to provide for the Settlement of Bastard Children born in such Hospitals and Places;" an Act made in the twentieth year of the reign of King George the Third, "For obviating Doubts touching the Binding and Receiving of Poor Children Apprentices, in pursuance of several Acts of Parliament made for the Relief of the Poor within particular incorporated Hundreds or Districts, and for ascertaining the Settlement of Bastard Children born in the Houses of Industry within such Hundreds or Districts;" an Act made in the twenty-second year of the reign of King George the Third, "For the better Relief and Employment of the Poor;" an Act made in the twenty-third year of the reign of King George the Third, "To prevent Prisoners in the King's Bench Prison or the Rules thereof, or their Families or Servants, gaining Settlements in the Parish of Saint George the Martyr, in the Borough of Southwark, and County of Surrey; and for the Relief of the said Parish, with respect to the Families of Prisoners in the said King's Bench, or the Marshalsea Prison, or in the County Gaol, or House of Correction belonging to the said County; for regulating the manner of choosing Overseers of the Poor; and for appointing Collectors of the Poor's Rates within the said Parish;" an Act made in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of King George the Third, "To prevent the Removal of poor Persons until they shall become actually chargeable;" an Act made the forty-ninth year of the reign of King George the Third, "For altering, amending, and explaining certain Acts relative to the Removal of the Poor, and for making Regulations in certain Cases touching the examination of Paupers, as to their settlement; and for extending to all Parishes certain Rules and Orders in Workhouses, under an Act of the twenty-second year of his present Majesty, intituled, 'An Act for the better Relief and Employment of the Poor;'" an Act passed in the fifty-second year of the reign of King George the Third, "For the better Cultivation of Navy Timber in the Forest of Alice Holt, in the County of Southampton;" an Act made in the fifty-fourth year of the reign of King George the Third, "To render valid certain Indentures for the binding of Parish Apprentices, and Certificates of the Settlement of Poor Persons;" an Act passed in the fifty-fourth year of the reign of King George the Third, "To repeal certain Provisions in Local Acts for the Maintenance and Regulation of the Poor, and to make other Provisions in relation thereto;" an Act made in the fifty-sixth year of the reign of King George the Third, "To regulate the Binding of Parish Apprentices;" an Act made in the fifty-ninth year of the reign of King George the Third, "To amend the Laws for the Relief of the Poor;" an Act made in the first and second years of the reign of King George the Fourth, "For declaring valid certain Indentures of Apprenticeship, and Certificates of Settlements of Poor Persons in England;" an Act made in the third year of the reign of King George the Fourth, "To amend the General Laws now in being for regulating Turnpike Roads in that part of Great Britain called England;" an Act made in the sixth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, "For the Amendment of the Law respecting the Settlement of the Poor, as far as regards renting Tenements and paying Parochial Taxes;" an Act made in the eleventh year of the reign of King George the Fourth, "To repeal the Provisions of certain Acts relating to the Removal of Vagrants and Poor Persons born in the Isles of Jersey and Guernsey, and chargeable to Parishes in England, and to make other Provisions in lieu thereof;" an Act made in the first year of the reign of King William the Fourth, "To explain and amend an Act of the sixth year of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, as far as regards the Settlement of the Poor by the Renting and Occupation of Tenements;" an Act made in the second year of the reign of King William the Fourth, "To amend an Act of the fifty-ninth Year of his Majesty King George the Third, for the Relief and Employment of the Poor;" an Act made in the second year of the reign of King William the Fourth, "To enable Churchwardens and Overseers to inclose Land belonging to the Crown for the Benefit of Poor Persons residing in the Parish in which such Crown Land is situated;" an Act made in the fourth year of the reign of King William the Fourth, "To repeal certain Acts relating to the Removal of Poor Persons born in Scotland and Ireland, and chargeable to Parishes in England, and to make other Provisions in lieu thereof, until the First day of May, One thousand Eight hundred and Thirty-six, and to the end of the then next Session of Parliament," and all Acts to continue the same; an Act made in the fifth year of the reign of King William the Fourth, "For the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales."

2. Persons to retain their settlements ascertained by warrants of removal or admissions in writing made before this Act. Appeal preserved against warrants of removal made before this Act.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That every person who, before the passing of this Act, has, on the ground of his own settlement, been removed or directed to be removed to any parish under any warrant of removal not abandoned or quashed before or after the passing of this Act, or been expressly admitted by any writing under the hands of the majority of the overseers of any parish to be settled therein, shall, after the passing of this Act, be deemed to be settled in such parish: provided also, that when any person has, before the passing of this Act, been placed under a warrant of removal, it shall be lawful for any person to appeal against such warrant, in like manner and with the like effect in all respects as if this Act had not been passed: provided also, that where any appeal against a warrant of removal has been finally decided upon before the passing of this Act, such decision shall have the like effect in all respects as it would have had if this Act had not been passed: provided also, that where any appeal against a warrant of removal has been made, but not finally decided upon before the passing of this Act, nothing in this Act contained shall in any way affect the decision to be given upon such appeal.

3. Other persons to have—1st, Birth settlement; 2nd, Father's settlement; or, 3rd, Mother's settlement.—And be it enacted, That every person with regard to whom no such warrant or admission has been made, shall be settled in the parish in which he was born; or if the parish in which he was born cannot be ascertained, or if he was not born in England, he shall, if born in wedlock, be settled in any parish in which his father would, if living after the passing of this Act, be settled, or if his father would not be settled in any parish in England, or if the parish in which his father would be settled cannot be ascertained, or if he was not born in wedlock, he shall be settled in any parish in which his mother would, if living after the passing of this Act, be settled; but no person shall be settled in any parish on the ground that his grandfather or grandmother or any more remote ancestor was settled there.

4. Register of birth, or certified register of baptism, evidence of the place of birth.—And be it enacted, That in any case in which the place of birth of any person may be in question before any justices or any court, under the provisions of this Act, such justices or court shall admit a certified copy of the register of the birth of such person made under the provisions of the Act passed in the seventh year of the reign of King William the Fourth, intituled, "An Act for registering Births, Deaths, and Marriages in England," containing a statement of the place of birth of such person as primâ facie evidence of the place of birth of such person; or if such person were born before the said Act came into operation, or if the place of birth is not stated in such register, such justices or court shall admit a copy of the register of the baptism of such person, certified by the incumbent, officiating curate, parish clerk, or any churchwarden of the parish to which such register belongs, and witnessed by one witness, as primâ facie evidence of the birth of such person in the place in which he appears by such register, or such copy thereof, to have been baptized, unless the contrary appear on the face thereof.

5. Proviso for settlements of children born in union workhouses, &c. or under warrants of removal.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That if any child have been born in the workhouse of any union, such child shall be deemed to have been born in the parish to which the mother of such child was, at the time of the birth, chargeable; and if any child have been born in any house licensed for the reception of pregnant women, or in any hospital for the reception and cure of persons suffering from disease or bodily injury, or in any county lunatic asylum, or in any house licensed for the reception of insane persons, or in any prison, if the mother of such child were not, before her admission into such house, hospital, asylum, or prison, respectively, resident in the parish in which such birth occurred, such mother not being settled in that parish, such child shall not, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to have been born therein; and if any child have been born in any parish while his mother was under any warrant of removal, not executed at the time of the birth, nor afterwards abandoned or quashed, such child shall not, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to have been born in such parish.

6. No other mode of settlement.—And be it enacted, That no person shall be deemed to be settled in any parish in any other than one of the several manners herein provided.

7. Declaration that persons are to be relieved at the charge of the parish where they are destitute, until removal or lawful cessation of their destitution.—And be it declared and enacted, That the overseers and guardians of every parish and the guardians of every union shall take order for the relief, according to the laws in force for the time being, of every poor person destitute therein, but not settled therein, in like manner as if he were settled therein, until he is lawfully removed therefrom, or until he ceases by other lawful means to be destitute therein.

8. Person chargeable to a parish in which he is not settled, liable to be removed to the parish of his settlement. Salvo.—And be it enacted, That every person who has become chargeable to any parish in which he is not settled, shall be liable to be removed therefrom to any parish in which he is settled, subject to the provisions next hereinafter made; (that is to say),

1. For married women not to be removed from their husbands' parish.—Every woman during her marriage shall be liable to be removed to the parish in which her husband is deemed to be settled, if the same can be ascertained, and shall not be liable to be removed from such parish, or from her husband.

2. For legitimate children not to be removed from father's parish.—And every legitimate child under the age of sixteen years, whose father is living, shall be liable to be removed to the parish in which his father is settled, if the same can be ascertained, and shall not, while resident anywhere with his father, be liable to be removed from him.

3. For legitimate and bastard children not to be removed from their mothers.—And every child, under the age of sixteen years, being legitimate, whose father is dead and whose mother is living, or being a bastard, whose mother is living, shall be liable to be removed to the parish to which his mother would, if chargeable, be liable to be removed, and shall not, while resident anywhere with his mother, be liable to be removed from her.

4. For widows and their families not to be removed for one year after the husband's death.—And no widow who at the time of her husband's death was residing with him, nor the children of such widow, whether legitimate or bastard, under the age of sixteen years, shall be liable to be removed from the parish where she was so residing until the expiration of one year after her husband's death.

5. For widows not to be removed from the place of their husbands' settlement and death.—And no widow, who at the time of her husband's death was residing with him in the parish in which he was settled, shall be liable to be removed therefrom.

6. For persons chargeable through sickness, not to be removed until relieved forty days.—And no person who becomes chargeable to any parish on account of sickness or accident, shall be liable to be placed under a warrant of removal until he has received relief bonâ fide for the space of forty days, without any interval of more than seven consecutive days.

7. For labourers, &c. resident five years not to be removable.—And no person who has resided the five years last preceding in any parish, and has ordinarily maintained himself in or near thereto as a labourer, artificer, mechanic, servant, or tradesman, and has not been convicted of felony or misdemeanor, and has not during such five years been removed from such parish under a warrant of removal, shall be liable to be removed; but no residence in any prison, barrack, lunatic asylum, or public hospital, or while receiving relief, shall be considered either as an interruption or as a portion of such five years.

9. Persons only to be removed to the parish where settled. Exceptions.—And be it declared and enacted, That no person, except such as is hereby made liable to be removed to the parish of the husband's or father's or stepfather's settlement, and except persons born in Scotland, Ireland, the Isles of Man, Scilly, Jersey, or Guernsey, and their families, shall be removed to any parish other than the parish in which such person is, under the provisions of this Act, deemed to be settled.

10. Amicable removal.—And be it enacted, That if the overseers of any parish by writing under the hands of any two or more of them, signed in the presence of any justice of the peace, and certified under his hand to be so signed, admit that any person is settled in such parish, or is liable to be removed thereto, and thereby agree to receive such person, such person shall be deemed to be settled in such parish, or removable thereto accordingly.

11. Summons and examination of persons liable to be removed; warrant of removal. Proviso for examination of infirm persons and prisoners.—And be it enacted, That if the overseers of any parish shall complain to any one justice of the peace for the county, borough, or place in which such parish is situate, that any person is liable to be removed from such parish, such justice may summon such person to come before any two justices of the peace of such county, borough, or place, at a time and place to be named in such summons; and at such time and place any two justices of the peace of such county, borough, or place, may hear and examine into the matter of such complaint, and if they see fit, they may make and issue a warrant, under their hands and seals, to remove such person to the parish in which he is deemed to be settled, or to which he is liable to be removed: provided always, that if any such person be by reason of age, illness, or infirmity unable to be brought up before such two justices, or if the husband, or father, mother, or stepfather of any person liable to be removed, be a prisoner in any gaol or house of correction, or in the custody of any constable or peace officer, under or by virtue of any warrant of commitment, then any one justice of the peace may take the examination of such person, husband, father, mother, or stepfather, where he or she may be, in writing, touching his or her settlement; and such examination, signed by such justice, shall be received and admitted as evidence of the facts therein stated, in the same manner and to the same extent as if the same facts were orally deposed to, before any two justices empowered to inquire into such settlement, who may thereupon make and issue their warrant of removal as effectually as if such person, husband, father, mother, or stepfather had appeared and been examined before such two justices.

12. Persons not to be removed under warrant till after forty days' notice; unless the removal be submitted to. In case of appeal, pauper not to be removed while it is pending.—And be it enacted, That where any person has been directed by warrant of justices to be removed from any parish, if the overseers of such parish within seven days after the making of such warrant send notice, by post or otherwise, to the overseers of the parish to which such person is to be removed, that such person has become chargeable, and also within the said seven days send to the overseers last mentioned a copy or counterpart of such warrant of removal, and a statement of the grounds upon which the same was made, the overseers of the parish to which such person is so chargeable may, after the expiration of forty days after the sending of such notice and copies or counterparts, remove such person, but not otherwise: provided always, that if the overseers of the parish to which such person is to be removed agree, by writing under their hands, to receive such person before the expiration of such forty days, the overseers of the parish from which such person is to be removed may remove such person, although such forty days have not expired: provided also, that if notice of appeal against the warrant for the removal of such person be received by the overseers of the parish on whose behalf such warrant was obtained, they shall not remove such person until after the time for prosecuting such appeal has expired, or if such appeal be prosecuted, until the final determination thereof.

13.—Overseers, or persons employed by them, may execute the warrant of removal.—And be it enacted, That such overseers may employ any proper person to carry, remove, and deliver any pauper directed by such warrant to be removed, and that the delivery by such person of any such pauper shall be as good, valid, and effectual, to all purposes whatsoever, as if such pauper were delivered by any overseer.

14. Penalty for procuring removals of poor persons without warrants of justices.—And be it enacted, That if any officer of any parish or union do for the purpose and with the intent of causing any poor person to become chargeable to any other parish or union to which such person was not before chargeable, convey any poor person out of such parish or union, or cause or procure any poor person to be so conveyed, or give directly or indirectly any money or other relief or assistance, or afford or procure to be afforded any facility for such conveyance, or make any offer or promise, or use any threat to induce any poor person to depart from such parish or union, and if, in consequence of such conveyance or departure, any poor person become forthwith chargeable to any other parish or union, to which such poor person is not at the time removable under a warrant of removal, or admission of settlement in writing as aforesaid, such officer, on conviction thereof before any two justices (either of the place from whence such poor person has been conveyed, or had departed as aforesaid, or of the place where such poor person has so become chargeable) shall forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding five pounds, nor less than forty shillings.

15. Delivery of paupers under orders of removal.—And be it enacted, That the delivery of any pauper under any warrant of removal to any officer of the workhouse of any parish, or of any union in which such parish is comprised, at such workhouse, shall be deemed to be a delivery of such pauper to the overseers of the said parish.

16. Suspension of execution of warrants of removal. Recovery of expenses incurred by such suspension. Appeal given where such charges exceed ten pounds. Award of costs.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That where any warrant has been made for the removal of any person, if it appear to the justices who made such warrant, or to any other two justices of the same county or jurisdiction, that such person is unable to travel, by reason of sickness or other infirmity, or that it would be dangerous for him to do so, such justices shall suspend the execution of such warrant, as well with respect to such person as with respect to every other person thereby directed to be removed, until the same may be executed without danger to any person who is the subject thereof, and shall indorse such suspension on the said warrant of removal, and shall sign the same; and when such justices, or any other two justices of the same county or jurisdiction, are satisfied that such warrant may be executed without danger to any person who is the subject thereof, such justices shall direct such warrant to be executed, and shall indorse such direction on the said warrant of removal, and shall sign the same; and if it be proved on oath before such last-mentioned justices that any expenses of relief or maintenance, other than of medical relief, have been incurred by such suspension, such justices may order the overseers of the parish to which such person is directed to be removed, to pay such expenses of relief and maintenance, other than of medical relief; and if the overseers of the parish in whose behalf such warrant was made have, within seven days after such suspension, sent, by post or otherwise, to the overseers of the parish to which such person is directed to be removed notice of such warrant of removal, and of the suspension thereof, and have also within such seven days sent to the overseers last mentioned a copy or counterpart of such warrant and suspension, and a statement of the grounds upon which such warrant was made, and if such person be afterwards removed under such warrant, or if such person die before the execution of such warrant, then the overseers of such last-named parish shall pay such expenses; and if they refuse or neglect to pay the same within three days after the demand thereof, and if they do not within such three days give notice of appeal against the order to pay such expenses, then the overseers of the parish on whose behalf such warrant was made may recover such expenses, together with cost of recovering the same, in the same manner as penalties and forfeitures; and when the sum so ordered to be paid on account of such charges exceeds the sum of ten pounds, if the overseers of the parish ordered to pay the same think such parish aggrieved thereby, and if, within three days after demand made of payment under such order, they give notice to the overseers of the parish on whose behalf such order was made, of their intention to appeal against the same, then the overseers of the parish ordered to pay such sum may appeal to the General or Quarter Sessions of the Peace, held next after the expiration of fourteen days from the giving of such notice, for the county, city, borough, or place wherein the parish on whose behalf such order was made doth lie; and if such Court be of opinion that the sum so ordered is more than of right ought to have been paid, such Court shall strike out the sum contained in the order, and insert therein the sum which in the judgment of such Court ought to be paid; and upon such appeal before such Court, or upon proof made before such Court that notice of such appeal has been given, although such appeal has not been prosecuted, such Court shall award to the party in whose favour such appeal is determined, or to whom such notice was given, such costs and charges in the law as such Court in their discretion think just and reasonable, to be paid by the party against whom such appeal is determined, or by whom such notice was given; and the party to whom such costs and charges are awarded may recover the sum inserted in such order by such Court as aforesaid, and the costs and charges awarded by such Court as aforesaid, in the same manner as penalties and forfeitures: provided always, that if in any case it appear to the justices ordering payment of such costs and charges, or to the Court of Quarter Sessions on appeal against such order, that the removal of any such person was negligently or improperly delayed after he was in a fit state to be removed, such justices or such Court may reduce the amount of the costs and charges so to be paid, as to them may seem fit.

17. Overseers may abandon a warrant of removal, paying the other parties' costs.—And be it enacted, That in any case in which a warrant has been made for the removal of any person from any parish, and notice thereof sent as aforesaid, if at any time after such notice, whether notice of appeal against such warrant have or have not been then given, the overseers of such parish give notice in writing under the hands of any two or more of them to the overseers of the parish to which such person is directed to be removed, that they abandon such warrant, then such warrant, and all proceedings consequent thereon, shall become and be null and void to all intents and purposes, as if the same had not been made; and shall not be given in evidence in case any warrant be afterwards obtained for the removal of any person who may have been affected by such first-mentioned warrant; and the overseers abandoning such warrant shall pay to the overseers of the parish to which the removal was thereby directed to be made, the costs incurred by such last-mentioned overseers, by reason of such warrant, and of all subsequent proceedings thereon; and if such last-mentioned overseers apply to the proper officer of the court before whom any appeal against such warrant, if it had not been abandoned, might have been brought, and if they produce to him the notice of such abandonment, and if they satisfy him that such reasonable notice of taxation has been given to the overseers abandoning such warrant as in his judgment the distance between the parishes requires, such officer shall tax such costs; and may thereupon charge and receive the usual costs of taxation; and shall indorse the sum allowed by him as costs, and the amount of the said costs of taxation upon the notice of abandonment; and if such costs, being lawfully demanded, be not paid within ten days after taxation, the overseers entitled to the same may recover them as penalties and forfeitures.

18. Duplicate of warrant of removal, &c. to be transmitted to the clerk of the peace, who is to preserve the same.—And be it enacted, that the clerk to the justices, or, if there be no such clerk, then one of the justices who have made any warrant of removal, shall transmit within days from the making of such warrant a duplicate of such warrant, and also all the original depositions upon which such warrant was made to the clerk of the peace for the county, borough, or place of which the said justices are justices, and that such duplicate and depositions shall thenceforward be kept by said clerk of the peace.

19. Clerk of the peace to furnish copies.—And be it enacted, That if the overseers of the parish to which any person is by such warrant ordered to be removed, do, by writing delivered to such clerk of the peace, require such clerk of the peace to furnish them with a copy of such duplicate and depositions, or either, such clerk of the peace shall, within a reasonable time after the delivery to him of such written requisition, furnish a copy of such duplicate or depositions, as the case may be, on being paid therefore at the rate of

20. Overseers of the parish aggrieved by warrant of removal may appeal.—And be it enacted, That if the overseers of the parish to which any person is by any warrant directed to be removed as aforesaid, consider such parish to be aggrieved thereby; and if within twenty-one days after they have received the statement of the grounds upon which the same was made, and the copy or counterpart of the warrant, such overseers give to the overseers of the parish on whose behalf such warrant was obtained, notice in writing, under the hands of any two or more of them, of their intention to appeal against such warrant, together with a statement in writing, under the hands of any two or more of them, of the grounds of such appeal, the said overseers of the parish to which such person is directed to be removed may appeal to the General or Quarter Sessions of the Peace to be held for the county, city, borough, or place wherein the parish on whose behalf such order was obtained, or any part thereof, doth lie.

21. Overseers of the parish aggrieved by warrant of removal may have access to the pauper touching his settlement or liability to removal.—And be it enacted, That the overseers giving such notice of appeal, or their attorney, or any other person authorized by them, may, until such appeal is heard and decided, at all proper times have free access to the person directed to be removed, for the purpose of examining him touching his settlement or liability to be removed; and if it be necessary for the more effectual examination of such person, that he should be taken out of the parish in whose behalf the warrant was obtained, such overseers may remove him therefrom for the time which may be necessary for that purpose; and in such case the said overseers shall defray the expense of such removal, and of the maintenance of such person during the same.

22. Quarter Sessions to hear appeal; no grounds to be gone into, but those set forth in the respondents' and appellants' statements.—And be it enacted, That the justices of the peace at the General or Quarter Sessions of the county, borough, or place wherein the parish is situate from which the warrant appealed against has directed the removal to be made, held next after the expiration of fourteen days from the day on which the notice of appeal was given, shall hear and determine such appeal upon the grounds set forth respectively in the respondents' statement of the grounds of the warrant of removal, and in the appellants' statement of the grounds of their appeal; and neither the respondents nor appellants shall, on the hearing of such appeal, go into, or give evidence of, or be heard upon, any other grounds of removal or of appeal than those set forth in their respective statements as aforesaid.

23. On trial of appeal, the duplicate of warrant and the depositions transmitted to the clerk of the peace, may be referred to for certain purposes.—And be it enacted, That upon the trial of any appeal against any such warrant of removal, the Court trying such appeal, or either party, shall be at liberty to refer to the said duplicate and depositions so transmitted as aforesaid to the clerk of the peace; but such depositions shall not be considered as furnishing evidence of the facts therein deposed to, except only for the purpose of shewing that the person or persons making such depositions has or have made the statements therein contained, and except only where evidence of the fact of such statements having been made is by law admissible; provided nevertheless, that where any party who has made such depositions is dead at the time of trying the appeals, the deposition of such party shall be admissible at such trial as evidence of the facts therein stated, in the same way and to the same extent as such statement would have been admissible at such trial if then orally deposed to by such person: provided nevertheless, that on the trial of any such appeal no warrant of removal shall be quashed or set aside, either wholly or in part, on the ground that such depositions do not furnish sufficient evidence to support, or that any matter therein contained raises an objection to, the warrant or the statement of the grounds of removal, except when such objection to the warrant or statement arises upon depositions given in evidence, in consequence of the death of the party making such depositions, and in that case such objection shall have the same weight and effect as if it were raised by the oral evidence of such party.

24. Costs to be awarded.—And be it enacted, That upon any appeal against any warrant of removal being heard before any Court of General or Quarter Sessions, or upon proof before any such Court, of notice of such appeal having been given, though such appeal were not afterwards prosecuted, such Court shall order either party to pay to the other such costs and charges as they consider just and reasonable, and shall certify the amount thereof; and if either of the parties have included in their respective statements, any grounds of removal or of appeal which, in the opinion of the Court determining such appeal, are frivolous or vexatious, such Court may, at their discretion, direct such party to pay the whole or any part of the costs incurred by the other party in disputing any such grounds, and shall certify the amount thereof; and if the amount so certified in any of the cases aforesaid be demanded of the overseers liable to pay the same, and if such certificate thereof be produced to them, and if they refuse or neglect to pay the same, the overseers entitled thereto may recover the same as penalties and forfeitures.

25. Costs may be taxed by the proper officer at any time, although the Court be not sitting.—And be it enacted, That where, either by this Act or any preceding Acts, costs are incidental to any warrant of removal, or any appeal therefrom, or any proceedings touching the same, such costs may be taxed by the proper officer in that behalf at any time; and such taxation, when duly made in other respects, shall be valid and effectual, whether or not the court to which such officer belongs be sitting at the time of the taxation, in the same manner as if such court were actually sitting at the time of the taxation.

26. Costs of relief of persons under warrant of removal to be repaid.—And be it enacted, That where a warrant has been made for the removal of any person from any parish, and the liability of such person to be removed under such warrant has been admitted by submission to the warrant, or adjudged upon appeal, the overseers of such parish may recover from the overseers of the parish to which such person was by such warrant directed to be removed, the charges and expenses of his relief and maintenance lawfully incurred from the time when notice was sent that he had become chargeable, until the time when he might lawfully have been removed; and if the same be not paid within three days after a demand thereof, the overseers entitled thereto may recover the same in the same manner as penalties and forfeitures: provided always, that no charges or expenses of relief or maintenance incurred by reason of the suspension of any such warrant shall be recoverable, except upon the conditions hereinbefore prescribed.

27. Notices of removal may be served by post.—And be it enacted, That every notice of any poor person being chargeable, and every copy or counterpart or notice of any warrant (whether suspended or otherwise) for the removal of any poor person, and every statement of the grounds upon which any such warrant is made, and every agreement in writing to receive a person under a warrant of removal, and every notice of appeal against any such warrant, and every notice containing the grounds of any such appeal, and every notice of the abandonment of such warrant, and every bill or demand of costs incurred under or by reason of any such warrant, and every notice of appeal against any order for payment of costs incurred by reason of the suspension of any warrant of removal, shall be held to have been properly served or delivered, if it be proved that the same was properly addressed to the parties entitled to receive the same, and endorsed on the outside of the letter or packet with the name of the document as it is above described, and put into the post-office, and registered according to any regulations in force at the time, under the authority of her Majesty's Postmaster-General, seven days at the least before the time when the same is required to be served or delivered, unless the party to be affected by such notice or other document prove that the same has not been duly received; and if any person make oath that he so put such letter or packet into the post-office, and if he produce a receipt for the same, purporting to be signed by the Postmaster or other person authorized to register letters, and state upon oath to the satisfaction of the Court before which he produces the receipt, the circumstances under which and the person from whom he received the receipt, the posting and registering of such letter or packet shall be deemed to be sufficiently proved.

28. Provision for removal of natives of Scotland, Ireland, and the Isles of Man, Scilly, Jersey, and Guernsey.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That if any person born in Scotland or Ireland, or in the Isle of Man, or Scilly, or Jersey, or Guernsey, not deemed to be settled in England, nor being temporarily or permanently exempted from the liability to be removed under the provisions of this Act, become chargeable, by himself, herself, or any of his or her family, to any parish in England, such person, his wife, and any of his or her children so chargeable shall be liable to be removed therefrom to Scotland, Ireland, the Isle of Man, Scilly, Jersey, or Guernsey, respectively, according as he or she may belong thereto; and if the overseers of such parish complain thereof to any one justice of the peace, such justice may summon such person to come before any two justices of the peace, at any time and place to be named in the summons; and at such time and place any two justices may hear and examine into the matter of such complaint, and if they see fit they may make and issue a warrant under their hands and seals, in the form in the schedule hereunto annexed, to remove such person forthwith, at the expense of such parish in the first instance.

29. Justices in Quarter Sessions to make new regulations for removal of Scottish and Irish poor, &c. to their respective places of birth or residence.—And be it enacted, That the justices of the peace of every county, city, borough, or place shall at their General or Quarter Sessions of the Peace to be holden next after the passing of this Act, or some adjournment thereof, and from time to time thereafter, as they may see occasion, make regulations for the more effectually carrying into effect the provisions of this Act for the removal of such persons, their wives and children, whether by land or sea, or part of the way by land and part by sea; and as regards persons born in Scotland or Ireland, and their families, such justices shall, in such regulations, provide, as far as may be, for the removing of such persons to parts or places nearest to the respective places where such persons were born or have resided; and such regulations, when approved by the Poor Law Commissioners, shall be observed and carried into effect by all justices of the peace, overseers, constables, and other persons charged with or concerned in such removal into such respective county, city, borough, or place; and when any such regulations have been so approved, all rules, orders, regulations, and directions heretofore made for the removal of persons born in Scotland, Ireland, or the Isles of Man, Scilly, Jersey, or Guernsey, shall cease to have effect.

30. Expenses of parishes to be repaid out of county rates.—And be it enacted, That in case the overseers of the parish on whose complaint such last-mentioned warrant of removal was made, bring or send to the clerk of the peace, or town clerk of the county, city, borough, or place in which such parish is situate, such warrant of removal, accompanied with an affidavit sworn before some justice of the peace of such county, city, borough, or place (who is hereby authorized to administer the same), of the amount of the expenses bonâ fide incurred and paid by such overseers on account of such removal, and also a statement of the several items comprised in such amount, such justice of the peace or town clerk shall lay the same before the justices of the peace, assembled at the Quarter Sessions, or adjournment thereof, holden for such county, city, borough, or place next after he has received the same; and the said justices, so assembled as aforesaid, shall, if the regulations in force in regard to such removal have been duly complied with, order the amount of such expenses to be paid out of the county rate raised in such county, city, borough, or place.

31. How such expenses are to be defrayed within London.—And be it enacted, That all such expenses as last aforesaid properly and reasonably made out of the rates of any parish within the city of London, shall be charged against the said city of London; and when the justices of the said city of London assembled at any Quarter Sessions or adjourned session have audited and allowed such expenses, the Chamberlain of the said city of London shall repay such expenses to the overseers of the said parish; and the justices of the said city of London shall, at such times as they may think fit, order a rate to be made in the several wards of the said city for the repayment of such expenses, and thereupon such rate shall be made in the same manner and with the same powers and authorities as the rates made for the relief of the poor in such parishes.

32. How such expenses are to be defrayed by cities, &c. not contributing to county rate.—And be it enacted, That in any city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty which does not contribute to the county rate, or in which no county rate, or rate in the nature of a county rate, is raised, but comprises more than one parish, the justices of the peace for such city, borough, town corporate, division, or liberty, assembled at any Quarter or adjourned Sessions of the Peace shall order a general rate to be made in the parishes within such city, borough, town corporate, division or liberty, at such time as such justices think fit, for the repayment of the expenses incurred for the removal of persons born in Scotland, Ireland, or the islands of Man, Scilly, Jersey, or Guernsey, and their families as aforesaid; and thereupon such rate shall be made in each of such parishes in the same manner and with the same powers and authorities as the rates made for the relief of the poor in such parishes.

33. Appeals against such removals may be lodged at the instance of boards of guardians in Ireland, and of kirk session, heritors, or borough magistrates in Scotland.—And be it enacted, That if any board of guardians of any union in Ireland, or the heritors and kirk session, or borough magistrates in Scotland, think themselves aggrieved by any removal of any poor person under the provisions of the said Act; and if they forward to the Poor Law Commissioners a statement of the case, and of any grounds for concluding that such poor person is to be deemed to be settled in any parish in England, or was liable to be removed to any parish in England, or was not in law liable to be removed from the parish from which he was in fact removed; and if they, or any persons on their behalf, give good security, in England, to the said commissioners, for the payment of all costs which may be incurred in any appeal against the warrant for the removal of such poor person, such commissioners, if satisfied that it will be expedient so to do, may appeal, on behalf of the persons so aggrieved, to the justices of the peace at any Quarter Sessions holden for the county, city, borough, or place from which such removal was made, held at any time within six calendar months after such removal was completed; and such Court shall proceed therein as in any case of appeal against a warrant of removal under this Act; and if the warrant of removal is reversed by such Court, the overseers of the parish on whose behalf the same was obtained shall pay the necessary expenses and charges of conveying the poor person removed under the same back to such parish; and if they refuse or neglect to pay the same within three days after demand thereof, the persons on whose behalf such appeal was brought, or any person authorized by them, may recover the same as penalties and forfeitures; provided always, that the overseers of the parish in whose behalf such warrant was obtained may at any time after such appeal give notice in writing, under the hands of any two or more of them, to the said commissioners, and to the persons on whose behalf such appeal was brought, that they abandon such warrant; and if they thereupon pay to such persons or to any person authorized by them, the expenses incurred by such persons by reason of such warrant, and in any proceedings consequent thereon, and the necessary expenses and charges of conveying the person removed under the same back to such parish, such appeal shall be no further prosecuted.

34. Boards of guardians may apply for warrants of removal in certain cases.—And be it enacted, That if any person be liable to be removed from any parish under a board of guardians, or from any union, or from any parish in a union, it shall be lawful for justices of the peace to make a warrant for the removal of such person upon the complaint of the board of guardians of such parish or union, in like manner as such justices might do upon the complaint of the overseers of the parish to which such person may be chargeable; and such board of guardians shall have the like powers as overseers for the removal of such person.

35. Appointment of a paid removing officer.—And be it enacted, That the provisions of the said Act of the fifth year of the reign of King William the Fourth, intituled, "An Act for the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales," relating to the appointment of paid officers, their duties, payment, continuance in office and removal, shall extend and apply to the appointment of paid officers for the purpose of obtaining and executing warrants of removal, and the duties incident thereto or consequent thereupon.

36. The Poor Law Amendment Act and this Act to be construed as one Act.—And be it enacted, That the said Act of the fifth year of the reign of King William the Fourth, "For the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales," and all Acts to amend and extend the same, and the present Act, except so far as the provisions of any former Act are altered, amended, or repealed by any subsequent Act, shall be construed as one Act.

37. Act limited to England and Wales, except so far as relates to persons born in Scotland, &c.—And be it enacted, That this Act shall apply so far as the same is applicable to the removal of poor persons born in Scotland and Ireland, and the Isles of Man, Scilly, Jersey, and Guernsey, and their families; but in other respects this Act shall extend only to England.

38. Act may be amended this session.—And be it enacted, That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

CAP XXXII.

An Act to regulate the Issue of Bank Notes, and for giving to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England certain Privileges for a limited period. (July 19, 1844.)

This is the Bank Charter Act. After reciting that it is expedient to continue certain privileges of exclusive banking to the Bank of England, it is, by section 1, enacted that, after the 31st of August 1844, the Bank shall establish a separate department for the issue of notes. Sec. 2 regulates the amount of issues; sec. 3 the proportion of silver bullion to be retained Sec. 4 enacts that all persons may demand of the issue department notes for gold bullion. Sec. 5 gives power to increase securities in the issue department, and to issue additional notes. Sec. 6 requires an account to be rendered by the bank weekly. Sec. 7 exempts the notes of the Bank from stamp-duty. Sec. 8 requires the Bank to allow 180,000*l.* per annum for its privileges; and, by sec. 9, it is to allow the public the profits of increased circulation. Sec. 10 provides that, after the passing of this Act, no person other than a banker issuing notes on 6th May, 1844, shall issue bank notes: and sec. 11 imposes certain restrictions on their issue by existing banks. By sec. 12, bankers ceasing to issue notes may not afterwards resume them. Sec. 13 provides that existing banks of issue shall continue under certain limitations; and sec. 14 makes provision for united banks. Sec. 15 enacts, that a duplicate certificate be published in the Gazette, which shall be evidence; sec. 16, that, in case of the union of banks, the commissioners are to certify the amount of notes which each bank was authorized to issue. Sec. 17 imposes a penalty upon banks issuing in excess. Sec. 18 enacts that banks of issue are to render an account weekly of their issues. Sec. 19 provides a mode of ascertaining the average amount of bank notes for each banker in circulation during the first four weeks after 10th Oct. 1844. By sec. 20, commissioners of stamps and taxes are empowered to cause the books of bankers, containing accounts of their notes in circulation, to be inspected, and imposes a penalty of 100*l.* on refusal to permit them to do so. Sec. 21 requires all bankers to return their names once a year to the stamp-office; and sec. 22, that bankers shall take out a separate license for every place at which they issue notes or bills, with a proviso in favour of bankers who had four such licenses in force on the 6th May, 1844. Sec. 23 gives compensation to certain bankers, named in the schedule, who have ceased to issue notes, by agreement with the Bank of England. Sec. 24 gives to the Bank of England power to compound with issuing banks; sec. 25, such composition to cease on 1st August, 1856. Sec. 26 gives to joint-stock and other banks, within sixty-five miles of London, to accept, &c. bills. Sec. 27, the Bank to enjoy the privileges conferred by the Act subject to redemption.

CAP. XXXIII.

An Act for facilitating the Collection of County Rates, and for relieving High Constables from attendance at Quarter Sessions in certain Cases, and from certain other Duties. (19 July, 1844.)

We give this statute entire:—

1. Justices of the peace shall send precepts directly to guardians of unions for the payment of county rates, &c. Guardians to pay such rates. County treasurer to receive the same.—Whereas the constitution of boards of guardians for parishes and unions of parishes for the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor in England, together with the appointment of treasurers holding funds contributed by such parishes, affords great facility for the collection of county rates, hundred rates, police rates, and other like rates authorized to be levied in counties or parts of counties; and it is expedient to relieve high constables from the duties of collecting and paying to the county treasurer the said rates, and from attending at the quarter sessions of the peace of their several counties in certain cases, and from the performance of certain other duties at present by law imposed on them: Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That from and after the first day of October in this present year, so soon as any vacancy occurs in the office of high constable of any hundred, by the expiration of his appointment, or otherwise, then, as often as the justices of the peace within the respective limits of their commissions in England have made a county rate or a police rate, or any other rate which may by law be raised in like manner as county rates, or any two or more such rates, such justices assembled at their general or quarter sessions, or at any adjournment thereof, shall order precepts in the form shewn in the schedule annexed to this Act, or as near thereto as may be, to be issued to the guardians of every union of parishes, of which union any parish is situate within such limits, stating the sum or sums assessed and charged for each such rate, on each parish in the union, the whole of which parish is situate within such limits, and to the guardians of every single parish situate within such limits, stating the sum or sums assessed and charged on such parish for each such rate, and requiring the guardians of such union or parish respectively, within such time as may be limited in such precepts, to cause the aggregate of the said several sums so stated to be paid by them, out of the moneys held by them on behalf of each such parish, to the treasurer of the county or place for which such justices act, and may cause such precepts to be sent by post, or otherwise, to such guardians; and such precepts shall have force in every such union so far as concerns such parishes as are within the limits of the commission of the said justices, notwithstanding that the place of meeting of such guardians may not be situated within such limits, and without being indorsed with the signature of any justice of the peace having ordinary jurisdiction in the place of meeting of the guardians; and such guardians shall raise the moneys required by such precepts to be paid in like manner as the money required by such guardians for the relief of the poor, and shall pay such moneys at the time limited and in the manner prescribed by such precepts; and

If the treasurer of such guardians, or any person on his or their behalf, tender to the treasurer of the county or place for which such justices act, the aggregate of the said several sums, or if he so tender the whole sum assessed on any such parish or parishes in respect of any such rate or rates, together with a copy of such precept in which are specified the parish or parishes, and the rate or rates, in respect of which the same is so tendered, the treasurer of the county shall receive the sum so tendered, notwithstanding that the sums required to be paid on behalf of other of such parishes or of other of such rates be not then tendered, and shall give a receipt for the sum or sums received by him accordingly, but he shall not receive any sum on behalf of any such parish less than the whole of the sum assessed and charged thereon in respect of one such rate; and the receipt of the treasurer of such county or place shall be a good discharge for the payment of the sums specified in any such precept or of any of them.

2. If the guardians fail to pay such rates, the justices may issue warrants to the overseers of parishes, &c. to pay the same.—And be it enacted, That in case guardians do not pay within the time limited in such precept the sum or sums of money therein required to be paid on behalf of any parish, the said justices assembled as aforesaid may cause to be issued and sent, by post or otherwise, to the overseers of the poor of such parish, or to the petty constable or peace officer, or other person or persons empowered in any place to rate and levy the moneys assessed as such county, police, or other rate, warrants to collect and pay to the treasurer of the county or place in which such justices act, within a time to be named and limited in such warrants, the rate or rates charged on such parish or place respectively, together with an addition to such rate or rates in the proportion of one shilling to every ten; and such additional sum shall be applied and disposed of in like manner as the county rate; and such overseers of the poor, petty constables, peace officers, or other persons, may reimburse themselves, as well for such additional sums as for the original amount of rate or rates, out of the moneys which they are respectively empowered to rate and levy for the purpose of such county, police, or other rate, but shall not receive or take from the county rate, or any other rate, any allowance or compensation for their trouble or expenses incurred in collecting, levying, or paying such county, police, or other rate.

3. If the overseers, &c. fail to pay, the justices may levy the rate by distress and sale.—And be it enacted, That if any overseer, petty constable, peace officer, or other person as aforesaid refuse, make default, or neglect to pay to the treasurer of the county or place, within the time limited as aforesaid, the sum or sums of money specified in the said warrants, and if the clerk of the peace or treasurer of the county or place make complaint thereof, then any justice of the peace of such county or place may by warrant under his hand levy the same by distress and sale of the goods of the offender; and the justices assembled as aforesaid may pay to any clerk, constable, messenger, or other person who may have been employed in making such complaint, or in obtaining, drawing, or executing such warrant, such reasonable compensation out of the county stock as to the said justices may seem fit.

4. Parishes not in arrear with contributions to be reimbursed by those which are in arrear.—And be it enacted, That in every case where any parish comprised in a union has, on or before the day on which any precept as aforesaid should be obeyed, contributed money sufficient to enable the guardians of the union to pay any sum or sums required by such precept in respect of such parish, as well as to provide for the immediate relief of the poor of such parish, and to satisfy all other obligations of the said guardians in respect of such parish in force on that day, and where, through the default of any other parish or parishes in the same union in contributing money to such guardians, or through the neglect of such guardians to demand sufficient contributions from any other parish or parishes in the same union, the said guardians have applied the money of such first-mentioned parish to the use of such other parish or parishes, and are thereby rendered unable to pay any money so required by such precept on behalf of such first-mentioned parish, and such parish is by reason thereof compelled to pay the additional sum of one shilling in every ten as hereinbefore provided, in every such case the guardians of the union shall reimburse such first-mentioned parish such additional sum, and all costs incurred by reason of the premises, out of the moneys of such other parish or parishes which may next thereafter come into the hands of such guardians; and in case more than one parish be in default as aforesaid the said guardians shall charge such additional sum and costs to every such parish, in proportion to the amount of the deficiency of the contribution of each parish respectively on the day on which the said precept should have been obeyed.

5. Justices may issue precepts to the overseers of parishes, &c. not comprised in unions, or only partly, within the jurisdiction of the justices, without the intervention of the high constable.—And be it enacted, That in the case of every parish not comprised within any union, and in which the laws for the relief of the poor are not administered by a board of guardians, and in the case of every parish comprised in a union the guardians of which are not empowered to relieve the poor, and in the case of any parish comprised within a union, or in which the laws for the relief of the poor are administered by a board of guardians, of which parish a part only is situate within the limits of the commission of any justices, for which part no separate rate is levied for the relief of the poor, and in the case of every place not maintaining its own poor, but liable to the payment of county, police, or other rates as aforesaid, the justices assembled as aforesaid may, so soon as any vacancy occurs in the office of high constable as aforesaid, issue their warrant to the overseers, petty constables, peace officers, or other persons empowered by law to rate and levy county, police, or other rates in such parish, part of a parish, or place, to pay to the county treasurer, or to transmit to him in such manner as the said justices may from time to time direct, within a time limited in such warrant, the county rate, police rate, or other rate or rates as aforesaid charged on them, without the agency or intervention of any high constable, and such justices may cause such warrant to be sent by post or otherwise; and in case the said overseers, petty constable, peace officer, or other person refuse or neglect to pay any such rate within the time limited in such warrant, the same remedy may be had against them as now by law exists against overseers neglecting to pay on the warrant of the high constable.

6. Delivery of precepts, &c. by post, and evidence thereof.—And be it enacted, That whenever precepts or warrants as provided by this Act are to be sent by post, the clerk of the peace shall send every such precept or warrant by post as a registered letter, according to the regulations of the Postmaster-General in force for the time being in that behalf; and every precept or warrant delivered or tendered as a registered letter at the address of the person to whom it is addressed, whether a receipt be given for the same or not, shall be deemed to have been served on the person to whom the same was so delivered or tendered; and if delivered or tendered to the clerk or other like officer acting for any guardians, shall be deemed to have been served on the whole of such guardians; and if delivered or tendered to any one overseer of a parish, shall be deemed to have been served on the whole of the overseers of such parish.

7. Where special sessions are required to be holden, notice of the same to be sent to each justice.—And whereas it is expedient to relieve high constables from the duty of serving notices of the holding of special sessions on the justices of the peace of the division of special sessions personally; be it enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, in all cases in which special sessions are required to be holden for any division of any county or place, if notice of the intended holding of such special sessions be signed by any one justice of the peace usually acting within such division, and if a copy of such notice be sent by post a reasonable time before the day on which such sessions are to be holden, addressed to each justice of the peace resident and usually acting within such division at his residence in such division, such notice shall be deemed to have been duly given to or served on each such justice of the peace, any law or custom to the contrary notwithstanding.

8. High constable now appointed at quarter sessions to be appointed at special sessions. High constables to take only the oath for due execution of their office.—And whereas it is expedient to relieve high constables, in certain cases, from the duty of attending at the court of quarter sessions; be it enacted, That where high constables have heretofore been usually appointed at courts of quarter sessions the high constables of such places shall hereafter be appointed by such justices as may be present at the special sessions of their division held for the purpose of hearing appeals against the rates of the several parishes in such division, or at any adjournment thereof, but if the hundred or other like division of the county for which any high constable is to be appointed be not included within the limits of any one division of the county for which such special sessions are held, then the justices of the peace for the county assembled at general or quarter sessions, or any adjournment thereof, may from time to time determine the division of the special sessions at which such high constable is to be appointed, and shall cause notice of such determination to be sent by post, or otherwise, to the high constable for the time being of such hundred or other like division; and every high constable, whether appointed at a special sessions, or at an adjournment thereof, or at a court leet, or any other special court, shall, if present at the time of his being appointed, then and there take his oath for the due execution of his office, and if otherwise, he shall forthwith, on the receipt of his appointment, go before the next or some other justice of the peace for the county in which he resides, and then and there take his said oath of office, and he shall not, in virtue of his office of high constable, be required to take any other oath than the said oath for the due execution of his office.

9. Construction of certain words, "parish," "union," "guardians."—And be it enacted, That in the construction of this Act the word "parish" shall be construed to include any township, vill, or place maintaining its own poor, whether parochial or extra-parochial, or any part of a parish, township, vill, or other place for which a separate poor-rate may be made; the word "union" shall be construed to mean and include any number of parishes united under the Act passed in the fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, "for the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England," or under an Act passed in the twenty-second year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, "for the better Relief and Employment of the Poor," or under any local Act; and the word "guardians" shall mean and include any board of guardians acting under the provisions of the said Act, passed in the fifth year of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, and empowered to relieve the poor of any parish or union, and the visitors, guardians, directors, managers, acting guardians, vestrymen, or other officers in a union appointed to act in the ordering of relief of the poor from the poor-rate under any general or local Act of Parliament; and the word "hundred" shall mean and include any hundred, wapentake, ward, or other district in the nature of a hundred, by whatever name denominated.

CAP. XXXIV.

An Act to amend and continue until the First Day of September, 1861, and to the end of the then next Session of Parliament, the Law with respect to Prisons and Prison Discipline in Scotland. (July 19, 1844.)

CAP. XXXV.

An Act to suspend until the Thirty-first Day of August, 1845, the making of Lists and the Ballots and Enrolments for the Militia of the United Kingdom. (July 19, 1844.)

CAP. XXXVI.

An Act to continue until the Thirty-first Day of July, 1845, and to the end of the then Session of Parliament, certain Acts for regulating Turnpike Roads in Ireland. (July 19, 1844.)

CAP. XXXVII.

An Act to secure the Terms on which Grants are made by her Majesty out of the Parliamentary Grant for the Education of the Poor, and to explain the Act of the Fifth Year of the Reign of her present Majesty, for the Conveyance of Sites for Schools. (July 19, 1844.)

Sec. 1 Provides, that where Parliamentary aid has been given towards the building of schools, the terms and conditions of that aid shall be binding and obligatory as if they had been inserted in the conveyance of the site of the school.

Secs. 3, 4, and 5, as of general importance to the Profession, we copy verbatim.

3. Death of donor within twelve calendar months not to avoid grant. 9 Geo. 2, c. 36.—And whereas by an Act passed in the fifth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to afford further Facilities for the Conveyance and Endowment of Sites for Schools," it is enacted, that any person, being seized in fee simple, fee tail, or for life of and in any manor, or lands of freehold, copyhold, or customary tenure, may grant, convey, or enfranchise, and subject to the provisions therein mentioned, any quantity not exceeding one acre of land as a site for a school or otherwise, as therein likewise specified; and it is desirable to prevent any such grant, being of so limited an interest, from being defeated by the death of the grantor; be it enacted, That where any deed shall have been or shall be executed under the powers and for the purposes contained in the said Act, without any valuable consideration, the same shall be and continue valid, if otherwise lawful, although the donor or grantor shall die within twelve calendar months from the execution thereof.

4. Site may be granted to the minister and churchwardens.—And whereas it was provided by the said Act, that grants of land or buildings, or any interest therein, for the purposes of the education of poor persons, might be made the minister of any parish, being a corporation, and the churchwardens or chapelwardens and overseers of the poor and their successors, and it is sometimes found inexpedient or impracticable to introduce the overseers as parties to the legal estate; be it therefore enacted, That such grants may be made to the minister and churchwardens of any parish, such minister being the rector, vicar, or perpetual curate thereof, whether endowed or not, to hold to them and their successors, subject to the provisions contained in the deed of conveyance thereof for the management, direction, and inspection of the school and premises.

5. Rector, vicar, or perpetual curate may grant to the minister and churchwardens, or to the minister, churchwardens, and overseers of his parish.—And be it enacted, That if the rector, vicar, or perpetual curate of any parish shall be desirous of making a grant of any land for the purposes and under the powers of the said Act, being part of the glebe or other possessions of his benefice, and shall, with het consent of the patron of the said benefice, and of the bishop of the diocese within which the same shall be situated, grant the same to the minister and church or chapel wardens, or to the minister, church or chapel wardens, and overseers of the poor of the said parish, such grant shall be valid, and shall thenceforth enure for the purposes of the trust set forth therein, if otherwise lawful, notwithstanding such minister is the party making the grant.

Cap. XXXVIII.

An Act to amend an Act of the last Session, to consolidate and amend the Laws for the regulation of Charitable Loan Societies in Ireland. (July 19, 1844.)

Cap. XXXIX.

An Act to exempt from the Payment of Property-Tax the Dividends on certain Annuities of 3l. 10s. per Centum per Annum, payable for the Quarter of the Year ending the 10th October, 1844. (July 19, 1844.)

The purpose of this statute is to provide that in consequence of the conversion of the Three-and-a-half per Cents., no deduction for property-tax shall be made on dividends payable on the 10th October, 1844.

Cap. XL.

An Act to continue until the First Day of October 1845, and to the end of the then Session of Parliament, the Exemption of Inhabitants of Parishes, Townships, and Villages, from Liability to be rated as such, in respect of Stock in Trade or other Property, to the Relief of the Poor. (July 19, 1844.)

Cap. XLI.

An Act to continue until the First Day of August, 1845, and to the end of the then Session of Parliament, certain Turnpike Acts. (July 19, 1844.)

This is the usual statute for continuing expiring Turnpike Acts.

Cap. XLII.

An Act to continue until the First Day of October, 1845, and to the end of the then Session of Parliament, two Acts relating to the Removal of poor Persons born in Scotland and Ireland, and chargeable to Parishes in England. (July 19, 1844.)

This Act continues statutes 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 40, and 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 10.

Cap. XLIII.

An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Customs in the Isle of Man. (July 19, 1844.)

Cap. XLIV.

An Act to facilitate the disjoining or dividing of extensive or populous Parishes, and the erecting of new Parishes in that part of the United Kingdom called Scotland. (July 19, 1844.)

Cap. XLV.

An Act for the Regulation of Suits relating to Meeting-houses and other Property held for Religious purposes by Persons dissenting from the United Church of England and Ireland. (July 19, 1844.)

We give this statute entire.

1.—1 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 18; 19 Geo. 3, c. 44; 53 Geo. 3, c. 160; 6 Geo. 1 (I.); 57 Geo. 3, c. 70. Recited Acts, as well as all deeds relating to such meeting-houses, &c. to be construed as if the Acts had been in force at the time of the foundation of such meeting-houses, &c.—Whereas an Act was passed in the first session of the first year of the reign of King William and Queen Mary, intituled "An Act for Exempting their Majesties' Protestant Subjects dissenting from the Church of England from the Penalties of certain Laws:" and whereas an Act was passed in the nineteenth year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled "An Act for the further Relief of Protestant Dissenting Ministers and School-masters;" and whereas an Act was passed in the fifty-third year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled "An Act to relieve persons who impugn the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity from certain Penalties:" and whereas an Act was passed by the Parliament of Ireland in the sixth year of the reign of his Majesty King George the First, intituled "An Act for exempting the Protestant Dissenters of this Kingdom from certain Penalties to which they are now subject:" and whereas an Act was passed in the fifty-seventh year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled "An Act to relieve Persons impugning the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity from certain Penalties in Ireland:" and whereas prior to the passing of the said recited Acts respectively, as well as subsequently thereto, certain meeting-houses for the worship of God, and Sunday or day schools (not being grammar schools), and other charitable foundations, were founded or used in England and Wales and Ireland respectively for purposes beneficial to persons dissenting from the Church of England and the Church of Ireland and the United Church of England and Ireland respectively, which were unlawful prior to the passing of those Acts respectively, but which by those Acts respectively were made no longer unlawful: be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That with respect to the meeting-houses, schools, and other charitable foundations so founded or used as aforesaid, and the persons holding or enjoying the benefit thereof respectively, such Acts, and all deeds or documents relating to such charitable foundations, shall be construed as if the said Acts had been in force respectively at the respective times of founding or using such meeting-houses, schools, and other charitable foundations as aforesaid.

2. The religious doctrines or opinions for the preaching or promotion of which the meeting-house may be held to be collected from twenty-five years' usage, where not expressly stated in the deed of trust.—And be it enacted, That so far as no particular religious doctrines or opinions, or mode of regulating worship, shall on the face of the will, deed, or other instrument declaring the trusts of any meeting-house for the worship of God by persons dissenting as aforesaid, either in express terms, or by reference to some book or other document as containing such doctrines or opinions or mode of regulating worship, be required to be taught or observed or be forbidden to be taught or observed therein, the usage for twenty-five years immediately preceding any suit relating to such meeting-house of the congregation frequenting the same shall be taken as conclusive evidence that such religious doctrines or opinions or mode of worship as have for such period been taught or observed in such meeting-house may properly be taught or observed in such meeting-house, and the right or title of the congregation to hold such meeting-house, together with any burial-ground, Sunday or day school, or minister's house attached thereto; and any fund for the benefit of such congregation, or of the minister or other officer of such congregation, or of the widow of any such minister, shall not be called in question on account of the doctrines or opinions or mode of worship so taught or observed in such meeting-house: Provided nevertheless, that where any such minister's house, school, or fund as aforesaid shall be given or created by any will, deed, or other instrument, which shall declare in express terms, or by such reference as aforesaid, the particular religious doctrines or opinions for the promotion of which such minister's house, school, or fund is intended, then and in every such case such minister's house, school, or fund shall be applied to the promoting of the doctrines or opinions so specified, any usage of the congregation to the contrary notwithstanding.

3. Act not to affect any judgment, &c. of a court of law or equity, and Court may give defendants the benefit of Act in suits now pending.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That nothing herein contained shall affect any judgment, order, or decree already pronounced by any court of law or equity; but that in any suit which shall be a suit of information only and not by bill, and wherein no [illegible] been pronounced, and [illegible] may be pending at the time of the passing of this Act, it shall be lawful for any defendant or defendants for whom the provisions of this Act would have afforded a valid defence if such suit had been commenced after the passing of this Act, to apply to the court wherein such suit shall be pending; and such court is hereby authorized and required, upon being satisfied, by affidavit or otherwise, that suit is so within the operation of this Act, to make such order therein as shall give such defendant or defendants the benefit of this Act; and in all cases in which any suit now pending shall be stayed or dismissed in consequence of this Act, the costs thereof shall be paid by the defendants, or out of the property in question therein, in such manner as the Court shall direct.

POST-OFFICE ESPIONAGE.

From 1799 inclusive to the end of the year 1805, a record has been preserved of the warrants issued from the Home-office, which, from the circumstance that the annual average which it exhibits agrees nearly with the annual average of the warrants issued in subsequent years, appears to the committee to be nearly a complete record; they have, however, no other mode of testing its accuracy. It was not until the period, in the year 1806, when the late Earl Spencer became Secretary of State for Home Affairs, that the practice was introduced at the Home-office of recording the issuing of every such warrant in a private book belonging, not to the head of the department, but to the office, and always accessible to the two Under-Secretaries of State and the chief clerk of the domestic department: and that practice has been continued, the committee believe, without interruption, till the present time. Still, there is no check by which to test the completeness of the entries made in that book until the close of the year 1822, from which period the original warrants themselves are preserved at the post-office, the earlier warrants having been destroyed on the removal of the post-office from Lombard-street to its present site in St. Martin's-le-Grand.

After these explanations of the authenticity of the lists which have been submitted to their consideration, they proceed to give—first, an abstract of the warrants, so far as they have been able to make up an account, from 1713 to 1798 inclusive; secondly, an abstract of the warrants for detaining and opening letters issued by the Home Department since the commencement of the year 1799 to Midsummer 1844.

Total number of persons named in the above warrants, [illegible].

This would give a little more than eight warrants, on the average, per year, and about two persons, on the average, for each warrant. Among the warrants there are eight, applied each to some particular object, but not restricted to any definite number of persons.

The above warrants classed under certain heads:—Bank of England, 13; bankruptcy, 2; murder, theft, fraud, &c. 144; treason, sedition, &c. 77; prisoners of war, 13; revenue, 5; foreign correspondence, 20; letters returned to writers, 7; address copied, 1; forged frank, 1; uncertain, 89; total, 372.

The Secretaries of State who have signed the warrants referred to in the two preceding abstracts are named in the following list, arranged in the order of date:—

1712-13. The Earl of Dartmouth.	1803. Right Hon. C. Yorke.
1713. The Right Hon. W. Bromley.	1804-6. Lord Hawkesbury, and 1807-9.
1722. Lord Visct. Townshend.	1806-7. Earl Spencer.
1730-46. Lord Harrington.	1807. Right Hon. C. W. W. Wynn.
1735-1754. Duke of Newcastle.	1809-12. The Right Hon. R. Ryder.
1749. Duke of Bedford.	1812-21. Lord Visct. Sidmouth.
1752-3. The Earl of Holderness.	1822-30. The Right Hon. Sir R. Peel.
1755. The Right Hon. Sir T. Robinson.	1822-3. Right Hon. G. Canning.
1756. The Right Hon. H. Fox.	1823. Earl Bathurst.
1763. The Earl of Halifax.	1827. Lord Visct. Goderich.
1763-7. The Right Hon. General Conway.	— Right Hon. W. S. Bourne.
1766. Duke of Richmond.	— Marq. of Lansdowne.
1766-7. The Earl of Shelburne.	1830-4. Lord Vis. Melbourne.
1770. The Earl of Sandwich.	1833-40. Lord Palmerston.
1770-4. The Earl of Rochefort.	1834. Lord Vis. Duncannon.
	— Duke of Wellington.
1776-7. Lord Vis. Weymouth.	1834-5. Right Hon. H. Goulburn.
1778. The Earl of Suffolk.	1835-9. Lord John Russell.
1782-3. The Right Hon. T. Townshend.	1838. Lord Glenelg.
1782. The Right Hon. C. J. Fox.	1839-41. The Marq. of Normanby.
1784. Marq. of Carmarthen.	1841-4. The Right Hon. Sir James Graham.
1799-1801. Duke of Portland.
1801-3. Lord Pelham.	1844. Earl of Aberdeen.

Among the warrants of the last century some few have been discovered that were issued on grounds which would now be considered highly objectionable, and would not be sanctioned by recent practice. We proceed to give some specimens of the earliest warrants.

The earliest, dated September 20, 1712, is as follows:—

To the Postmaster-General—Her Majesty is pleased to order that all letters directed to Mr. Thomas Perrin (and three others named) be sent to the commissioners of the Customs for their perusal, as is desired by the enclosed letters from Mr. Carkess. This method is taken in order to discover their effects; and you are to comply with it as far as is consistent with law and the duty of your office.

DARTMOUTH.

In 1741, at the request of A., a warrant issued, to permit A.'s eldest son to open and inspect any letters which A.'s youngest son might write to two females one of whom that youngest son had imprudently married. Two warrants in 1734 are issued, each at the instance of the creditors of a party who has absconded, it not being alleged that any positive fraud had been practised. One issued in 1735, appears to have arisen out of a political libel; another, in 1755, concerns a noted political libeller of the day, Dr. Shebbear. One, in 1746, arises out of a robbery of bank-bills, the property of the chamberlain of the city of London; all letters sent by post to Holland are to be examined; and if any letter appears to contain any of the stolen bills it is to be opened, and on suspicion of any letter containing any thing that may lead to a discovery, that letter is to be stopped, opened, and inspected. Two warrants, in 1738, and one in 1741, concern the practice, then in constant operation, of enlisting recruits in Ireland for the Irish brigade in France.

The following two general warrants, to which the committee before made allusion, were issued in the eventful year 1745:—

Secretary the Duke of Newcastle to the Postmaster-General, September 20, 1745:—To open and detain all (such) letters, packets, or papers, printed or otherwise, as shall come to the General or other post-office, suspected to contain matters of a dangerous tendency; and to transmit them to the office of the Secretary of State.

Secretary the Duke of Newcastle to the assistants of the Yarmouth and Chester roads, October, 8, 1745:—To open, inspect, and detain all such letters and packets as shall come to their offices, suspected to contain treasonable correspondence; and to transmit them to the Secretary of State.

In 1783, the following warrant was issued:—

Whitehall, 10th February, 1783.

To his Majesty's Postmasters-General.

My Lord and Sir,—I am to desire, and do hereby authorize you, to stop and open all such letters as are, or shall come to your hands addressed to Lord George Gordon, at least such as may be supposed to come from the regiment, now on their march from to the northward, and any letters from his lordship to that quarter; and to send me all the said letters as soon as possible after you shall have so stopped and opened them; and for so doing this shall be your warrant.

THOMAS TOWNSHEND,
Secretary of State for the Home Department.

To Lord Tankerville and the Right Hon. Henry Fred. Cartwright, joint Postmasters-general.

Coming to the warrants of the present century, your committee have noticed among them, issued during certain periods of the last war, some few of a very general nature. In 1800 and 1801 orders were given to the Postmaster-general to open all letters addressed to persons in France, Flanders, and Holland, and all letters addressed to Dover, supposed to contain letters addressed to France, Flanders, and Holland.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

BESIDES referring to Sir James Graham's Bill for the Amendment of the Law of Settlement, which occupies a large space in our columns to-day, we have nothing to note under this division.

POOR LAW PRACTICE.

(From the Official Circular of the Poor Law Commissioners.)

CONSTABLES' FEES,

UNDER 5 & 6 VICT. C. 109.

Feb. 7, 1844.

Clerk of the Bootle Union—Inquired, whether the fees payable to parish constables by virtue of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, were to be charged to the parish in those cases only where the parties ordered to pay costs were supposed to be unable to pay; or, whether those costs ought to be charged to the parish in the first instance, without regard to the supposed ability or inability of the parties. Referred to the opinion of Sir William Follett and Mr. Tomlinson on the above section.

Ans.—The commissioners, in construing the section in question, are guided by the opinion of Sir William Follett and Mr. Tomlinson, with which you appear to be acquainted. Although the particular point raised in your letter was not specially brought under the notice of those learned counsel when they gave that opinion, it nevertheless seems to the commissioners to be met by the general principles on which that opinion was founded. Sir William Follett and Mr. Tomlinson took this view: That the Act intended to provide for the remuneration of constables, in order to promote the general security of persons and property; and that the 17th section effected this object, by casting the charge upon the poor-rate, except only in those cases in which the county-rate would be liable for the payment under the general law. One sentence of their opinion is as follows: "No power is given to settle a scale of fees as between constables and individuals setting them in motion; and the preamble shews that the intention was, by rewarding constables, to increase the security of persons and property generally." Again: "The only exception which runs through the section is, of the duties for which the payment is by law chargeable upon the county-rate." In these remarks the commissioners see nothing to justify an inference that the question as to the liability of a private individual to pay these fees would be in any way affected by his ability to pay them.

CONVEYANCES OF PARISH PROPERTY

EXEMPT FROM STAMP-DUTY.

The commissioners have read the report of the case of the guardians of the Banbury Union against Robinson, published in the Law Journal, Vol. 12, New Series, Queen's Bench, page 327, to which the commissioners deem it right to refer boards of guardians, as leading to the conclusion that conveyances made in pursuance of orders of the commissioners, are within the exemption from stamp duty contained in the 86th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act.

COUNTY RATE,

EXPENSES OF VALUATION FOR.

March 6, 1844.

Clerk of the Neath Union—Stated that the hamlet of Coedfrank had recently been surveyed for a county valuation by order of the Quarter Sessions. The overseer necessarily attended the surveyor during twelve days, to point out the land to him, for which the overseer made a charge of 3*l.* being at the rate of 5*s.* a day. The account was allowed by the vice-chairman of the Board of Guardians, but the auditor refused to allow the item in the overseer's account, except with the commissioners' sanction.

Ans.—The commissioners are of opinion that the auditor acted quite rightly in refusing to allow the item, to which you allude in the accounts of the overseers of Coedfrank. By the 6th section of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, the justices, in General or Quarter Sessions, are empowered to employ persons to value parishes for the purpose of the county-rate, in case the overseers of such parishes fail to make the requisite returns; and the "said justices so assembled" (i. e. in General or Quarter Sessions) are further empowered to charge the expenses of such valuations on the parishes concerned, the amount thereof to be levied in the same way as the county-rate, though distinguished from it. The item alluded to in your letter does not appear to be founded on the provisions of the above-named section, but to have been charged irregularly in the overseer's accounts.

GUARDIAN,

IF APPOINTED A VALUER, INCAPABLE OF SERVING THE OFFICE OF GUARDIAN.

March 27, 1844.

Belper Union.—The commissioners having referred to a correspondence between themselves and the clerk of the Belper Union in March, 1843, relative to the appointment of a guardian as valuer to the township for which he acted as guardian, and inserted in the Official Circular, No. 27, page 119, discovered that by the insertion of the word "not" in the commissioners' answer, they were made to express an opinion which is exactly the reverse of that which they really entertain; they therefore directed a letter to be written to the clerk of the Belper Union, informing him that although there is no legal objection to the appointment of a guardian as valuer of a parish, yet they are of opinion that the compensation allowed for the performance of the valuation is such a fixed emolument from the poor-rates of the parish as renders any guardian, from the time of accepting such contract till the payment for it is completed, incapable of serving the office of guardian. (5 & 6 Vict. c. 57, s. 14.)

JUSTICES' CLERKS' FEES,

WHEN PAYABLE.

Jan. 20, 1844.

Auditor of the West Ham Union—Stated, that the assistant overseers in this union had occasionally, when the persons making default in the payment of the poor-rates were very poor, applied to a single magistrate, at his private residence, to hear informations and grant summonses against them, which the magistrate had done gratuitously; and this course had been adopted for the purpose of preventing a disproportionate expense attaching to the recovery of rates of small amount. The clerk to the petty sessions having become acquainted with this circumstance, charged his fees (three shillings) on each information and summons, which charge the auditor had disallowed in the overseer's accounts. Inquired if the justices' clerk had a right to charge his fees in these cases, seeing that the business was not done at the sessions, nor by him.

Ans.—The commissioners are disposed to concur with you in thinking that the justices' clerk, under the circumstances which you describe, is not entitled to any fee. The commissioners do not think that the justices' clerk has any such interest in his office as would entitle him to be paid at all events, whether he performed the work or not. They consider that the fees included in the table are intended to be assigned to the justices' clerks for services rendered by them; and that, consequently, when the service is not rendered by the clerk, he has no valid claim to the remuneration.

LUNATIC PAUPER,

HOW TO BE DISPOSED OF.

Feb. 7, 1844.

Clerk of the Liverpool Select Vestry—Forwarded a letter, addressed to the sitting magistrate of Liverpool, by the authorities of Jersey, stating that John Duckworth, a prisoner charged with theft, then in her Majesty's gaol there, having been declared to be labouring under monomania, with lucid intervals, the Royal Court had directed that Duckworth should be sent to his parish, Blackburn, near Liverpool, and requesting that a pass might be given to him for that purpose. The clerk stated, that Duckworth was then in the Liverpool workhouse, and inquired how the select vestry were to proceed in disposing of him.

Ans.—The commissioners, in reference to the future disposition of the pauper, stated that it appeared to them that the proper course to be pursued would be this. If there are grounds for supposing the pauper to be insane, he should be taken before justices under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, s. 38, with a view to an order being made for his confinement in some suitable asylum. Should the justices see fit to make such order, they can then proceed, under the same section, to ascertain the settlement of the pauper, and make order on the parish of the settlement to reimburse the cost of maintenance. If the justices should not be satisfied upon medical evidence of the insanity of the pauper, it will of course be for the parish of Liverpool to relieve the pauper so long as he may continue destitute, unless the authorities can procure the necessary legal evidence to remove him to Blackburn, as the place of his legal settlement.

OVERSEERS.

1. FOR AN EXTRA-PAROCHIAL PLACE.

March 9, 1844.

Clerk of the Billesdon Union—Inquired whether an extra-parochial place, not having overseers, could be compelled to appoint overseers, there being inhabitants there capable of filling that office; and, if so, what course must be adopted in the matter.

Ans.—Overseers may be appointed for an extra-parochial place, if it be a town or a vill (Rex v. Rufford, 1 Str. 512; 1 Bott. 47), but not otherwise. (Rex v. Welbeck, 1 Bott. 50.) If the extra-parochial place to which your inquiry refers is entitled to have overseers appointed for it, the justices should be applied to, to appoint; and if they refuse, the case of Rex v. Rufford shews that the Court of Queen's Bench will grant a mandamus to compel the appointment.

2. OVERSEER OF A PARISH CANNOT BE AT THE SAME TIME CHURCHWARDEN OF THE SAME PARISH.

March 7, 1844.

Mr. R. Hughes, Anglesey—Inquired, whether a person could at the same time serve the offices of churchwarden and overseer for the same parish. Also, whether an overseer of the poor had of himself the power to appoint an assistant overseer.

Ans.—On the authority of Reg. v. All Saints, Derby (13 East, 143), the appointment of the same person as churchwarden and overseer for the same parish during the same year would seem to be void; as the statute of the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, which requires the appointment of at least two persons as overseers, distinct from the churchwardens, would not in such a case be satisfied. The only authority for the appointment of an assistant overseer, with a salary payable from the poor-rates, is the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 7, which vests in the justices the power of appointing such an officer, upon the nomination of the vestry. An appointment by an overseer alone would be of no force.

3. THE RECOVERY OF PAROCHIAL MONEYS FROM AN OVERSEER IN DEFAULT.

Nov. 21, 1843.

Overseer of St. Giles, Reading—Stated that four overseers were appointed for the parish of St. Giles, Reading; three by the borough justices for that part of the parish which is within the borough, and one by the justices for that part which is without the borough, and which is called the hamlet of Whitley. The overseer appointed for the hamlet had collected the rates for that district, but had only accounted for a portion of the amount, there being, it was believed, a balance in his hands of upwards of 90*l*. This balance ought to have been paid into the general account of the overseers for the whole parish, but they had failed to obtain it, and the overseer in default had absented himself, and his goods were being removed. The overseers were in consequence unable to make out their accounts, and they did not know how to proceed. The auditor had served a notice on the overseers, requiring them to render to him an account within three days.

Ans.—As a general rule, overseers are not liable for the defalcations of their colleagues. In the case of R. v. The Justices of Essex (3 B. & Ad. 941), Lord Tenterden observed, "When there are two overseers, it may be laid down generally, that the one is not answerable for the malversation or misappropriation of the other." The principle thus laid down appears to be applicable to such a default on the part of one overseer, as has occurred in the present case. If the defaulting overseer can be found, he may be required by the auditor to account for what he has received on behalf of the parish. If another overseer be appointed in his room, under the 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, s. 3, the overseers may proceed to enforce under the 47th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act, payment of the balance which the auditor may find to be due from the defaulter.

PAUPERS

ABSCONDING WITH THE WORKHOUSE CLOTHES, &c.

Feb. 6, 1844.

Clerk of the Selby Union—Stated, that two boys had absconded from the workhouse, taking with them some school-books. They were both under the age of sixteen years. One of them had several times absconded. On one occasion of his doing so, he was taken up and tried for a larceny at the sessions; and he was thought a fit object for prosecution under 55 Geo. 3, c. 137, s. 2, for the present offence. The clerk had referred to the letter in the Official Circular, No. 27, page 128, and it seemed to him that a difficulty would arise in laying the property; for how could it be called the property of the overseers? Perhaps the clothing might be described as the property of the overseers of the township to which the boy belonged; inasmuch as the overseers were charged with the proportion of the cost of the clothing. If so described, the proceedings, he presumed, must be in the names of the overseers, and not of the guardians. The school-books would seem to be the property of the guardians, and might, he thought, be so laid. The board of guardians wished the opinion of the commissioners on the subject.

Ans.—The commissioners think that the property ought to be described in the information as belonging to the guardians of the union. It appears to the commissioners quite immaterial whether the property be that of an individual parish or of the union; in both cases it seems equally, in the sense of the statute, to belong to the guardians, their title being the same to property in their possession, whether obtained at the joint or several expense of the parishes in the union. The commissioners would further observe, that there are terms used in the 2nd section of 55 Geo. 3, c. 137, which accurately describe the guardians of unions formed under the Poor Law Amendment Act. The terms of the section are prospective, and apply not to "such guardians" only, but the reason and policy of the enactment are quite as applicable to guardians of unions as to any officers or districts for relief known at the time the Act was passed.

POOR RATES—

1. CANNOT BE APPLIED TO THE PAYMENT OF A DEBT INCURRED IN A BYGONE YEAR.

Jan. 6, 1844.

Mr. Jos. Child, Soothill Grange, Dewsbury—Stated, that in the year 1837 a new survey and valuation of the township of Soothill Grange were made under the Parochial Assessments Act. Considerable delay occurred in making the new valuation, during which time the rates were made on the old valuation. On the new valuation being completed, the valuer intimated to the overseers that he was ready to deliver the document up to them on being paid his charges, or receiving security for the amount. The overseers not being in possession of funds to discharge the valuer's claim, they could not obtain the new valuation, and a rate being required, they made it on the old valuation. However, on presenting the rate to the justices, they refused to allow it, on the ground that it ought to have been made on the new valuation. Shortly after this, the valuation was delivered to the overseers, but it was found on examination to be so incorrect, that a rate could not be made upon it in its then state. A meeting of the rate-payers was therefore called to consider what means should be adopted for raising money, until a rate could be made on the new valuation. At this meeting a resolution was passed to the effect, that the overseers, together with several rate-payers, should give security to the West Riding Union Banking Company, for the advance of such sum of money as should be necessary for the use of the township, until a rate could be made on the new valuation. From the depression of trade, the whole of the money borrowed in pursuance of this resolution had not been repaid at the time stipulated for its repayment, and a balance of 49*l*. 5*s*. 6*d*. then remained owing to the bank. Wished the commissioners' sanction for the payment of this amount out of the poor-rates.

Ans.—The commissioners are of opinion that the law settled in Tawney's case (Salk. 531, 2 Lord Raymond), clearly establishes the principle that overseers having the power to make rates for the current and prospective expenses of relieving the poor, have no authority to borrow money. The commissioners do not perceive from the statements contained in your letter, that any such impediment existed as prevented the overseers of Soothill Grange from making a rate. Notwithstanding the incorrectness of the valuation, the overseers ought to have made the best rate they could, rendering it as conformable as possible to the Parochial Assessments Act. Such a rate might have been the subject of appeal, but it might nevertheless have been collected, pending the determination of the appeals, provided the sums sought to be recovered did not exceed the amounts assessed in the last effective rate. (41 Geo. 3, c. 23, s. 2.) The commissioners, therefore, consider that the overseers were not authorized in borrowing money instead of making a rate, and that consequently they cannot charge the interest upon the poor-rates. The commissioners regret the course which has been taken in this matter; but you will perceive that the obstacle to the payment from the rates is entirely of a legal character, and is not in any way dependent upon the commissioners' sanction or disapproval.

RATING.—LIMEKILNS.

Feb. 7, 1844.

Mr. Thomas Hawkes, Williton, Somersetshire—Stated that in the parish of Luxmore, the poor-rate of which he was making, there were several lime-kilns, burning from two thousand to three thousand hogsheads of lime a year for sale for manure. The lime-works were rented with the farms, and not separately, so that their value to rent was not distinctly known. He presumed that limekilns which would let at a rent separate from a farm, whether used for the benefit of the farm to which it was attached or for general sale, was rateable for the fair rental to let.

Ans.—It appears from your statement, that the kilns in question are let not separately, but in conjunction with farms. The letting value, and consequently the rateable value, of such farms is of course increased in proportion. Any special advantage of this nature attendant upon the occupation of the land, is to be taken into account in estimating the rent which the property may be reasonably expected to fetch.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

The decision of Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque, with the concurrence of three other commissioners, as to the necessity of the attestation of an attorney, seems to have been generally approved of by the Profession, notwithstanding the strongly-expressed dicta of Lord Brougham. Many other doubtful points, however, are beginning to arise upon the construction of the new Acts, and prove that Lord Eldon's motto, "Sat cito si sat bene," might have been remembered with advantage by some of his successors. From cases that have come within our knowledge, it seems that Mr. Justice Maule, who has been sitting at Chambers, is inclined to interpret the new Acts favourably, in the utmost extent, to the prisoner and debtor.

The members of the Profession are looking forward with great interest to the important legal points which are to be decided by the House of Lords in O'Connell's case. The judgment is to be given on Monday next. The opinions of the judges have most properly not been allowed to transpire, notwithstanding the somewhat confident assertions that have appeared in newspaper paragraphs.

ATTORNEYS' LIEN.

No. II.

Having discussed in our former article the general lien possessed by attorneys, we shall now proceed to shew how they can avail themselves of it as a defence, and in what manner the right may be lost.

Lien, how pleaded.—In Owen v. Knight (4 B. N. C. 54) the Court of Common Pleas decided that, under the plea of "not possessed," lien might be given in evidence as denying the plaintiff's right to the immediate possession of the goods; and in White v. Teal (12 Ad. & Ell. 106) the Court of Queen's Bench, on the same principle, decided the evidence to be inadmissible under "not guilty." These cases are to be treated as authorities, notwithstanding Parke, B. in delivering judgment in Mason v. Farnell hinted that not guilty was the proper plea. But if the owner of the deeds bring an action of detinue, the course to be pursued is not so clear. Under "non detinet" it is settled only the fact of the detainer would be put in issue. (Richardson v. Frankum, 8 D. P. C. 346; 6 M. & W. 420.) But as to the effect of "not possessed," the Courts of Queen's Bench and Exchequer differ. In Lane v. Tewson (12 Ad. & Ell. 116 n.) the former, upon the analogy between this action and trover, allowed a lien to be given in evidence under not possessed; but in the recent case of Mason v. Farnell (2 Law T. 424; 1 D. & L. 576), the Court of Exchequer refused to follow that decision, and said that it must be the subject of a special plea. In the principal case the defence sought to be established under "not possessed" was, that the plaintiff and defendant were tenants in common of the deeds. The cases in trover were cited for the defendant, but the Court distinguished between the two forms of action. In trover the plaintiff must have a right of property and a right to the immediate possession, and the existence of a lien negatives this latter right; but it is not necessary in detinue that he should have the entire property in the goods, for a plaintiff entitled to a share of a chattel may maintain the action. (Broadbent v. Ledward, 11 Ad. & Ell. 209.) Not possessed, therefore, they considered puts in issue only the property of the plaintiff, i. e. such a property as will enable him to maintain the action. It will, therefore, be always safer in detinue to plead the lien specially, even in the Queen's Bench, as the cases relied upon in Mason v. Farnell do not seem to have been fully brought before that Court.
